Mr. BEAMAN. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee of the Whole rose on last Saturday I was about to refer to the importance of the copper mines of this country, and especially those in the Lake Superior region. I desire now to call the attention of the committee to some facts in reference to the importance of this interest. It seems to me, if gentlemen will give a little attention to the condition of these mines and the facts in reference to them, there will be no doubt in the minds of any that this amendment ought not to prevail.

Now, sir, there has been invested in the copper region of Lake Superior over thirty million dollars. There is now a population of over fifty thousand people there, sustained by this mining interest. There are eighteen steamers constantly employed in carrying freight growing out of this interest. This vast amount of capital, this great industrial interest I have referred to, is limited simply to the Lake Superior region, having no reference to the vast interests in California and in other parts of the country.

The gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HUBBARD,] who has moved this amendment, professes he is in favor of protection. He says if this amendment prevails there will still be a duty of five per cent. ad valorem upon copper ore; and he seems desirous of impressing on the minds of the committee that this is sufficient protection. If gentlemen will look into the question they will find that instead of being sufficient protection it is no protection at all.

This mining interest previous to the breaking out of the war asked for no protection and received no protection; and it will ask no protection to-day if you will put it in the condition in which it was before the war. The truth is, that instead of offering protection to this mining interest it has been discriminated against. What are the facts? It has been estimated that every one hundred pounds of copper, under the internal revenue tax bill, now pays $4 65. Under the internal revenue bill lately passed, that is reduced to $3 65 upon every hundred pounds of copper ore. The increased cost has been estimated to amount to fifty per cent. over what it was previous to the breaking out of the war because of the increased price of labor in consequence of the internal revenue tax imposed upon everything necessary to feed and clothe the miners.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. I renew the amendment. Up to 1861 copper ore as raw material was imported entirely free of duty. Under the operation of that system the business of mining and smelting copper ores in the eastern States and California was developed to a very considerable extent. The ore was obtained principally from the States of Vermont, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and California. Large smelting establishments, located principally with a view to facilities for obtaining coal and transportation, were established at various points on the Atlantic coast. In order to show the extent to which this smelting business had advanced, I will refer to a very large establishment located in the neighborhood of Baltimore, employing an amount of capital of over $1,000,000, requiring for the transportation of its products over seventy vessels, consuming over thirty-five thousand tons of coal per annum, and capable of producing of pure copper thirty thousand pounds a day or over five thousand tons per annum. Upon that work alone our Government was very largely dependent during the war for its supply of copper for percussion caps, cannon, and vessels.

For the successful manipulation of the native ores there is required a considerable infusion of foreign ore, principally imported from South America—some from Cuba, but mainly from Chili. The process of smelting copper is a complicated and expensive one without that infusion; with it the process is materially shortened and the expense very considerably reduced. Indeed, without the employment of this foreign material, the native ores cannot be advantageously smelted. Consequently the recent tariff upon foreign ores which was required as an indispensable ingredient, so far from being a protection to domestic production or to home industry, is in point of fact a discouragement to both. Under the operation of the five per cent. ad valorem tariff now imposed the works to which I have referred, located in the neighborhood of Baltimore, have been prosecuted to a very considerable disadvantage, at a loss, as I am informed, during the last year, of over $250,000.

It is now proposed to triple the weight now loading down this interest by raising the duty on ores from five to fifteen per cent. This sudden and enormous increase cannot but be disastrous not only to the copper-smelting, but the copper-mining interests of all the States named. This is not protection, but virtual prohibition on the further development of American mines excepting those on Lake Superior. These mines yielding native copper require no flux of foreign carbonate ores, but are refined by a much simpler and less expensive process. The present duty of five per cent., onerous to the general copper-smelting interest of the country, may be tolerated as a protection to the Michigan miners. The inordinate increase proposed by the committee may be well calculated to swell the profits of those operating in that particular section.

Mr. PHELPS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DRIGGS. I move to amend the paragraph in relation to copper ore by striking out "fifteen per cent." and inserting "twenty per cent."

Mr. Chairman, on the 22d of June last I offered the following resolution from the Committee on Mines and Mining:

"Resolved, That this committee respectfully recommend to the Committee of Ways and Means the necessity which, in their opinion, exists for an increased duty on foreign copper, with a view to securing to the home production fair and just protection, at least equal to that which was afforded previous to the war of the rebellion; and that in their opinion a duty of at least six cents per pound should be imposed upon foreign ingot copper, and not less than three cents per pound on the pure copper in foreign ores."

Thirty million dollars are invested in my district in copper mining. The business supports a population of nearly fifty thousand people. The fifteen per cent. in the bill does not more than counteract the effect of the indirect taxes in producing the article. It is not better than free trade would be without internal taxation. The duty proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means is too low. It ought to be at least twenty per cent. This would be no injustice to the smelters, because the duty on the copper after it is smelted much more than covers the whole duty on the ore.

The manufacturers of copper cannot complain, because they are protected enough to cover the duty on the copper and the labor they employ in addition. To strike off the duty on ore is to rob the poor miners of the necessities of life and the Government of so much revenue, and all to swell the dividends of the capital invested in working up the ores.

If this policy be adopted it will depopulate the Lake Superior district, and by destroying one of the largest sources of supply it will injure the consumers of copper, while it destroys the producers. It can be demonstrated that the losses in the Lake Superior region in a single year, owing mainly to the legislation of Congress, have been more than all the capital invested in smelting foreign copper ores in the United States.

I appeal to this House to consider the thirty millions of capital invested in mining copper on Lake Superior, to consider the six large smelting-works located in the West; three on the lake shore, one at Detroit, one at Cleveland, and one at Pittsburgh, all smelting domestic copper. For all these and the toiling thousands employed by them, including fifty thousand of my own constituents, whose very bread is involved, as against the avaricious demands of the three establishments on the whole Atlantic coast that smelt foreign ore. To strike off the duty would be an outrage. I ask that the duties on foreign copper ores be raised to twenty per cent. ad valorem. I ask it as an act of simple justice to the miners and the capital invested, and as indispensable to continued and successful mining.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I trust when the subject of coal comes up here my friend from Maryland [Mr. PHELPS] will reproduce his present argument upon raw material. The rate fixed in the bill on copper ore was fixed with considerable care upon information received by the Committee of Ways and Means from all parties. It is true that there ought to be some duty fixed upon copper ore, or it might be liable to the same misfortune that would happen in the case of lead ore admitted without duty. If we should impose a high duty on lead and then let lead ore come in free, which does not shrink more than twenty-five per cent. by smelting, our duty on lead would be entirely nugatory. And now, if we place a duty of four or five cents upon copper and allow copper ore to come in free, of course copper will be brought in in the shape of ore, for a large amount of the cost of copper is in the labor expended in producing the ore. Fifteen per cent., however, in my judgment, is all that should be put upon copper ore. I am not quite certain that it ought to be more than twelve, but certainly fifteen per cent. is enough. If the duty was raised to six cents a pound on copper, then it would be quite proper to raise the duty on copper ore to something like twenty per cent.; but while it remains as we have it, fifteen per cent. is just about an equal rate. I hope, therefore, that the amendments will not prevail on either side, whether to increase or diminish the rate proposed in the bill. Now, I think all sides have been heard on this question, and I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the subject of copper.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no, we will take the vote now.

Mr. DRIGGS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. If it is understood that the vote will be taken now I withdraw my motion.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "five." I am not here in the interests of any individual or any corporation, but to do the greatest good to the whole country. I am in favor of developing the great internal resources of the country, whether it be manufacturing or producing, and for that purpose to protect by an adequate and just tariff both the manufacturer and the producer. But while I am in favor of this, I am opposed to any tariff that will protect one interest to the detriment of another; that will discriminate in favor of the manufacturer and against the producer, or that will protect the manufacturing interests of Massachusetts and give no protection to the manufacturing and mining interest of Maryland. My colleague, [Mr. PHELPS,] who has had this special section in his charge, has already given the reasons why we desire some protection for the copper-manufacturers of our State.

The copper manufacture of Maryland is no mean or insignificant interest. It employs many hundreds of thousands of dollars in its capital, gives work to hundreds of men, and expends thousands of tons of coal and copper in carrying on the business. This enterprise was started when there was no duty on copper, and it has grown steadily under adverse circumstances, until to-day it stands second to the iron interests of my State in so far as manufacturing is concerned. The present tariff puts a duty of five per cent. ad valorem on foreign copper. * This was enough, and these infant manufactures have struggled hard to meet the high wages they are obliged to pay and to compete with the foreign manufacturer of copper. If you put an additional tariff of ten per cent. it will have the tendency not only seriously to cripple, but it is feared to suspend the manufacture altogether. The consequence will be that not one tenth the amount of native ore now consumed will hereafter be required, and consequently the producer of the metal will suffer in proportion. As has already been stated, it is absolutely necessary to use a certain percentage of the foreign ore in order properly to smelt the native ore. The native ore cannot be smelted either as successfully or as profitably as when used in conjunction with foreign ore, owing to the fact that the foreign ore contains more of the oxide. Now, what we ask for is no discrimination against Lake Superior ore. In this connection I desire to read some extracts from a printed circular signed by J. C. Hoadley, (who appears to have examined into the matter,) showing the amount of copper used in this country, and some valuable suggestions in relation to the tariff on copper:

BALTIMORE, March 26, 1866.

Sir: I avail myself of your permission to state as concisely as possible my views of the legislation required to secure and promote the interests of the whole copper trade, including mining, smelting, manufacturing, and reworking in the arts.

1. The supply of copper from the native copper and native ores has hitherto been less than the consumption in the arts, and the deficit has been made up partly by the importation of refined copper, but chiefly by the importation of foreign copper ores.

2. The production of copper from our own mines is now sufficient to supply the American market with all it can absorb; but on account of the necessity of mixing copper ores of various kinds for profitable smelting, part of the ores of California are exported to England, and their place is supplied by about an equal quantity from Chili.

3. The preceding facts are shown in a more exact form in the subjoined statement:

Annual consumption of copper in the United States, usually estimated at..... 25,000,000 lbs.

Amount of product of the mines of the Lake Superior region, twelve or fifteen million pounds, say..... 12,000,000 lbs.

Product of the mines of California, in fine copper..... 10,000,000

Product of Vermont, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee, estimated at..... 3,000,000

25,000,000 lbs.

Of the product of California there was exported, in fine copper..... 4,000,000 lbs.

Brought to the Atlantic sea-board to be smelted..... 6,000,000

Total, as before..... 10,000,000 lbs.

Ores imported from Chili, in fine copper, about..... 3,600,000 lbs.

From Canada and Cuba, about..... 400,000

Total, equal to export from California, 4,000,000 lbs.

4. The price of fine copper in the markets of the world and in the currency of commerce (gold) is immediately dependent upon the price in England, since that country is the only one in the world where ores are imported and smelted for a profit. Her imports of copper are nearly equal to five times our entire consumption, and the products of her smelting furnaces are probably equal to one half of the production in the round world.

5. While we were importers of refined copper, its price in our market was almost always, and still is, about the cost of importation from England; that is, the price in sterling money reduced to United States currency, plus the import duty, two and a half cents per pound in gold, and the cost of importation, freight, and charges, commissions, insurance, loss of interest, &c., amounting to one cent per pound in coin, the whole amounting to three and a half cents in gold, equal to about four and a half cents in United States currency at the present time.

6. When we become a copper exporting country, the price here will fall to the English price less the cost of exportation to England, equal to one cent in coin, or about one and a quarter cent in United States currency, at present. The difference between the import price and the export price is, therefore, about four and a half cents in gold, equal to, say, five and three quarter cents in currency. As there must be hope of profit to turn the scale, this difference, is in fact, not less than five cents in gold, equal to six and a quarter cents in currency, and about twenty per cent. of the current price of ingot copper.

7. The production of copper in the United States is rapidly increasing; for although some of the Lake Superior mines produce less, or run out altogether, other mines are opened, so that that important interest retains its relative rank, as the source of about one half of our supply of copper; and the rapid development of the mines of California, together with the aggregate results of new mining enterprises in other States, has already brought our supply up to our consumption, and will soon carry it beyond, unless our consumption largely increases.

8. The consumption of copper depends mainly on price. For so many purposes other metals, such as sheet iron, tinned iron, galvanized iron, zinc, and lead may be substituted where copper is preferred, that with copper a high price means small consumption.

9. Almost the whole quantity consumed, both as sheet copper and yellow metal, in the sheathing of ships, will be transferred from American to English manufacturers unless the revenue laws be changed so as to relieve those articles of all burdensome taxation, by a drawback equal to the entire enhancement of the price of said articles by import duties and excise taxes, since ship-owners can as well sheathe their ships in one port as in another. This is about one third of our whole annual consumption. * * *

11. To compensate the mining and smelting interest for this high excise tax there must of course be a corresponding import duty on refined copper; and such duty should be sufficient to compensate them for the whole burden of taxes on fuel, &c.

12. In view of the rapid approach of the time when we shall have to seek a market abroad for our copper, I do not regard a duty, even a heavy duty, on copper in pigs, bars, and ingots as a real burden upon the manufacturer and consumer. While, in my judgment, the present duty of two and a half cents per pound in gold is about right, I can see no good objection to raising it to five cents, if the Lake Superior mining interest deem it important for their protection; and if the excise tax on their products be increased the import duty should clearly be increased in proportion.

13. But in any event the small quantity of foreign ores required to mix with our native ores (and no other foreign ores can be imported) should be admitted free, or with only a nominal duty.

14. If, in accordance with the views of the Lake Superior mining interest, the import duty on refined copper be increased, then the drawback on copper and yellow metal sheathing should be proportionately increased, since the consumers of these articles are not amenable to import duties, and any tax on the materials or manufacture merely drives the business out of the country.

Begging pardon for the crudeness and diffuseness with which these views are presented, but with an earnest desire that the importance of the views themselves should be fully realized,

I remain, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

J. C. HOADLEY,

Agent of the New Bedford Copper Company.

Hon. DANIEL A. WELLS,

Chairman of the United States Revenue Commission.

It will be seen from this that it is recommended by this gentleman that the small quantity of foreign ore required for mixing with our native ore should be admitted free. I believe, Mr. Chairman, the effect of this will be not only to build up a great manufacturing copper interest in the country, but necessarily to use ten times the amount of native copper, and thus to develop that interest. You cannot expect to find a market for your copper in foreign countries, and it appears to me the best way to develop that interest is to foster and increase your copper manufactures. If you close your manufactures less copper will be used and less mined, and, as is shown in the paper I have read, the use of foreign copper in the smelting of our native ore is not disadvantageous to the increased use of the latter.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate upon this section.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House resumes the consideration of the special order, the tariff bill, all debate on the pending section shall be terminated in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, the pending question being upon Mr. J. L. THOMAS's amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no doubt but what the copper interest of this country is languishing for the want of labor at such prices as will enable the miners to conduct their business without loss; but I believe that when this bill shall have passed, those who are engaged in using foreign copper ore will be as well off as they have been heretofore. For it will be noticed by the committee that we have increased the rate on copper ingots, pigs, and bars two and a half cents per pound, so that the rate, if this bill passes, will be, on copper five cents per pound, and on copper ore the rate is raised from five to fifteen per cent. ad valorem. It will not alter the relative position very much, and I hope therefore that no change in the bill will be allowed.

Mr. HIGBY. I have understood from the gentleman from Maryland last on the floor, [Mr. J. L. THOMAS,] that those whom he represents are ready, on a question of tariff, to sustain Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, one manufacturing cloth and the other iron. I hope the gentleman will bear in mind that while Pennsylvania manufactures iron she uses the raw material produced in the State; that while Massachusetts and other New England States manufacture cloth they manufacture it from wool raised in those States; and that there is a tariff on those various articles of raw material. I will say to gentlemen—for I have heard no complaint that they cannot get enough of the native ore—that my own State is largely interested in this question of copper ore. I believe that the delegation from California is steadily voting for a tariff; yet most of the manufactured articles that we use in that State come from the eastern States. We are ready to sustain the establishments of those States, because we think it for the interest of the country to do so. We shall ask in return that the Representatives of those States will aid us in procuring a suitable tariff upon the copper ore, in which we are largely interested. We guaranty that we can supply all those establishments with the raw material for their manufactures of copper. We desire that the raw material which we produce shall be protected just as the raw materials of iron and wool are protected.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. J. L. THOMAS, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 23, noes 67.

The Clerk read as follows:

On copper in pigs, ingots, or bars, five cents per pound; on copper sheathing for vessels, and yellow metal sheathing, six cents per pound; on old copper, three cents per pound; on copper in plates, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, and all other manufactures of copper, or of which copper shall be a component material of chief value, not otherwise herein provided for, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I am authorized by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment: after the word "plates," in the paragraph just read, insert "sheets."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I am also authorized by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to amend by inserting in the last line of the paragraph just read, after the word "forty," the word "five," so that the duty shall be forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph which has just been read the following:

On copper and brass wire-cloth of a texture finer than thirty-six wires to the running inch, fifty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROGERS] is right for once. [Laughter.] I do not know but that fifty per cent. would be high enough. However, I raise no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would suggest an amendment, to add this proviso to the pending paragraph:

Provided, That copperheads shall be admitted free of duty as heretofore.

[Laughter.]

Mr. RADFORD. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out the word "six," in line two hundred and twenty-eight, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "three and a half," so that the clause will read, "on copper sheathing for vessels, and yellow metal sheathing, three and a half cents per pound." My reason for offering this amendment is that, at the present time the tariff on this article of sheathing is so high that in most cases our large vessels built in this country go to Europe for the purpose of being coppered, saving thereby a very large expense. This has been the case with the duty at three and a half cents. The Committee of Ways and Means now propose to increase the duty to six cents. I assure members that if they adopt this proposition they will make a great mistake. Our vessels will still go to Europe, and in increased number, for the purpose of being coppered.

Mr. MORRILL. As we have increased the duty on the raw material of copper to five cents per pound, it would be manifestly improper that copper sheathing should be admitted at a lower rate. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DEMING. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to go back and make a correction in the amendment moved on Saturday by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMING. I move to strike out "drawers" and insert "chest-handles;" so that it will read, "on chest, drawer, till, cupboard, and wardrobe locks of every description, and on door and shutter bolts, and wrought-iron chest-handles, twelve cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, forty-five per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On brass in pigs and bars, thirty per cent. ad valorem; on brass in plates, sheets, or wire, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on brass, old and only fit to be remanufactured, fifteen per cent. ad valorem; on all manufactures or articles of brass, or of which brass shall be a component material of chief value, not otherwise herein provided for, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes before we adjourned, Saturday, I made a motion to amend in the two hundred and sixth and two hundred and seventh lines, but by some misapprehension or inadvertence it was supposed that I had made a motion to go back to these lines. I now ask to amend by striking out of these lines "fifty per cent." and inserting "sixty per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read, "on all harness and saddlery hardware, sixty per cent. ad valorem."

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman, this increase is asked for by most of the manufacturers of saddlery hardware, who find it difficult, with the high premium on gold and the legitimately advanced rate of wages, to compete with the foreign manufacturer. The capital invested amounts to many millions of dollars in the States of New Jersey, New York, and Connecticut; and in the State of Pennsylvania it is also an important interest. The factories in many places are quiet, the operatives idle, and the effect of the present comparatively low rate of duty is very disastrous. I am informed that foreign goods of this kind are now sold at much less than those of American make, that on many articles of saddlery hardware the prices of the foreign are from twenty to thirty per cent. less than the American. This should not be so, and we should seek to keep down the competition by which our home-made goods are so much depressed. An increase of ten per cent. over the amount recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means is all that would be required to put the factories again at work and to keep employed hundreds who are now waiting anxiously the action of Congress. I hope the chairman of the committee [Mr. MORRILL] will not oppose this amendment, but will agree with me that it should be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I am sorry to differ from my honorable friend from Philadelphia, but it is my belief that the increase recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means is ample. Harness and saddlery hardware requires less protection than almost any other article of hardware, for the reason that that made by the American manufacturers is most sought after and will be taken even when the foreign article is offered at a less price. The quality of American goods is not only better but the style is far more beautiful. Take the article of buckles. The American manufacturers have more ingenuity in their manufacture than the foreign manufacturers. The latter make one at a time while the Americans turn out a dozen at once.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask why it is that the manufacturers of saddles and harness use a greater proportion of American hardware than of foreign hardware.

Mr. O'NEILL. With the consent of the committee I will answer the gentleman's question. I would be glad to go into a full discussion of the matter, and am satisfied I could show the injustice of the present proceeding. Conceding all that the gentleman says, that the American manufacturers of harness and saddlery use American hardware, I tell him that under the unjust policy pursued in this bill toward the manufacturers of that hardware the American manufacturers will be undersold in our own markets by the British article, and hereafter instead of American harness and saddlery hardware being used in this country we will have that imported from foreign countries in favor of which the present duty undoubtedly discriminates.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On lead in pigs or bars, three cents per pound.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out "three" and insert "two." From the information that I have, I am inclined to think that the duty proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means is too high. The duty now is two cents per pound, and I doubt very much whether the Committee of Ways and Means have carried out their own intention in the provisions they have reported in relation to lead.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am somewhat surprised at the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE.] I have understood the argument of those in favor of this bill to be that the higher the duty placed upon a given article introduced into this country the cheaper will the article be furnished to the consumer.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I would ask the gentleman where he got that idea.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I obtained part of the idea from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MOORHEAD.]

Mr. MOORHEAD. I never advocated any such idea.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I certainly understood the gentleman the other day to say that certain articles that had had a high duty imposed upon them had decreased in price.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I demonstrated that while the duty on steel had been regularly advanced, steel manufactures were now furnished more cheaply to the consumer than for twenty years before.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is holding out the idea that the greater the duty the cheaper the article. Now, if the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] had been to increase the duty one per cent., instead of decreasing it, I could have understood its appropriateness to the argument of the friends of this bill.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I would say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] that I am certainly in favor of imposing so much duty as may be necessary to give fair protection to all our manufactures. But I am not in favor of imposing upon any article of raw material a duty so excessive as to be a great deal more than what is necessary for revenue and protection. I might reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] by asking him whether he is prepared to put so large a duty upon the raw material as shall render necessary a corresponding duty on the manufactured article, in both cases being more than is necessary for revenue and protection, and therefore making the cost of the manufactured article greater to the consumer than is necessary.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If it will have the result which has been presented to this House as the one necessarily following that action, I should be in favor of it. Here is my friend from Missouri, [Mr. HOGAN], a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, representing a district of that State where a great deal of lead is produced. My colleague near me, [Mr. ALLISON], from my own State, represents a district where a great deal of lead is produced. And so it is with the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. COBB]. I suppose that as a matter of course they will be opposed to this amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE], because they are in favor of furnishing lead to the people of this country at a cheaper rate than they now do; that is, they will oppose lessening the duty so as to cheapen the cost of the manufactured.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "two and a half" and inserting "four," so as to make the duty four cents a pound. I confess that I am very considerably surprised, as well as the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON], at the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] to reduce the proposed duty on lead. I have the honor to represent perhaps the largest lead-producing district in the United States; at least we think so there. And hence my attention has been called somewhat particularly to this subject. And I was somewhat disappointed and surprised at the report of the committee in doubling the duty upon copper as fixed by the tariff bill of 1864, and in raising the duty on lead only to the extent they did.

Sir, the production of lead in this country has fallen off immensely within the last fifteen or twenty years. The lead which was supplied to the market up to within fifteen or twenty years ago, was produced from surface diggings, produced easily, mined without the appliances of machinery, and at a very trifling cost. But now, throughout the northwestern lead-mining district, represented by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON], the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], and myself, the surface mines have been exhausted. And the production has fallen off until I think I speak within bounds when I say that we do not now produce more than twenty per cent. of the amount that we produced twenty years ago, and the cost to those who produce it is three times as much as it was before. There is no metal in commerce, with perhaps a single exception, that costs so much to produce it in proportion to the price at which it sells as lead. To the people engaged in its production it does not pay five per cent. upon the capital and labor employed; and its production becomes more difficult day by day and year by year. Now, while the people of my district will sustain—I hope they will at least—a high tariff, so that it be reasonable and equal on the results of the industry of the different parts of the country, I shall be loth to say to them that while I have voted for an increased tariff on manufactured articles, while I have gone with New England in this measure which is called the peculiar measure of New England, while I have turned my back upon the suggestion so often made in my country to leave that favored spot out in the cold, the men from New England have been the first to get up on this floor and oppose the small measure of protection that is offered us.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. HOGAN. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion just yet.

Mr. MORRILL. I will leave time enough for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HOGAN] to be heard after we shall have gone into committee again.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ASSAULT UPON A MEMBER.

Mr. SPALDING. I rise to a privileged question. I am instructed by the select committee on the violation of the privileges of members of this House to submit a report, with accompanying resolutions, which, together with the testimony taken by that committee, I move be laid on the table and printed.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask that the resolutions accompanying the report be read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order. I wish to give notice, and if necessary to reserve the point now, that upon one of the resolutions accompanying this report I shall raise a point of order as to the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. THAYER. I make the point of order that that is not now a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to give notice of a point of order which he proposes to raise when the subject shall be brought before the House for its action.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Let the resolutions be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, for committing an assault upon the person of Hon. J. B. GRINNELL, a Representative from the State of Iowa, for words spoken in debate, has justly forfeited his privileges as a member of this House, and is hereby expelled.

Resolved, That the personal reflections made by Mr. GRINNELL, a Representative from the State of Iowa, in presence of the House, upon the character of Mr. ROUSSEAU, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, were in violation of the rules regulating debate and the privileges of members founded thereon, and merit the disapproval of the House.

Resolved, That Charles T. Pennibaeker, of Kentucky, L. B. Snigsby, of Kentucky, and John S. McGrew, of Ohio, by their presence and participation in a premeditated personal assault between Hon. Mr. ROUSSEAU, of Kentucky, and Hon. Mr. GRINNELL, of Iowa, on account of words spoken in debate, in which the persons if not the lives of members of this House were imperiled, were guilty of a violation of its privileges; and they are hereby ordered to be brought to the bar of this House to answer for their contempt of its privileges.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not desire to delay the House at this time by having this question disposed of at this time. But in relation to the second resolution, I suggest that under Rule 62 of this House, it is too late to raise the question there raised against my colleague, [Mr. GRINNELL.] I do not make the point now for the purpose of bringing up the question for discussion at the present time; but I do not wish to waive my right to raise the point when the report shall come before the House for action.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point to be decided now by the Chair?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No, sir. I only desire to have the point reserved, not to delay the House at the present time, but in order that I may not be precluded from making it at the proper time.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. RAYMOND. I rise to present the report of the minority of the committee. The committee, I may remark, were unanimous upon all but one resolution. The minority report proposes a substitute for the first resolution of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute proposed by the minority of the committee for the first resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU be summoned to the bar of the House and be there publicly reprimanded by the Speaker for a violation of the rights and privileges of the House, of which he was guilty in the personal assault committed by him upon Hon. J. B. GRINNELL for words spoken in debate.

Mr. LE BLOND. I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa that the question he reserves relates to the resolution censuring his colleague, [Mr. GRINNELL,] and is in the nature of an objection to the jurisdiction of the committee. I would suggest to the gentleman that he should make his reservation large enough to apply to the other gentlemen referred to in the resolutions; for it does seem to me that, if this committee have no jurisdiction in the case of his colleague, they have none in the case of the other gentlemen.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. With the permission of the House, I will ask that the rule be read.

Mr. MORRILL. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. J. L. THOMAS] has demanded the reading of the entire report. If he insists on the demand the Clerk must read it.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the report will not be read.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the report be read, I will ask for the reading of the testimony.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I withdraw my demand for the reading of the report.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I call for the reading of the report. We may as well have it read now as at any other time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I shall have to demand the reading of the testimony.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule in regard to the reading of the testimony when that point comes up. The report will be read.

Mr. NIBLACK. I beg to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] is not now in his seat; and I hope that no further proceedings in reference to this matter will be taken in his absence.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I trust that my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] will withdraw his call for the reading of the report, and let us go on with the tariff bill. The report can be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] who has charge of this matter, when he proposes to call up the question for the action of the House.

Mr. SPALDING. Whenever it will suit the convenience of the House after the report shall have been printed.

The Clerk began the reading of the report, but was interrupted by Mr. HALE, who said: I move that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the right to demand that a report upon which he is required to vote shall be read. The only way in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] can accomplish his purpose is, this being Monday, to move a suspension of the rule which entitles a member to demand the reading of the document.

Mr. HALE. I make that motion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it not too late to make that motion, the reading of the report having been commenced?

The SPEAKER. It is not too late.

Mr. RAYMOND. I suggest that, besides this report, there is a good deal of testimony that ought to be printed and examined before any action shall be taken on this subject. I think the object we all have in view will be better attained by waiving the further consideration of this subject until we can have both reports as well as the testimony printed and laid on our desks.

Mr. HALE. Let me add one word. The controlling reason is that the gentleman from Kentucky is not now in his seat.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to state to the House my object in asking for the reading of the report. It is simply this: that we may hear it read and hear the testimony which has been taken, so that members may reflect upon it to-night and be prepared to-morrow calmly to vote on the subject. I therefore insist on the reading of the report.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I rise to a point of order. I make the point that the Clerk having begun the reading of the report in execution of the order of the House, no member has a right to interrupt it until the reading has been concluded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. It has been the uniform usage to interrupt the reading of a paper when the question has been raised to decide whether the reading should be concluded or not. This being Monday, of course a motion to suspend the rules is in order, and that motion is now pending. The Clerk will read from page 162 of Barclay's Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Where papers are laid before the House or referred to a committee, every member has a right to have them once read at the table before he can be compelled to vote on them; and this applies to the reading of papers on a motion to refer them. And so in regard to any proposition submitted for a vote of the House, but it being a right derived from the rules, he may at any time (when a motion to suspend the rules is in order) be deprived of it by a suspension of the rules, even after the main question is ordered to be put."

The question recurred on Mr. HALE's motion to suspend the rules.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 87, noes 28.

So the rules were suspended and the further reading of the report was also suspended.

The majority and minority reports were then laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 56) granting a pension to Mary C. Hamilton;

An act (S. No. 215) concerning certain lands granted to the State of Nevada;

An act (S. No. 299) granting a pension to Jane E. Miles;

An act (S. No. 314) for the relief of Sarah J. Purcell; and

An act (S. No. 368) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret A. Farran.

TARIFF—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all further debate on the pending paragraphs in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in reference to lead be terminated in five minutes, to give the gentleman from Missouri an opportunity to be heard.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. Is it in order to move to postpone the further consideration of the tariff bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the bill is not before the House, but in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a question of very considerable importance to the House and the country. We are now large importers of lead into this country, and have been during the war, while at the same time we have had the most abundant supply in our own country. We have a more abundant supply in this country than perhaps almost any other country in the world; but we have been unable heretofore to supply ourselves with lead, because of the cheaper rate at which it could be introduced from abroad.

This tariff proposes to raise the duty one cent per pound on pig lead. This is a benefit exclusively to the laborer. The miner only gets the advantage. The price of pig lead regulates the value of the ore. We should not introduce foreign lead and be dependent on it as we have been for the last four years in order to carry on our war. The ore can be produced in this country if the laborer gets sufficient protection in the price of lead. The price of lead now throughout the world is higher than it has been heretofore, but this tariff only proposes advancing the rate of duty on pig lead one cent per pound. I hope the committee will agree to do it. It is a boon given to the miner, and I am opposed to any reduction.

The question being taken upon the amendment to the amendment, to strike out "two and a half" and insert "four," it was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, to strike out "three" and insert "two and a half," the gentleman withdrew it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On lead ore, two and a half cents per pound.

On old scrap lead, fit only to be remanufactured, two cents per pound.

On lead in sheets, pipes, or shot, three and a half cents per pound.

Mr. BEAMAN. I move to insert after the last paragraph the words "on copper, regulus of, twenty per cent. ad valorem."

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed on the subject of lead, and the Chair is therefore of opinion that this amendment is not in order as coming under this head.

Mr. BEAMAN. I would inquire of the chairman of the committee whether "regulus" is covered in any part of this bill.

Mr. MORRILL. It is not; and I suppose it is proper that this amendment should be introduced.

Mr. BEAMAN. It is evidently a different article from ore and has received increased value. I think, therefore, that twenty per cent. is the proper rate to put upon it, as it is fifteen per cent. on the ore.

The amendment was agreed to.

At the suggestion of Mr. MOOREHEAD the foregoing amendment was transposed so as to come in after the paragraph in relation to copper ore.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend the paragraph in relation to "lead in sheets, pipes, and shot," by striking out "three and a half cents" and inserting "four and a half cents."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On zinc, spelter, or teutenague, in blocks or pigs, two and a half cents per pound.

Mr. COBB. I move to strike out "two and a half cents" and insert "four cents." The manufacture of metallic zinc is an interest quite in its infancy in this country, and it is one which, in my estimation, requires more protection than any other of the mining or metallic interests of the country. It is one in which labor and capital enter more largely in proportion to its value than any of the other mineral productions of the country. Previous to 1860, so far as my information goes, there was little or none produced in the United States; all was brought from Germany and some other European countries. Now, there are zinc-works in five or six different States—Wisconsin, Illinois, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Massachusetts. But the production of zinc has never yet been remunerative in any of those States. While we produce zinc ore in greatest abundance and of the very best quality, yet we have never been able to manufacture it to advantage, in consequence of the intricate and complicated character of the machinery and processes by which the zinc is separated from the ore. It is not smelted like other ores, but is produced by a system of distillation or sublimation, which requires extensive and costly patented machinery and processes. I have some statistics here which if the time allowed I would like to read.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It will be necessary to go through the bill and make several other alterations if it is adopted. The amount we have provided is, I think, sufficient, and ought not to be changed.

Mr. COBB. We can make the other changes without much trouble.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On zinc, spelter, or teutenague in sheets, four cents per pound.

On oxide of zinc, dry or ground in oil, three cents per pound.

On all manufactures of zinc, not herein otherwise provided for, forty per cent. ad valorem.
On candle or cannel coal, and on all bituminous coal mined and imported from any port or place thirty degrees of longitude east of Washington, $1 50 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on all bituminous coal mined and imported from any place not more than thirty degrees of longitude east of Washington, fifty cents per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on anthracite, and all other coal not herein otherwise provided for, $1 50 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on coke and culm of coal, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out from the paragraph just read the words, where they first occur, "thirty degrees of longitude east from Washington," and also the words, "on all bituminous coal mined and imported from any place not more than thirty degrees of longitude east of Washington, fifty cents per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel." The House will remember that early in the present session we had before us a bill which was intended to take the place, so far as this article was concerned, of the expiring reciprocity treaty. And it will be remembered, too, on that occasion that a proposition, having the same object in view I now have, was then submitted by myself, and after the subject was so far discussed as the rules of this House will permit, and upon examination of the bill in detail, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, and a large majority ratified that motion. Under these circumstances I must be permitted to express a little surprise that such a proposition as this, to which I propose to address a few remarks, should have been again submitted to the present Congress. And I must still more express my surprise, with all respect,* that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means did not think proper, in the very elaborate analysis in which he indulged of the entire bill, to turn the attention of the committee to this peculiar anomaly and justify its introduction into such a measure. I can only account for it by the belief that if a few sentences had been interpolated in that speech in vindication of the policy looked to in this provision, there would have been the most palpable, obvious, direct antagonism between those sentences and the entire theory of the speech itself.

The chairman of the committee very ably vindicated the protective policy of the country, and for that he has my most decided thanks. For no man in his public capacity has ever been truer than I to the belief that the Government of the United States has that power, which has sometimes been contested, of protecting domestic industry from injurious foreign competition; nor has any man in his public life been truer than I to practicing up to that precept. What I complain of now is this: that for some occult, sinister purpose in their advisers, the Committee of Ways and Means have permitted themselves to be prevailed upon to incorporate in this bill a provision directly in antagonism with the whole policy for which the chairman himself contends with such distinguished zeal and ability. Upon what is the policy of protection founded? In what idea? That it is wise foresight in the Government to levy duties upon such products of industry as may become necessary to our independence as a nation, with a view to the encouragement of capital and labor to embark in such pursuits; that in the event of a contingency that often happens in this condition of civilization, namely, war, we may be proudly independent of every nation on the globe, having within our jurisdiction all the means of self-preservation and self-protection, and of subduing the enemy with whom we may come in conflict.

That policy was inaugurated fifty years ago. It has been adhered continuously to ever since; it has never been departed from. And, sir, I know not an instance in the history of the Government—and I have watched its progress for forty years of my life with earnestness—I know not an instance where such enormous protection, ay, such prohibitory protection, has been incorporated in a tariff bill as that which is spread all over the face of this measure, until you come to the very item that I now propose to rectify in this regard. I need not point to instances of these high duties. Gentlemen have all read this bill; duties from one hundred to one hundred and fifty per cent. on iron, and on woolen and cotton cloths. Very few items that are largely manufactured in those sections of the country from whence a majority of this committee come are to be found that have not a duty of over fifty per cent. ad valorem.

I do not complain of their policy. I desire to move in that column, for I am one of those who believe that whatever might have been originally the wisdom, patriotism, and propriety of embarking in this system of protection, we have waded in so far that it would be harder to return now than go on. And if gentlemen have had speculative opinions about the wisdom of such a policy, I hold that the experience of this country during the late war, that the logic of facts and events, must eradicate every doubt in an American mind that such policy was wise and patriotic and indispensable to this Government. We have been able to command the means for prosecuting the war in our own jurisdiction, when all the crowned heads of Europe, with perhaps a single exception, were against us during the late conflict. And but for the existence of our domestic manufactures is it not easy to be seen that our attempt to vindicate the authority of the Government must have been a signal failure?

Now, why is the coal interest, a domestic industry to which I have referred, neglected in this bill? It is not allowed under the proposed tariff even a revenue duty. This bill proposes to impose a duty of $1 50 per ton upon coal that has to cross the ocean. But they have very adroitly incorporated novelties in this bill such as I think are not to be found in any other tariff law that has ever been upon our statute-books. They have very adroitly run a certain line, and you must have some geographical knowledge to know for what special purpose that line was established. They have said that coal brought here from this side of a certain line of longitude shall pay a duty of only fifty cents a ton. Why not say in plain words, just what that means, that coal brought from the coal mines of Nova Scotia, owned in part by speculators of the United States, shall come in at a duty of fifty cents per ton, at a duty less than we impose now for revenues? I say that is not even a revenue duty. Let gentlemen look at the tariff of 1864 which we passed. In that tariff, in almost every instance, the duties for protection were not less than forty per cent. ad valorem. Duties for revenue in the same tariff are high. The duties in that bill are from three to fifteen cents per pound on sugar; five cents per pound upon coffee, &c. Those duties, levied chiefly with a view to revenue, not one of them was so small an ad valorem duty as this which is proposed on coal imported from the coal mines of Nova Scotia.

I have taken pains to inform myself before I undertake to speak confidently upon this subject. I have taken the pains to ascertain the market value of a ton of this Nova Scotia coal at the custom-houses where it is delivered. And I say that this proposed tariff does not impose a duty of more than ten per cent. ad valorem on that value. And let gentlemen look over this tariff and find a similar duty levied upon many articles even for revenue alone. Why is this? Why not speak out before Congress that which we speak privately? At the time this matter was discussed before, I had read at the Clerk's table an extract from a Nova Scotia newspaper, which was published in our debates, going to show that in the disturbed state of the coal interests in this country, of which I shall presently speak so far as I am personally informed, a number of capitalists in the North, in Boston and New York, had invested their money in these Nova Scotia coal mines, having obtained leases upon the acre. I had also read by the Clerk in another paper a report of a commission appointed in Nova Scotia to examine into the condition and progress of the coal mining in that Province, going to show that these capitalists had divided fifty per cent., one hundred per cent., even one hundred and fifty-five per cent., upon their investments.

That state of affairs was produced by the disturbances of the late war. I need not dwell much on that. We all know very well that the great lines of communication between the bituminous coal-fields of West Virginia and of Alleghany, Maryland, and the sea-board, both by railroad and canal, were almost entirely interrupted by the operations of the enemy. A similar state of things prevailed in the bituminous coal-fields of Pennsylvania, not from the same cause, but from the fact that a large number of the laboring population engaged in mining volunteered to go to the war.

Without looking to the diminution of the quantity brought in from the coal-fields of Pennsylvania, I can simply state that from the coal-fields in Alleghany, Maryland, the transportation on the Chesapeake and Ohio canal was reduced from three hundred thousand tons to ninety-four thousand tons per annum. The transportation since the war has again run up to three hundred and forty-six thousand tons. What was the consequence of this state of affairs? Those gentlemen who speculated in the coal mines of Nova Scotia put up the coal to twelve dollars a ton in the market, though there was nothing to prevent them selling after the war at the same price as before the war. Yet, sir, they place the price of coal at twelve dollars a ton; they could do it safely in the absence of competition. We are now engaged in a system of legislation, attempting to pass a law through Congress that will perpetuate that state of affairs and give to those lessees of Nova Scotia coal lands an opportunity to make enormous profits at the expense of a large body of our own manufacturers and to the utter ruin and annihilation of a large interest in Maryland, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, of which I shall presently speak.

Mr. Chairman, I undertake to predict, although no prophet is required to foresee the effect, that if you pass this bill without the amendment I propose it will be almost an interdict of coal transportation on the Chesapeake and Ohio canal and the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, while it will insure the enormous profit of from forty to fifty per cent. upon the capital invested in the Nova Scotia mines.

What is my proposition? I simply propose to strike out the lines from this bill intended to secure advantages to dealers in Nova Scotia coal and to provide, so far as the importation of that coal is concerned, for the collection of the duty which is imposed by the bill upon coal coming across the ocean. If my amendment be adopted this clause of the bill will read:

On candle or cannel coal, and on all bituminous coal mined and imported from any port or place, $1 50 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on anthracite, and all other coal not herein otherwise provided for, $1 50 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on coke and culm of coal, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

I ask that all foreign bituminous coal shall be put upon the same basis. I am at a loss to conceive how we can, with any compatibility, acting in accordance with the received opinion of the objects and purposes of a tariff law for revenue or protection, adopt any other measure. Now, first, as to the effect upon the revenue if the bill be passed as now reported. Seven hundred thousand tons of bituminous coal was brought into the country in 1865. Estimating that at $1 50 per ton, it would produce for us a revenue of $1,050,000. Estimating it at fifty cents per ton, it would produce a revenue of $350,000, making a loss to the public Treasury of $700,000 a year. I am not about to maintain that the passage forthwith of this bill for the benefit of the holders of these coal lands in Nova Scotia will operate to the exclusion immediately from market of the products of the coal mines of this country. I am not about to maintain that a duty of $1 50 per ton upon all coal from Liverpool will exclude that coal also; neither am I about to maintain that the coal operators of Pennsylvania and Maryland and Virginia cannot stagger along for some time under the operation of this bill; but I do maintain that the policy set forth in this bill looks to the exclusion of our domestic bituminous coal from market altogether. It contemplates the exclusion of the coal from Liverpool also; and it will in time, if persisted in, have the inevitable effect of annihilating the coal interest of Pennsylvania and Maryland. If this policy be pursued, instead of having only seven hundred thousand tons of coal from Nova Scotia we will have three million tons annually in place of that amount mined and sent to market from our own coal-fields.

I am notified by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that my time has nearly expired.

Mr. MORRILL. I only desire to notify the gentleman from Maryland that the time he asked for has expired.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I will only state—and I hope this will not be counted out of my time—that when this bill was introduced I abstained from occupying the hour to which I was entitled, preferring to submit my remarks when the item of coal was immediately before the House. Now that we are on the subject of coal I hope I will be indulged in making the remarks which I could have made in the general discussion.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has six minutes of his time left. It cannot be extended as we are acting under the orders of the House.

Mr. MARSTON. I ask that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] shall be allowed what time he desires, if it be a full hour even.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that by general consent in the House the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] was allowed twenty or thirty minutes on this question. We are now acting under order of the House, and the committee have no power to extend the time allowed by order of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. So far as I am concerned I wish the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] to have all the time he wishes. Still, I know the committee are acting under order of the House.

Mr. F. THOMAS. As we are to travel somewhat by rule in Committee of the Whole, I move that the committee rise with a view that the House take action upon this question. And I would suggest, too, that it is very near the time when ordinarily we adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to submit a motion now to give the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] as much additional time upon this subject, when its consideration shall again be resumed in committee, as he may desire, be that what it may.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I think a half or three quarters of an hour will be enough. I think three quarters of an hour.

Mr. MORRILL. I think I can hardly consent to allow the gentleman more than an hour's speech altogether on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Maryland has six minutes remaining of the time heretofore granted by the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the gentleman from Maryland be allowed thirty minutes additional time, upon the subject of coal, when the consideration of the same shall again be resumed in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move to amend that motion so as to make it forty-five minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. We must accord as much time to the one side as to the other; and therefore I hope it will not be over thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The House having ordered all general debate on this bill in Committee of the Whole to be closed, it will require a suspension of the rules to permit any more than debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of the bill of the House No. 718, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] shall be allowed thirty minutes in addition to the time already allowed him by the House; and that I may be allowed ten minutes to reply to him.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I shall object to the rules being suspended to allow any individual members time to speak on this subject, unless I am allowed to come in also.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] so as to allow the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] forty-five minutes additional time.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] is not in order upon a motion to suspend the rules.

The motion to suspend the rules was agreed to, and the order for debate made accordingly.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. F. THOMAS. The House will do me the justice to believe that I am not ambitious to occupy their attention. Nothing but a stern sense of duty induces me to engage in a discussion of this character, for it is one entirely new to my habits of thought and speculation. That it may be seen that the interests involved here are of no ordinary character, I will commence what I now have to say by giving something like an outline of the vast interests involved in the State which I in part represent. I assume that it is hardly necessary for me to state, for the proposition is self-evident, that the coal interests of Maryland, located, as they are, nearly two hundred miles from the sea-board, cannot compete, without any duty at all, with not even a revenue duty, with the coal mines of Nova Scotia, lying within six miles of water transportation. If there be any gentleman present who wants to have a single fact that will be conclusive upon that point, he may discover it in the declaration I make, that every ton of coal transported from the Broad Top tunnels of Pennsylvania or from the Alleghany regions of Maryland to the sea-board costs not less than $1 50 for transportation. And when it reaches the sea-board, or water transportation, either at this city or Baltimore, and I presume it will be about the same at Philadelphia, the freight to New York will be about the same, I think precisely the same, that the freight is upon coal from the mines of Nova Scotia to the same point.

With these facts in mind, gentlemen will see at once that with a duty of only fifty cents per ton on Nova Scotia coal all the coal trade of the New England States and of New York will be beyond the reach of the coal regions of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania. They will see at once that when they consider, too, the cheapness of labor in the Provinces, it will make most certain our exclusion from the coal markets of the States I have named, and we will be confined to the localities of Baltimore and Washington city and Philadelphia.

I call the attention of the House to the fact mentioned heretofore, that $18,000,000 have been spent in making a canal to the Alleghany coal regions of Maryland, and that $12,000,000 have been expended in making a railroad to those regions, and I may interpolate this remark into my argument: drive this coal trade from the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, deprive that road of the income derived from that source, and the entire line of road through to the Ohio river is placed in jeopardy. If the road is to lose or have very seriously diminished this coal freight, the whole cost of working the road must fall upon the freight to and from the western States, or the road must be abandoned. As it is now, and has been during one season of the year, the locomotive power of the road can be used for transporting coal; during the other portion of the year it can be used for other transportation.

And why is this attack made on this interest? Merely to put money in the pockets of a few wealthy individuals in New England and New York. Strip it of all its verbiage, and that is just what it amounts to. This Baltimore and Ohio railroad has cost Maryland and the enterprising capitalists of Baltimore $30,000,000, and for the last thirty years it has not yielded on the average more than two and fifty-three hundredths per cent. per annum. Now, strike down the coal trade on this road, now amounting to about five hundred thousand tons annually, and soon to yield three times that amount, and do not gentlemen perceive that they necessarily put in jeopardy the entire interests of the great valley of the Mississippi, at least so far as they are connected with this great through line, which at least has had the effect of keeping freights down to something like a moderate figure, by competing with the Pennsylvania Central railroad, and with the New York railroads? But apart from this consideration, there are fifty thousand human beings in Pennsylvania and Maryland, and Virginia alone who are dependent upon this coal trade. Let any gentleman, if he pleases, take memoranda from persons about this Hall for the purpose of contradicting my statements; I speak from authority, and no man who is truthful can contradict what I have to say. I say there are fifty thousand human beings who are dependent upon this coal interest.

In addition to the capital invested in this Maryland coal trade of which I have spoken, a railroad has been built some twenty or thirty miles in extent, in the form of a semicircle, diverging at Cumberland, and coming into the Baltimore and Ohio railroad again at Piedmont. There have been embarked in these coal mines at least $30,000,000 of capital, much of which has been sunk, and none of it has yielded liberal returns, because of the difficulties with which these capitalists have had to contend. But give to this bituminous coal interest a reasonable protection, and its friends have no fears of the future. We know that this coal interest is one of the most growing interests that the hand of industry ever brought to light. We know that a few years ago the anthracite coal mines of Pennsylvania produced some five, ten, or fifteen thousand tons annually, while now they send to market some eleven million tons a year. There is nothing to prevent a similar magical effect upon these bituminous coal regions, unless Congress shall violently interpose, and shall give us neither the incidental protection of a revenue tariff, which is all I ask for, nor the protection, direct and positive, such as is given to the iron and manufacturing interests of the whole country.

But, sir, this question concerns not alone the individual operator engaged in these coal mines of Maryland. The faith and the credit of the whole State are embarked in these enterprises. Maryland has invested in them very largely. If you shake the credit of the State by reducing her income as a stockholder in the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, either immediately or prospectively, the State could not, in the market to-morrow, coming in competition with the other States of the Union, and especially with the General Government, raise the means to meet her obligations to her soldiers in the late war.

Mr. Chairman, is it right for the Congress of the United States to strike this violent and fatal blow at this great interest of the State of Maryland, the largest interest in that State? The coal mines of the Alleghany region are worth more than the whole superficies of the State. Is it right to take such a step at this particular time? Maryland has emancipated all her slaves. She has done it voluntarily, without dictation from any quarter. She has in this way deprived herself of seventy-four millions of property that had been resorted to as a subject of taxation. Under the new assessment law recently ordered by our Legislature, these $74,000,000 are to be stricken out of the assessment, which to a small State is a large item.

In addition to this, sir, consider the fact that the western part of Maryland has been laid waste by the armies. A short time ago—for under the plastic hand of industry that region of country is reviving and being rebuilt—a short time since you might have taken, as I did, a position on some elevated spot of that highly cultivated country, and looking eastward and westward, northward and southward, have seen not a living animal within a range of five miles around, not a bunch of hay, not a sheaf or stalk of grain. All had been swept away. How, and for what purpose? To feed our own armies. It has not been paid for. It has been seized and appropriated to the purposes of the Government. To this hour one technical objection after another has been interposed to the claims for reimbursement; and compensation has never been paid from the national Treasury. Millions of dollars worth of property have been appropriated for the use of the Army, and when we apply to the Government of the United States for redress, what is the reply? "The national finances are in an embarrassed condition." Yet now it is proposed to pass here a bill that will deprive us of millions of dollars in the present and in the future, and kill off the rivals of this Nova Scotia coal interest by making almost valueless great highways opened at an enormous expense between the coal-fields of Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, and the sea-board.

Sir, I very well remember—and it occurs to me just at this moment—a remark made by Mr. Webster in remonstrating against the annexation of Texas. He said that every one accustomed to self-examination and self-scrutiny discovers that there is in human nature an occult principle which incapacitates a man for taking a very lively interest in the affairs of a community situated very remote from his own locality. That remark seemed to me at the time to be not a very apt illustration of the penetration, the deep analytic power which distinguished the philosophic mind of that great statesman. I thought then, I think now, that this principle is to be traced to selfishness or self-interest. We are not as much agitated by the account of an earthquake or a conflagration involving the destruction of a whole city remote as San Francisco. We would be still less affected by the intelligence of the burning of Pekin or any large city of Asia. And why? As quick as electricity the thought flashes upon us we are too remote to be involved in the calamity. We feel self-secure, and sympathize less than we would do if the sufferers in the calamity were nearer. It is, I fear, a kindred feeling under which this new principle in our tariff policy may excite less attention than it should do, if our laws for protecting domestic industry are to be framed with too much reference to local interests. If such laws are to be framed in reference to particular latitudes and longitudes and from no other considerations, how long will it be before every just and right-minded man in the country will revolt against the entire system? Let me put a case and ask some of the advocates of this feature of the bill before us how they would act in a certain contingency. Suppose a few citizens of Maryland had crossed the line into Canada during the existence of the reciprocity treaty, and after getting into the jurisdiction of Canada had gone into the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods; and suppose when a tariff bill had been proposed as now a provision had been inserted, instead of a certain fixed duty applicable to all foreign importations, that within a certain line of latitude and longitude on the border of Canada, intended to include the Maryland manufactures, these articles should be brought in at eight per cent. ad valorem, would not the gentlemen who are opposed to my amendment have rebelled against such a proposition?

Suppose during the war a large number of the citizens of the United States had crossed into Canada and engaged extensively in wool-growing while the reciprocity treaty was in force, and this House in legislating concerning the importation of wool, should have under consideration a bill proposing a very small duty on wool from the locality where our citizens had located in Canada, and a reasonable protective duty on wool imported from all other foreign countries, how many wool-growers in the United States would by their Representatives on this floor sustain so ridiculous a measure? Yet I do not perceive wherein in principle these supposititious cases differ from the proposition I propose to amend. I invite the friends of this clause of the bill to run a parallel between the cases put, and to discover any essential or vital difference in principle.

I know it has been said in this debate that it is hard to require those near the coal mines of Nova Scotia to pay a duty for the protection of the coal interest of Pennsylvania and Maryland. Would not the same argument hold good in reference to the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods? I insist that any policy that is inaugurated should be national and not sectional. If you exclude competition from abroad with the cotton and woolen interests of New England, why should you not also exclude unfair competition from abroad with the coal interests of Maryland and Pennsylvania? Why should you exclude competition with one branch of industry and not with another? I tell you, sir, that until statesmen come up upon the high platform of patriotism and cast aside all selfish considerations, until all interests are placed upon an equality before the law, and there shall be no distinction between the protection afforded to one or the other, giving to the people of each locality an equal chance to derive the local values, we will not either legislate justly or for the prosperity of the whole country.

Speaking under the permission of the House, I am reluctant to trespass any further, and thank the House for its indulgence.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOTFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER asked and obtained leave of absence until after to-morrow for Mr. McKEE.

ANNEXATION OF BRITISH AMERICA.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, submitted a bill establishing conditions for the admission of the States of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Canada East, and Canada West, and for the organization of territorial governments; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed House bill No. 555, for the relief of Charles Brewer & Co., with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Mr. COOK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act relative to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved May 11, 1866; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 157, to legalize the occupation of mineral lands and extend the right of preemption thereto, and refer it to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to amend by referring it to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HIGBY. I have no objection to this bill going to three or four different committees if it be necessary. But there is one bill now before that committee that has been there for the last two years. It came before the House during the last session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and the chairman of the committee rose to speak upon it, and the bill was sent to the committee and it has lain there ever since. Now, there is some practical knowledge in the Committee on Mines and Mining in relation to this subject, and we would like to have an opportunity to make a report upon it. I hope, therefore, this will be sent to that committee.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. JULIAN, to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, it was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the votes just taken by which the bills were severally referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I give notice that I shall ask for an evening session to-morrow, in order to close debate on the tariff bill.

And then, on motion of Mr. RADFORD, (at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. DODGE: The petition of a large number of persons, protesting against the increase in the duty on linseed.

By Mr. GRISWOLD: The remonstrance of a large number of citizens of New York, against making Rouse's Point bridge a post road.

By Mr. EGGLESTON: The action of the city council of the city of Cleveland, in the State of Ohio, protesting against consumers of gas being taxed as manufacturers; also protesting against the collection of a revenue tax from passengers on street railroad cars.

By Mr. FARQUHAR: The petition of Ira G. Robertson, late a captain of United States volunteers, praying for authority to the War Department to pay him for six months' services rendered as a captain of Indiana volunteers, in command of the twelfth battery of Michigan volunteers in East Tennessee.

By Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut: The petition of Martin Derwer, for relief.

By Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia: A petition of citizens of Pleasants county, West Virginia, for the establishment of a post route from St. Mary's, in Pleasants county, via Shingleton's Mills, to Hebron, in the same county.

By Mr. UPSON: The report of the adjutant general of Michigan in relation to the treatment of the Michigan cavalry brigade.

Also, a letter from Governor Crapo, of the State of Michigan, to the Secretary of War, in relation to the claim of the officers and men of the first Michigan cavalry.

By Mr. WHALEY: A petition of citizens of Craig, Montgomery, and Roanoke counties, Virginia, to be attached to West Virginia.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 3, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented six petitions of citizens of the United States, praying that the duties on imported articles may be increased so as to afford better protection to American labor; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLARK presented the petition of William B. Lewis, praying for compensation for damages done to his property by United States troops; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 401) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "A resolution respecting the bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 16, 1866, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 120) restoring the allowance of double rations to the Adjutant General and Quartermaster General of the Army; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 226) to repeal section ten of an act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CRESWELL, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the memorial of Phineas Banning, praying for the establishment of a port of entry at Wilmington, California, and also a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the same subject, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. C. S. Wilson, praying for compensation for expenses incurred and services rendered by her in aid of the Union prisoners at Andersonville, Georgia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

CHARLES M. BLAKE.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 117) for the relief of Charles M. Blake, to report it back to the Senate without amendment and with a recommendation that it pass; and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the payment to Charles M. Blake, of the full pay and allowances of a chaplain in the Army for one year from the 18th of May, 1865, to the 17th of May, 1866, being the sum of $1,560, less the amount which may have been paid him by the effect of the joint resolution for his relief, approved June 27, 1866.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. JUDSON BARCLAY.

Mr. SUMNER. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 683) for the relief of J. Judson Barclay, have had the same under consideration and directed me to report it back with a recommendation that it pass. As it is a very brief bill, I think it would save time if it were taken up and acted upon now. I therefore ask that the Senate proceed with its consideration now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be paid to J. Judson Barclay, consul at Cyprus, the sum of $3,000, being the amount paid by him for the expenses of his consulate.

Mr. SUMNER. There is a report from the House explaining the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear it read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of J. Judson Barclay for remuneration for expenses incurred while United States consul at Cyprus, have considered the same and report:

That by the sworn statement of J. Judson Barclay, it appears that as consul at Cyprus, he has paid out of his own funds the sum of $500 each year for six years past for guard-hire, dragoman, and other officials indispensable to his office, which expense in every other consulate in the East is borne by the Government. By a letter received from the Department of State these statements of the petitioner are confirmed, and the justice and equity of the claim are fully approved. The committee therefore report for the relief of J. Judson Barclay the accompanying bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts if this expense was incurred with or without the knowledge, approbation, or consent of the State Department.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no information on that point. There is a letter from the State Department sanctioning it.

Mr. GRIMES. I see, according to the report, that the letter from the State Department admits that such an amount of money has been expended; but the question is, whether it is a safe rule for us to establish here that a consul, wherever he be, may employ dragomen and interpreters and marshals and other officers, and then come here, on the strength of this precedent, and ask for compensation.

Mr. SUMNER. It is very evident that he cannot, whenever he pleases, for the Senator is well aware that these are the incidents of the consulates in the East.

Mr. GRIMES. I am very well aware, by conversation with a consul just from that section of the world last week, that there is no more necessity for a consul at Cyprus than there is for one at the Ichaboe Island, as there is not any necessity for one half the consuls we have now in Europe. I understand we have a consul general at Florence who, for the purpose of aggrandizing his jurisdiction, is establishing little consulates all over Italy; and upon the theory of this bill I suppose that each one of them will be permitted to come here in a little while and ask for some extra compensation.

Mr. SUMNER. With regard to the necessity of our consuls abroad, I think it hardly worth while, on this very small bill, to raise that question. As to the consul general at Florence, it is well known that he serves without any compensation; he has no pay.

Mr. GRIMES. He has no pay except that he compels the consuls who are under him to divide in the shape of fees.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the Senator must be mistaken in that. I have no idea that he receives anything in the way of compensation.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that, as an illustration, such things as straw goods that have heretofore been shipped at the port of Leghorn without such signatures are now signed by this consul general, or else he causes the consul at Leghorn to divide the proceeds with him—all such articles as are made and manufactured in the valley of the Arno, and they are imported principally into the Senator's own city of Boston. I do not know whether it is so or not; but I have been so told by a consul.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no knowledge of those facts; but I know perfectly well that the consul general at Florence receives no compensation.

Mr. GRIMES. No direct compensation.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not think that he would receive any indirect compensation. It was understood when he took the post that he should receive no compensation, and I believe that he has adhered in his own practice to that rule. However, that is a very wide deviation from the question before us. The simple question is, whether money which the consul at Cyprus shows he has expended for the purposes of his consulate shall be defrayed by the Government. The Department of State thinks it ought to be defrayed, the other House think it ought to be defrayed, and the report of the committee is in harmony with that.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It was read the third time.

The question being put on the passage of the bill, there were, on a division—ayes eighteen, noes none; no quorum voting.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. As I shall be constrained to vote against this bill, I propose to say in a single word why I shall vote against it. It seems from the letter of the Department which I hold in my hand, and which I shall presently read, that this consul at Cyprus, where we have no commerce at all—and the necessity of having such an officer is no greater than that of having a fifth wheel to a coach—without any authority from the State Department or from anybody else, employed dragomen and interpreters, and now after a lapse of six years, after having preferred no claim for six years, he comes forward and prefers a claim of $500 a year, or something thereabouts. I will now read the letter of the Department. It is a letter addressed to Hon. WILLIAM A. NEWELL, of the House of Representatives, and dated April 10, 1866:

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 12th ultimo, inclosing a certificate of J. Judson Barclay, Esq., late United States consul at Cyprus, relative to his account for dragomen and guard-hire, and inquiring as to its correctness, I have the honor to inform you that the statements which he makes agree with the funds and vouchers recorded in this Department; and inasmuch as appropriations for interpreters, guards, and other expenses are made for all other consulates in the Turkish dominions, namely, Constantinople, Smyrna, Candia, Alexandria, and Beirut, the Department knows of no reason why a discrimination should be made against Cyprus, and therefore recommend that it be placed, in this respect, upon the same footing as the other consulates in that country.

Herewith please find returned the certificate which accompanies your letter.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Mr. President, when we pass an appropriation bill we make an appropriation to pay for dragomen, interpreters, and other officers at Beirut, at Smyrna, and at Constantinople; but we have never yet made one for Cyprus. The Secretary of State does not say that it is necessary that there should be such officers there; but he says inasmuch as we have hitherto done this in regard to these other places, he knows no reason why we should not do it in relation to this.

But, Mr. President, my great objection to this claim is that it is a stale affair. The man held the place for six years, without preferring, so far as we know, any claim for any remuneration of this kind. And now, after the lapse of that period, he comes in and asks to be paid this back compensation.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 22, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Nesmith, Poland, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Foster, Grimes, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Sherman, Sprague, and Williams—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Guthrie, Henderson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Riddle, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wright, and Yates—19.

So the bill was passed.

PRINTING OF BILLS.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 399) relative to collection districts in North Carolina, and the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes, be printed.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire that an order be made to print Senate bill No. 244, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, as reported from the Committee on Public Lands. By some error it has not been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed under the rule.

Mr. CONNESS. It has not been, and I desire to call attention to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule is that all bills reported from committees are to be printed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancy upon the committee on ventilation occasioned by the absence of Senator Stockton.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 315) for the relief of the inhabitants of towns and villages in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. No. 747) to consolidate the land offices in the several States therein named was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

J. L. PETTIGRU'S LAW LIBRARY.

Mr. HOWE. I move to take up for consideration Senate joint resolution No. 79.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 79) to authorize the purchase, for the Library of Congress, of the law library of James L. Pettigru, of South Carolina.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out, in the fourth line, the words "contract with the heirs" and insert "purchase the law library belonging to the estate," and in the fifth and sixth lines, to strike out the words "transfer of the law library left by the said Pettigru to" and insert "use of;" so as to make the resolution read:

That the Joint Committee on the Library be, and they are hereby authorized, to purchase the law library belonging to the estate of the late James Louis Pettigru for the use of the Library of Congress, and the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the purpose of this resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the resolution further by adding to it the words "to be paid only to the use of the widow of the said Pettigru."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I have hesitated to recall the attention of the Senate to this resolution. The threatening attitude of the Senate on a former occasion led me to feel that the Committee on the Library might have made a mistake in recommending the passage of the resolution; but, however that may be, the resolution is here. It must be adopted or rejected, and the world must know it. I am sure the Senate cannot afford to put such a slight upon the memory of Judge Pettigru as to reject it.

I shall attempt no eulogy upon James L. Pettigru, but I would like, if it were possible, to rescue him from the weight of the encomium bestowed upon him by the Senator from Maine, who said of him that, notwithstanding he had adhered firmly and resolutely to the cause of the Union, after all, he had done only his duty. I admit that Pettigru did no more than his duty. Who was there on the side of the Republic, in that season of darkened counsel, who did do more than his duty? The voice of the first magistrate was heard proclaiming that, although it was a pity the nation should perish, yet the nation was helpless to save itself. The voice of the loyal Democracy was heard exclaiming, "We told you the election of a sectional President would dissolve the Union, and now you see the Union is dissolved." The voice of loyal Kentucky was heard protesting that she would be neutral between the friends and the enemies of the nation. The voice of loyal Maryland was heard beseeching the President to march the troops of the Republic around her metropolis lest the sight of the flag should disturb the peace of the city. The voice of loyal republicanism could not be heard at all; at least, above a whisper. A Senator on this floor, and subject to your control, taunted you that your flag had been fired upon in the harbor of Charleston, and that you dared not resent it. He said, in his place that he owed no allegiance to the Government whose Senator he was and upon whose pay he lived. When you hesitated upon an order to clear the galleries for some indecorous demonstration, he told you, from his place, that you would be lucky if the galleries did not soon turn you out; and when for those offenses it was proposed to expel him the Senate refused.

But while we, panoplied as we were in the authority of the nation, crouched thus under the responsibilities of the hour, there was in the city of Charleston one man, already more than seventy years of age, animated by no partisan love or partisan hate, for he had long ceased to belong to any party; fired by no ambitious hope, for he never had one; a citizen clothed with no authority whatever and armed with no power whatever, stood up alone, with the prerogatives of a traitor State frowning upon him in a thousand forms, and heard threatened admonition thundering at him from five hundred thousand throats, and with judgment undimmed by all the sophistry and spirit unawed by all the terror which surrounded him, and giving utterance to no impulse excited by the fervor of the hour, but speaking freely the convictions of his whole life, he said the national authority must be obeyed, the national Union must be preserved, and the troops of the Republic must replant its ensign throughout all its borders. I say these were the convictions of his lifetime, for he was not truer or braver or more self-sacrificing in 1861 than in 1851. In 1851 he was called upon to demonstrate his love for the Union. The evidence of that I wish to lay before the Senate in the shape of a letter from Millard Fillmore, who was then President of the United States. It is very brief, and it bears this testimony:

"Your favor of the 27th ultimo making inquiries as to the circumstances which led to the appointment of Mr. J. L. Pettigru to the office of district attorney for South Carolina during my administration, came duly to hand; but a domestic affliction which has engrossed my time and thoughts has prevented an earlier reply.

"This event occurred some twelve or thirteen years since, amid the anxious cares of perplexing and pressing official duties, and I cannot be certain that my memory will enable me to give the circumstances correctly, and I regret to find, on looking at my letters and letter-books, that I have but one of Mr. Pettigru's letters to me, (the rest probably on file in the Department,) and a copy of but one of mine to him, of both which I inclose you copies.

"But according to the best of my recollection the district attorney of South Carolina resigned about the time I came into office, and knowing Mr. Pettigru by reputation, I tendered to him the office which he declined, but recommended another man whom I appointed, but he declined or resigned, and after considerable inquiry no man was found who had the moral courage to accept the appointment, so strong was public sentiment against my administration and the Union. I then made a personal appeal to Mr. Pettigru, insisting that I must have a district attorney, for in the then feverish state of the country no one could tell how soon the services of such an officer would be indispensable to the administration of justice and the maintenance of law and order; and I urged him from patriotic motives to waive his objections, and submit to the sacrifice for the good of the country, and as an act of personal friendship to me; and on this appeal he reluctantly consented to take the office, and was appointed and held the office during my administration.

I regarded it then and do now as an act of moral heroism such as very few men are capable of performing, and which justly entitled him to my thanks and the gratitude of his country.

"He was, indeed, a truly noble man, and we shall scarcely look upon his like again."

"Tis for this we give him honor,
That he ranked among the few
Who, amid the reign of error,
Dared sublimely to be true."

In great crises like that which tried Pettigru no man ever does more than his duty. It is only the very highest type of manhood that achieves so much. Jesus, himself, when He went staggering under the weight of His cross to Calvary and died upon it, only did His duty. He did His duty, it is true, as became a God; and Pettigru did his as only the noblest of men can do it.

You have yonder the likeness of John Hancock, chiseled in marble. It cost the nation $6,000. What did John Hancock ever do to earn this distinguished tribute to his merits? When did Hancock ever do more than his duty? Sir, I shall not seek to strip Hancock of his laurels to make a wreath for Pettigru. The Republic has accepted John Hancock for one of its deities. Until the Republic has grown beyond its present stature I think he will answer for that purpose. But until the Republic has thus grown it will not comprehend Pettigru. I undertake to say there was patriotism enough in Pettigru at seventy to endow a brigade of Hancocks even at thirty-five. The latter was but little more than thirty years of age when he first came in collision with the Crown, and when his vessel was seized by its authority. I shall not stop to inquire how much of his devotion to the cause of the colonies was fairly attributable to his love of colonial liberty, or how much to his love for the schooner Liberty. But Hancock did not stand alone. He was buoyed up by all that was chivalric in thirteen colonies. He was a chieftain among them. The eyes of the world were upon him. A great party in England encouraged him. The honors to be won in giving life to a new nation lured him on. Under such circumstances one would be afraid to be a coward. Nevertheless you have done well to applaud his courage.

In another hall you have a statue of Franklin. I believe the greatest of his achievements were in drawing lightning from a cloud and kissing the Queen of France. I am not prepared to admit that either of these exploits was beyond the reach of the genius of Judge Pettigru.

On a hill near Boston a granite column springs up two hundred and twenty-one feet from the earth. What excellence was exhibited on Bunker Hill save that of courage and constancy? But there was not more of courage or constancy displayed on Bunker Hill than inspired Pettigru with every breath he drew. One who knew him best and knew him longest has said that he "never knew a single person who came so near being an institution in himself."

But you are not asked to build monuments to the memory of Pettigru. If I could administer the wealth of the nation I would make the commons of that rebellious city in which he died groan under the weight of granite piled up in honor of his fidelity. You are not asked even to engrave his likeness upon marble. But he left some books. The study of them had made him what he was. He left a widow. His unselfish expenditure of his earnings while he lived had left her destitute.

It was said the other day that all his children did not partake the sentiment of loyalty which animated him. I learn that is so. The fathers are few and are deemed fortunate who, possessing great excellence themselves, succeed in impressing it upon all their offspring. But he had one daughter who did inherit all his love of and fidelity to his country; one who loved him as Margaret Moore loved the great Chancellor of Henry VIII, and who was as proud of her father's constancy as Margaret was of hers. She was driven from his side, and in 1861 found her way, alone, through the lines of two hostile armies and sought shelter in the city of New York. It seems the desire possessed her that the books which her father left should be owned by the country which he loved so well, and that their proceeds should be applied to making tolerable the last days of the widow he left.

If it be said the idea does not become a Senator and a statesman, I am sure it eminently becomes a woman and a daughter. Through you, sir, that desire of hers was communicated to the committee, whose chairman I am, and through that committee this desire is made known to the Senate. I hope the Senate will be induced to gratify it. It has been said that we do not want the books. If that be said in the sense that we can do without them, I admit it. If it be said as intimating that we have no use for them, I deny it. We have a use for them. It is said we could get the books cheaper. Upon some careful inquiry I am inclined to think that is true. I am afraid we have not proposed the best bargain that was within our reach. I am inclined to think that if we had ransacked the second-hand book-stalls we might have obtained an equal number of books and of the same character for less money. But being a little anxious to show that we had some regard for the former owner of these books we did not think the best way to do it was to attempt to cheat his widow, and therefore we thought it well to pay what the books were worth to the country.

It is said the Treasury is poor. Let that be admitted. After all we have a great many things we could better spare, I think, than to refuse such a tribute as is asked for in this resolution. If the Treasury is absolutely too poor to enable us to pay for these books, let us sell the statue of Hancock and pay for them; let us sell the picture that we have recently bargained for at a cost of $25,000 to illustrate the art of the Republic; let us sell the bronze doors which open the way to the other House of Congress; let us work out by the day; let us do anything rather than advertise to the enemies among whom Pettigru died: that the loyalty which so distinguished him is held so cheap by us. I hope the Senate will not issue that advertisement.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The closing remark of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, I think, is in equally bad taste with the whole of the speech which he has read to the Senate on this subject, because it conveys an imputation upon all those who have opposed this purchase which none of them deserve. He closes with the idea that those who do not choose to vote for this proposition have no appreciation of the patriotism of the man, and are not disposed to do justice to him, and advertises those that were of different opinion and acted differently from himself that we had no appreciation of patriotism. I suppose it would not be doing myself very great injustice to claim that I have as much appreciation of those who have rendered service to the Republic or have exhibited patriotism as the honorable Senator from Wisconsin himself; and I do not think it necessary, in order to carry a measure which is a favorite one with me, to depreciate the great men whom the country has always almost worshiped for their heroism and their patriotism during the Revolution, or to depreciate the great battles which have been considered landmarks in our history.

Mr. HOWE. I beg to inform the honorable Senator that I have imputed nothing of the character that he speaks of to any Senator. If it be supposed that I did so, it was absolutely unintentional on my part. I did not mean it, and I do not think I said anything of the kind. I certainly did not mean any such thing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not suppose the Senator referred to me particularly; but his remarks were applicable to all those who on a former occasion opposed the passage of this resolution.

Mr. HOWE. I commented on no one whatever.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not suppose the remark was meant for any individual particularly; but the remark was general, that he did not wish to advertise our enemies that we had no particular appreciation of the patriotism of those who stood by us. That was the substance of the closing remark, if I understood it aright, which he addressed to the Senate. As that would be the natural effect of it, I felt bound to answer it, and to repel what might seem to be a natural inference from what the Senator said. I acquit the Senator most clearly, and I should do it without his disclaimer, of any intention to cast an imputation upon any member of the Senate. Perhaps he was not aware of the inference that would be naturally drawn from the remark itself.

Now, sir, I had the highest estimation of Judge Pettigru while he lived, and I believe him, as the Senator believes him, to have been a very patriotic, bold, courageous citizen through life, attached to the Republic and ready to make any sacrifice for its good; and so far as I am individually concerned, or concerned as a Senator, I should be very glad indeed if, consistently with my ideas of duty, I could vote to purchase these books for the benefit of his widow and children. It is a small sum, comparatively, and would not press very hard except in connection with the ten thousand other small sums upon our finances; it is the principle of the thing that I object to. And allow me to say that I think we are becoming exceedingly loose in our legislation. I am afraid it is becoming too much the habit of Congress to consider everything as constitutional which anybody wishes to accomplish, and to find through some construction of some phrase in the Constitution power enough to do that which we wish to do. I have been connected with public affairs so long and began and have lived with such different ideas from those which I hear familiarly put forth as received truths about which there can be no dispute at the present day of the power of Congress under certain clauses of the Constitution, that I come to this matter with a great deal of difficulty; but the style of legislation that we have adopted with reference to many things and the expenditure of public money strikes me as exceedingly dangerous, and affects me with a great deal of fear with reference to what may be the result. I have my own notions about that, and stand up to them, and am not responsible for what other gentlemen do or what other gentlemen think; but I am responsible so far as I am concerned as a Senator; and if I see very clearly that I cannot vote for an appropriation consistent with my ideas of what the power of Congress is, then, without reference to Judge Pettigru or anybody else, I must act according to my convictions.

The mode in which this is got up is only what is commonly called whipping the devil around the stump. It is a mere evasion. We might just as well vote the money in consideration of the services of Judge Pettigru to the Republic—or rather of his patriotism, for I do not know that he rendered any particular service in any other way; there was no particular danger at the time he became district attorney to his person. We might as well say that in consideration of his uniform loyalty and uniform devotion to the good of the country as evinced by his life, and his eminence as a man at the same time, we vote to give his widow $5,000 out of the Treasury. Who would think of voting for such a proposition? We have no authority to do it, no power under any clause of the Constitution to do it, and it would be a precedent dangerous in itself, and would lead to innumerable evils.

Is this anything more than that? I would rather vote for that than vote for this proposition, because then my action would be clear and plain; I should not be trying to dodge a responsibility by putting it in a shape where, perhaps, I might get up some excuse for myself; and this is nothing more nor less than that. It is conceded now that we do not want these books. It is conceded that it is nothing but an old lawyer's old library, which everybody knows to be almost worthless in itself; books that we have no particular occasion for, because we have the same books, unquestionably, and many copies of them, all we want. They are old editions of old books accumulated by a lawyer in the long course of his practice. There is no more reason why they should belong to the Government particularly, because they were his books, than we should have purchased Jefferson's library and Madison's library and everybody else's, if we did not want them, or any lawyer's library, if he was a distinguished man and a friend of his country.

If we needed these books and that was conceded, as we have authority to purchase books for the Library, we might do it, and do it with propriety; but on the ground upon which it is put, not that we need the books, not that they are of any comparative value to us, but that we buy them for the sake of making a provision for his widow which we cannot make by a direct appropriation, this resolution cannot be sustained. I do not feel ready to go out and work by the day for the purpose of raising a fund to purchase these books, as suggested by the honorable Senator; but upon my word, I think I should rather do my proportion of the day's work in order to do it than to vote for a proposition of this kind, which is simply meant to get around or get over a plain proposition with reference to our power under the Constitution by dodging it. That is the whole length, breadth, and thickness of the thing, as I see it, and I rose simply to state the ground on which I put my vote. I cannot vote for it, and I am very sorry that I cannot.

Mr. SUMNER. I see no objection to this proposition on grounds of constitutional power. I cannot doubt our power. Had I been called to vote on this proposition when it was under consideration some weeks ago, I should have voted against it. I was disposed at that time to look at the purchase proposed simply as a question of economy. Since then I have been led to regard it in that other aspect presented by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Howe,] and I hesitate to vote against it.

I have gone over the catalogue of the library. It is a respectable library for a practicing lawyer. Some of the books are valuable, others may be useful as duplicates.

But in voting this sum I do not expect an equivalent in the books. I make the purchase of these books the occasion of expressing my sympathy with courage and fidelity under peculiar difficulties in the cause of our country. Mr. Pettigru was like the angel Abdiel; "faithful among the faithless only he." In the State of South Carolina and in Charleston itself he continued true to the Union in all its trials early and late; first, in those days when it was menaced by Nullification and then again when it was openly assailed by bloody Rebellion. He died in virtuous poverty, and I am willing that Congress should make this contribution to his widow. Such a character is an example of infinite value to the Republic. I wish to show my respect for it. I should be glad to see it exalted so as to be seen by men. In the deserts of the East a fountain is always cherished as a sacred spot; such a character as we propose to honor was a fountain in the desert. What desert more complete than South Carolina?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, the Joint Committee on the Library of which I am a member had this measure under consideration and discussed it at considerable length, and I was one of those who gave their assent to the reporting of the present resolution, and I shall vote for it with pleasure. I shall vote for it for the reason that it is in itself an expression of our high respect for the memory of Mr. Pettigru, a patriot who in the worst of times and under the most trying circumstances maintained his integrity pure and without spot. He was an eminent member of the American bar, and had occupied that high position for many years. He was admired by the profession almost universally as a gentleman of profound learning and of incorruptible integrity. It is sufficient for me to refer to a single instance in his life to excite my admiration, for it shows not only his heroism and courage as a patriot, but his unflinching and inflexible fidelity to his professional oath as a member of that honorable and learned profession.

The newspapers informed us soon after the commencement of the war, and after the confederate congress had passed their act confiscating the property of Union men, or rather of aliens and non-residents, that on a certain day an old man with gray hairs came into the rebel court at Charleston, South Carolina, under a summons from the court requiring him to disclose upon his oath what claims he had in his possession as attorney and counselor-at-law belonging to persons other than citizens of South Carolina, and requiring him to deliver them over under the confiscation act which had been passed, for the use of the confederate authorities. This old man, borne down with years, surrounded by a community hostile to the cause which he loved, inimical to what he regarded as his duty, refused sternly to recognize the authority of the court, or of any other human being to put him upon such an inquisition. He demurred to the power of the court for two reasons; the first was that the so-called court itself had no legitimate authority under the Constitution of the United States; that it was a usurpation of power which could not be delegated under the Constitution of the United States; was rebellious in its character and unworthy to be regarded as a court of justice; and the second objection which he made was, that he would not defile his conscience as an honorable member of that profession by making to the world disclosures which, by the common law and the laws of all civilized countries, were placed under the seal of secrecy, not to be violated without the consent of those by whom he was employed. I do not recollect distinctly what was the result of that inquisition, but my belief is that the proceedings, so far as Pettigru was concerned, were, out of mere shame, discontinued and dismissed. Sir, that was an act of heroism at a time and under circumstances deserving of our high admiration.

I shall vote for this resolution for another reason, which, with me, would be a very weighty one aside from those which I have presented; and that is, that the library of Mr. Pettigru is quite ample both in the number of volumes and in the variety of subjects which it embraces, and is very much needed as a facility for the Court of Claims in the discharge of their duties in this city. I understand that the judges of the Court of Claims have no access at all to the Law Library of Congress, and that they are very much embarrassed for the use of the necessary books to enable them to discharge their duties; and I understand that the same embarrassment exists, to a certain extent, on the part of the judges of the supreme court of this District. I think we should be consulting the public interest, therefore, by purchasing this small collection of law books for the use of those two courts.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Nesmith, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Bucklew, Edmunds, Fessenden, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Norton, Poland, Saulsbury, Sprague, Trumbull, Willey, and Williams—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Dixon, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Riddle, Stewart, Wright, and Yates—16.

So the joint resolution was passed.

RETRENCHMENT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

Whereas the financial condition of the United States demands the exercise of a rigid economy, in all departments of the Government, in order to sustain the credit of the nation and to relieve the people at the earliest possible day from the burden of excessive taxation; and whereas there is reason to believe that in many departments of the civil service abuses have for a long time existed and still exist, in the perpetuation of useless offices and sinecures, in extravagant salaries and allowances, and in other unnecessary and wasteful expenditures: Therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring), That a joint select committee be appointed, to consist of two members of the Senate and three members of the House, to be styled the joint select committee on retrenchment; that said committee be instructed to inquire into the expenditures in all the branches of the civil service of the United States, and to report whether any and what offices ought to be abolished, whether any and what salaries or allowances ought to be reduced, and generally how and to what extent the expenses of the civil service of the country may and ought to be curtailed. That said committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to report by bill or otherwise. And that said committee may appoint a clerk for the term of six months and no more.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day, it do so to meet on Thursday next.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the joint resolution (S. R. No. 98) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to postpone the unfinished business and all prior orders, with a view to take up the special order assigned for this day, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various

Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1867, the pending question being an amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to insert the following as section three:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 31st day of December, 1866, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of money out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates or accounts by the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope this question may be disposed of by the Senate without taking up a great deal of time. I submitted very briefly the other day the views which controlled my judgment in opposing this change. In the first place, it is a very important change in the administration of Indian affairs, and it is legislating in the strongest sense of the term upon an appropriation bill, which is not usually favored. Besides, as I stated the other day, while I concede that in certain particular cases there would be a convenience in having the control of the Indians entirely and absolutely under the War Department, yet in the majority of instances they are better managed under the Department of the Interior; and the great business connected with Indian affairs is, after all, in relation to their lands and reservations, which come more peculiarly under the Interior Department—the survey of their lands, the administration of their funds, the distribution of their annuities. While I admit that inconvenience sometimes arises from an apparent conflict of jurisdiction between the civil officers appointed by the Interior Department and the officers in command of the Army, in my judgment that inconvenience is greatly overbalanced by the other considerations; and therefore I am opposed to this change. I think that the Committee on Finance have not fully considered the matter, or they certainly would not propose such important legislation as this upon an appropriation bill. If the Senate should come to the determination that a change ought to be made it had better be taken up and considered in a bill by itself, and not be put upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I concur with the Senator from Wisconsin that it is not worth while to debate this measure at any length, because it is a question that has been in the mind of every Senator for some time. But as an illustration of the conflict of jurisdiction that occurs between the War Department and the Interior Department, involving large expenditures of money, I will read an extract from a memorial signed by a portion of the Cherokees. I am not responsible for the facts here stated; but as they are presented regularly to us by them in a written memorial complaining of certain grievances, I read their statements as alleged facts. If they are true, they certainly require some investigation:

"By the act of 3d March, 1865, the Secretary of War was authorized to feed and clothe the pauper Indians in the Indian Territory from the date of the passage of the law until the end of that fiscal year."

"On the 1st of July, 1865, when the military authorities ceased to have authority to feed refugee Indians, there was an immense surplus of flour and corn on hand at Fort Gibson, amounting to as much as all that has since been issued to pauper Indians in that country. These stores the commanding officer at Fort Gibson offered to turn over to the superintendent of Indian affairs at $3 50 per barrel for flour and $2 per bushel for corn. Instead of making this purchase, the superintendent went to Leavenworth and entered into a contract with McDonald, Fuller & Sells (the son of the superintendent) at $8 per bushel for corn and $34 per barrel for flour. This contract was let, as we are informed and believe, without the requisite advertisement on the pretense that there was not time to advertise. The most of the flour furnished under this contract was sent by steamboat from St. Louis, costing the contractors about $12 and the Indian department $34 per bushel, while a large amount of the flour offered by the War Department to the Interior at $8 per barrel was being shipped down the Arkansas from Fort Gibson to Little Rock. The corn furnished by the contractors under this contract was part bought from the Indians at $2 per bushel, and part bought of the military authorities at Fort Gibson by one McKee, who is understood to have been the agent and partner of McDonald, Fuller & Sells, at eighteen cents per bushel, and turned over to the superintendent at $8 per bushel. The gross amount of these supplies we are unable to state, but are satisfied that it was several hundred thousand dollars; and we have information that it has all or nearly all been paid."

I do not wish to read any more from the various allegations made by these Indians. I only read this much to show that when the War Department is charged with a certain portion of the duties connected with our intercourse with the Indians, and the Interior Department with another portion, there will necessarily be a conflict of jurisdiction and great complaints of fraud and peculation. This, certainly, is a very serious charge which is alleged by these Indians. It is that the Government actually being in possession of a large amount of stores and property through the War Department which offered to turn them over to the Interior Department—corn at $2 a bushel and flour at $8 50 a barrel—the Interior Department instead of taking them purchased flour at $34 a barrel and corn at $8 a bushel. It seems to me that if this kind of transactions can go on under this system of mixed responsibility, it is time we should put a stop to it. I do not avouch the facts here stated, but I give the authority on which they are stated.

We have desired, however, to place this amendment simply upon the public reasons that have been stated already. As the Army will necessarily now be without employment in a great measure, as the great body of the Army must be stationed in the Indian Territory in time of peace, it is proper that the officers of the Army, who control the military forces, should regulate our Indian affairs. Prior to 1848 the Indian service cost the Government probably less than a million dollars annually, and up to that time all that service was performed by the military authorities. Many of the most distinguished and eminent men in this country have been at the head of Indian affairs. General Harrison was for a long time at the head of Indian affairs in the Northwest. The number of Indians has been constantly decreasing, and yet the Indian expenditure is constantly increasing. Under these circumstances, it seems to me, it would be wise as a matter of economy to give to the officers in command of troops in the Indian Territory also the control of the dealings with the Indian tribes. The plan that has been adopted of late years to supersede military authority by teachers and blacksmiths, &c., it seems to me, up to this time has not worked very well; but if it is necessary to continue that system, it may as well be done under the Secretary of War as under the Secretary of the Interior, substituting from time to time, as rapidly as may be, military for civil authority.

As I stated the other day very briefly the reasons of the committee for proposing this amendment, I do not propose to repeat them now.

Mr. NESMITH. The comparison made by the Senator from Ohio between the expenses of the Indian Bureau in 1848 and prior to that time, with what they are now, it seems to me does not demonstrate anything. The expenses may have been a million dollars then, or half a million, and may be in the neighborhood of two or three millions now; and yet that proves nothing. At that time our Indian frontier was on the Missouri river. Since then our intercourse with the Indians tribes has spread to the Pacific, and reaches from the forty-ninth parallel of latitude on the north to the Gulf of California, or near that gulf, on the south. We have been brought in contact with the great tribes of the plains and the Rocky mountains, and it has become necessary to purchase more or less of their land by treaty stipulations, and to supply them with annuities and goods. We have been brought in much more direct intercourse with them. Probably the business of the department in this way has increased in a much greater ratio than the expense.

So far as the evils complained of are to be remedied, I think it is a mistake to suppose that it will be done by changing the bureau from the Interior to the War Department. There is a peculiar adaptability in the Interior Department for the management of this business, particularly so far as our Indian affairs upon the Pacific coast are concerned. Our relations there with the Indians are confined principally to the management of their lands, their farms, and their reservations, and that is a department of the Government which is peculiarly under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. To make the change proposed and transfer all this business to the military authorities, where there is but little experience in relation to these details, would, I think, be disastrous at present, and I prefer not to see it done.

I do not know how far it is contemplated by the measure now proposed to supersede the present civil officers, and make military officers the agents and superintendents. So far as my own experience goes I know it is difficult to find details from the Army to fill these offices. The officers of the Army are generally engaged, and their time occupied with business relating directly to their own profession. The companies, battalions, and regiments stationed on the frontier are generally too destitute of officers to permit of many being detailed for this service.

"Another great objection to this whole plan would be the constant changing of officers. For instance, if a lieutenant or a captain in command of a post to-day in the vicinity of Indians should assume the duty of Indian agent; to-morrow or next week he may be ordered to a distant part of the country, and what advantages he had gained by acquaintance and familiarity with the Indians is entirely lost to his successor. A new man comes and assumes the duties of the office of Indian agent by virtue of his position in the Army. He has everything to learn of the details which are connected with the transactions of the office. Why, sir, it requires years for persons to become informed of all the details of the different treaties, the laws of Congress regulating the intercourse with the tribes, and the specific treaties applicable to particular tribes; the appropriations, the balances of appropriations, and the proper distribution of annuities, are questions which require years of experience to become familiar with. Our department as at present organized is in the hands of civilians who have made this their study, and in most instances they have become familiar with the subject. I think that at present the department is well managed, and I do not believe that at this time the proposed change would be for the benefit of the country or of the Indians, and I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will not vote for this proposition, in the first place, because it is a proposition to legislate generally upon an appropriation bill. I think the purpose of an appropriation bill is to provide means to carry on the Government according to existing laws. It is an unfortunate thing to legislate in an appropriation bill. In the second place, I shall not vote for the measure because I do not think the business of managing our Indians is a military business; it is a civil duty that is devolved upon the proper officers. Judging from the speeches that are made it would seem to be a question whether the Indians are to be governed by force, or fraud, or both. Now, sir, that there have been some frauds in the management of our Indian affairs I do not question; but I think that a comparison of expenditures of money under Army officers and under officers connected with the Indian Bureau would not be unfavorable to the officers of the civil bureau, although it might not be very favorable to either. If we are to judge by the charges that have been made during the last five years, we should say there is scarcely any person to be trusted now connected with the Indian service or connected with the Army. I think these charges are exaggerations; but I am not going to discuss that. I do not take it that men in the Army are any more honest than they are anywhere else. Men will make money, it seems, if they have the opportunity to do so. The only guarantee the public can have for a faithful expenditure of money is that which the law secures.

If we are going to fight the Indians, of course we ought to place them under the control and rule of the Army. If that is to be the policy of the country, that they are simply to be governed by force, the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is right; but if we are going to feed them and educate them as far as we can, and by a wise and kind policy govern them, then they ought to be under the control of the Interior Department. If we are ready to come to the proposition that the Indians are simply to be fought, I am in favor of putting them under the control of the Army; but if we are to execute treaties fairly and honestly toward the Indians, treat them, as I think they ought to be treated, as kindly as we can, preserve them as long as we can, then I think their management ought to be under some civil Department of the Government.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think I ought to say a single word after what has been read by my honorable friend from Ohio from the statement of the Cherokees. I understand the fact to be that when the military officers were about to retire from Fort Gibson, when we had got through with the use of them there, they had large supplies on hand, and as they proposed to retire they were ready to turn over the supplies they had on hand to the Indian department; but the Department here knew nothing of that until the 3d of September, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs himself in person was at this place pending the preliminary negotiations of some treaties, and immediately the amount of flour which was there on hand held by the War Department was accepted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on behalf of the Indian department, accepted upon the terms agreed upon, which are not correctly stated in the paper from which the Senator has read. As I am informed, the amount agreed upon was the cost of the flour with the transportation added, which amounted to about $9 50 per hundred; but the flour itself, some of it, proved to be very bad; it was wormy and sour. It is but justice to Mr. Sells to state (because the Indian Committee had occasion to look into that matter) that the contract which he entered into as superintendent was a contract for a very small supply, which he deemed necessary to take with him in going down to the Indian country to feed them, as it was supposed, to prevent them from actual suffering. Subsequently the regular contract, which was entered into afterward, was made in open market upon advertisement and bids received just as all contracts are made in behalf of the Army as well as in behalf of the Indian department. I deem it but just to make this statement.

I do not say that my mind has been entirely satisfied in reference to the administration of Indian affairs in that country, because there have been undoubtedly some abuses there, as abuses grow up everywhere where the expenditure of money in large amounts is made. Contractors make contracts for the purpose of making money out of the Government beyond all question. If a steamboat is hired to transport goods or men or anything, the contractor seeks to make money out of the contract. I happen to have in my hand (and it comes in here by way of comparison as between the Indian Bureau and the War Department on the score of economy) a letter just received from Fort Sully from the special Indian commissioner sent to make treaties with the Sioux Indians. Writing to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, he says:

"We have held consultations with the nine tribes with whom we made treaties last fall. We find they have suffered much during the past hard winter; some of them have actually starved to death, but notwithstanding which they have been very quiet and observed their treaty stipulations faithfully, which certainly is doing better than white men would have done under the same circumstances. Some of the tribes were obliged to kill and eat their ponies. We found on our arrival at this place"

And to this I wish to call the attention of my honorable friend from Ohio, when comparing the economy of war expenses with Indian expenses—

"We found on our arrival at this place six steamboats engaged by the military commandant of this upper country to transport soldiers, military stores, horses, and mules to Benton. The prices that he pays per day for steamers vary from $500 to $830. Now compare that with the price we pay for our boat"

This is a boat in the service of the Interior Department—

"a new boat, too—$330—and perhaps you will conclude that we did not drive so bad a bargain after all."

This is the reply of the special commissioner to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who, learning that he had chartered a boat at this sum, was writing to him questioning the propriety of being at such an expense; and by way of answer, to justify himself, he asked the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to compare the price he was paying with what the commandant of the military forces there was paying for six boats, from five hundred to six hundred and thirty dollars a day each. There is just this precise difference, when you come to compare any other Department of the Government with the War Department on the score of economy: anything done by the military is all right; it comes out of the great fund of the commissary department and the quartermaster's department, and we know nothing about it; but everything done in the Indian department requires a special appropriation, into which we look; and if there is a good contract made against the Government we see it. That, I think, is the great difference.

One thing further I desire to say. When the Indian Bureau was under the War Department we still had our civilian appointments, superintendents and agents, as we have them now; but the next amendment which is proposed by the committee strikes them all out and substitutes officers of the Army to do the duties of superintendents and agents.

Mr. SHERMAN. Only when in the opinion of the Secretary of War it is advisable to do that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is left to the Secretary of War; and of course, therefore, it authorizes the dispensing with all the civil officers connected with the Indian service and the substitution of officers of the Army. Now, Mr. President, I believe that the great difficulty in our Indian system grows out of the too frequent changes in the men who deal with the Indians in behalf of the Government of the United States. The changing of agents and superintendents is a very great evil; but the changes of the military officers that come into contact with them are still more frequent. They are changed, it may be, from month to month. Here is a lieutenant in command of a company to-day in the presence of an Indian tribe at a post. To-morrow, perhaps, he with that company is ordered to another post and a new company is ordered in. They are constantly, continually changing. I admit that a man of great good sense in the command of a military post in the presence of Indian tribes, if he were there and to remain there for a considerable length of time, might obtain the confidence of the Indians, preserve the peace between the Indians and the whites and peace among themselves. That has been done; and in the Indian country where troops have to be employed, when a sagacious, prudent officer is in command of them, I have no doubt that affairs are administered well; and so, too, when there is a good agent employed and put in contact with the Indian tribes, their affairs are well administered.

It must not be forgotten that there is just as much variety among the various Indian tribes as can possibly be imagined. There are all shades of difference. There is as much difference between the Cherokees, Choctaws, and Chickasaws of the Indian country, and the Nez Percés of Oregon, and the Indians of the plains and the Digger Indians of California, as can possibly be conceived. They are very disinct from each other. There is as much and more difference between them as there is between the wild Apaches of New Mexico and the Pueblos of New Mexico, and there is just as much difference between wolves and sheep as there is between these tribes of Indians. The Pueblos have lived and live now just where they were found when the Spaniards first discovered this continent, living in their villages, at peace with the surrounding tribes, while the Apache is still the same wild nomad that he was when the Spaniards first discovered the country, although they live in immediate proximity to each other. For this reason it requires Indian agents of judgment and experience. I grant that from our changing our agents from time to time, we perhaps do not administer Indian affairs as well as they are administered in the British Provinces. The great difference is this: in the British Provinces an Indian agent is appointed substantially for life; he goes to his tribe, takes charge of its affairs, and after having served faithfully twenty or twenty-five years he is pensioned for the remainder of his life. But with us changes are frequent; they are made oftentimes for political reasons or for political services that have been rendered, and that is the difficulty in the system, I admit. You will not, however, avoid those difficulties by changing the bureau from the Interior to the War Department, because agents and superintendents will still be appointed, and the danger is that they may be changed from time to time hereafter as they have been heretofore. I hope we may enter upon a better policy in this respect; that if we find a good, faithful, Indian agent or superintendent we may continue him in the office from term to term and make it his life's business, his profession, his ambition.

Mr. NESMITH. I move to amend the pending amendment by striking out the word "not," in the twelfth line of the fourth section, and striking out all after the word "appointees," in the thirteenth line, so as to require the officers of the Army designated as Indian agents and superintendents to give bonds, as now required of civil appointees.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The pending amendment is the third section, which provides simply for the transfer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon is to a section not yet before the Senate. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance as the third section of the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That amendment presents a very important question. This transfer, in my judgment, ought not to be made without serious consideration and a full knowledge of all the facts involved in the change. That so important a proposition should be presented to us upon the Indian appropriation bill, which attracts very little attention at any time, and when the Senate, as is the case here to-day, consists of barely a quorum, very few paying attention to the subject under consideration, is, in my judgment, to be regretted. I think that a change of this sort should not be made without understanding from the Interior Department and the War Department specifically the reasons for it and what is to be gained by the change. Our Indian affairs have recently been very much disturbed by the war. We have at this time at the head of the Interior Department, under the control of which our Indian affairs now are, a gentleman in whom we all have the fullest confidence.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How long do you suppose he will remain there?

Mr. TRUMBULL. He may remain there just as long as the Secretary of War may remain in his position. I am not speaking with reference to his permanent continuance there; it was in another view, as the Senator from Maine, if he had waited a moment, would have seen, that I spoke in reference to him. This gentleman is familiar with our Indian matters. When a member of this body, for some eight or ten years he was an active member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. He has paid very great attention to this particular branch of the public service, and, in my judgment, is now placing the conduct of our Indian affairs in a better condition than it has ever been placed in before. He is looking more closely to this branch of the public service. I think he understands it far better than any other head of a Department in the Government. If the expenses are now large, if the treaties recently negotiated are numerous, it arises out of the fact of the disturbed condition of the country, of the war which has disturbed our Indian relations.

Now, sir, at a time like this, when we have our Indian affairs under the control of a person in whom we have the greatest confidence, when numerous treaties have recently been negotiated, without any recommendation from the Department, hastily upon an appropriation bill, at the suggestion of a committee not charged by the Senate with looking particularly into Indian affairs, are we prepared to make this radical change and to take these uncultivated Indians, whom the religious community and the enlightened people of the United States have been struggling to Christianize, to educate, and to elevate for years, out from all these influences and simply control them by military power, place them under the bayonet? Why, sir, the great expenses of this Government connected with the administration of Indian affairs have grown out of the wars with the Indians. I will not say that these wars were inaugurated because the military had control of Indian affairs in times of peace. Perhaps they were a necessity that could not have been avoided; but we do know that some of the most expensive Indian wars, which have cost many millions to the Government, have been recklessly, and many of us think needlessly, brought upon the country by the hasty and inconsiderate action of subordinate military officers.

The tendency for the last few years, Mr. President, has been to a concentration of power in the hands of the military. They have controlled of necessity a large portion of the country for the last five years, in civil matters as well as military matters. Half the territorial extent of the Union already has been under the complete control of the military, and the tendency is to concentrate power in the hands of the military. Now, sir, when we have peace, when our Indian affairs are being managed, as I have said before, by a person in whom we have the utmost confidence, I think it is the wrong time inconsiderately to make such a change as this. I think it will shock the enlightened intelligence of this nation to say to them that all these Indian tribes, in which our religious denominations in different parts of the country have taken an interest, in which liberal-minded men have taken an interest, are to be taken out from under the control of the civil authorities and placed entirely under the control of the military.

What are the reasons that are given for it? It is said that it will be less expensive to manage them by the military, and my friend from Ohio brings in here and reads to the Senate, as a reason for making this change, an abuse in the purchase of some flour at Fort Gibson, if it be an abuse, and says that a large price was paid for that flour. If the Senator from Ohio will look at the purchases made by Army officers, he can find many abuses. He can find where they bought rocks for hay, where they paid for hundreds and thousands of cords of wood that were never delivered, where grain and forage paid for as in good condition were utterly worthless, where garments purchased for your soldiers were of rotten cloth and good for nothing. But, sir, that would afford but little reason for changing the whole organization and control of the Army; and the Senator from Ohio will permit me to say that this evidence that he has got in reference to the purchase at Fort Gibson, I presume, comes from one of the parties who are having a controversy in the Cherokee country. There were before the Committee on Indian Affairs the representatives of what is known as the Ross party and the representatives of the other party, formerly known as the Ridge party, and they disagreed totally in their statements. These different parties have employed attorneys, and I am told that these attorneys receive very large fees for appearing before committees of Congress and endeavoring to advance the views of the particular tribe which employs them. I do not speak of this to the discredit of or as any reflection on the attorneys. It is their business to appear as counsel for clients who employ them; but they represent the case of their clients in the best view they can consistently with the facts; and I have no doubt that much of this information which has affected the mind of the Senator from Ohio has come through paid attorneys, paid thousands of dollars to accomplish a particular object. There are two parties of the Cherokees, unfriendly and hostile to each other, unwilling to unite together to make a treaty, one party setting up that they cannot live with the other, and that they must have a separate treaty; the other party insisting that there must be a treaty for the whole nation, and they being in a majority, as the minority say, will control the minority unjustly and encroach upon their rights. I will not undertake to decide who is right or who is wrong at this time. I speak of it merely to place before the Senate the fact that the statements of interested parties are to be taken with many grains of allowance.

We all know, sir, that under the management of the military Department of this Government business is not carried on in the most economical way. Suppose the Senator from Ohio were to institute an investigation to know what this Capitol has cost and how the work upon it has been done under the military Department of the Government, or were to look into the expense of constructing the Washington aqueduct, I wonder if he would not be able to find that much more money had been expended than was really necessary to accomplish the work which has been done. Why, sir, it is notorious that a public work erected by the Government through the military Department costs an extravagant price; and I know no reason to suppose that the public business of the country can be carried on more cheaply through the War than through the Interior Department. As was very justly remarked by the Senator from Wisconsin, we make our appropriations for the Army in the lump, by the tens and the hundreds of millions of dollars. Instead of appropriating a few thousand dollars, ten, twenty, or thirty thousand, as the case may be, to take supplies to an Indian tribe up the Missouri river, we appropriate $30,000,000 for transportation purposes of the Army. Whenever the Army needs to move supplies up the Missouri river it charters boats at $600 a day or $700 a day, and nothing is ever said or thought about it; but if an Indian agent charters a boat at half that price, the matter is inquired into. None of us ever know the details of the expenditures in the War Department.

There has come to my knowledge, in connection with Indian affairs, within a few days, upon the Indian Committee, a fact which I will state. The War Department has had control of a tribe of Indians known as the Navajoes for the last two or three years. We had a war with them. Our armies captured them, placed them in a certain locality, and have been guarding them for several years, at an expense last year of more than twelve hundred thousand dollars for feeding and taking care of them. The Secretary of War applied to the Secretary of the Interior to take charge of those Indians. The War Department wishes to get rid of them; and the Secretary of the Interior has sent in an estimate of the amount it would cost that Department to take care of the Navajoes for the next year; and how much do you think it is? About seven hundred thousand dollars. I cannot give the exact figures, but it is more than half a million less than it cost the War Department this year. The Committee on Indian Affairs, however, have thought it better, as those Indians were now in the control of the War Department, to leave them there, and have not recommended that appropriation. It being stated that it was necessary to use some military power to control the warlike tribes, it was thought better to leave them entirely under the control of the War Department for the ensuing year, although it cost last year more than twelve hundred thousand dollars for the War Department to take charge of that single tribe of Indians.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Independent of the pay of the troops.

Mr. TRUMBULL. So I understand; independent entirely of the pay of the troops.

I do not wish to take up time on this subject. I confess that I am not sufficiently advised to discuss it in all its bearings. The matter was considered somewhat in the committee of which I am a member; but I did not feel sufficiently advised there to recommend this change. It may be for the best. I am not satisfied that it is. I see some reasons why it is not best to make the change. Until we have more information, and understand it better, I think we had best leave the matter where it is. Let us leave it there for the present until we see how, under the new settlements and new arrangements which have been recently made in regard to the Indians, this system will work. I think we shall find an improvement in the management of our Indian affairs under the present officers. That is my judgment about it. In that I may be mistaken, and it may be best, when we come to understand the subject thoroughly, that the Indian Bureau should be placed under the War Department. I am not satisfied that it is so. I think this measure is inconsiderate; that it ought not to come in here in this way upon an appropriation bill, and from a committee not having special charge of the matter. I think the Committees on Indian Affairs of the two Houses, in connection with such information as may be obtained from the different Departments in regard to the management of Indian affairs, ought to consult together and mature the system, if the change is to take place, before we adopt it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to the bill?

Mr. GRIMES. I understood the Senator from Maine to demand the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was another question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Sherman, Stewart, Van Winkle, Williams, and Wilson—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Cragin, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Salisbury, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Willey, and Yates—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Connors, Cowan, Dixon, Edmunds, Harris, Howe, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Wade, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. The remainder of the amendments reported by the committee, the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sections, will necessarily fall with the first. Perhaps a vote had better be taken upon them as one whole amendment. The first having failed, the rest as a matter of course follow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be taken on the other amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance collectively.

The amendments were to insert as additional sections the following:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized, whenever in his opinion it shall promote the economy and efficiency of the Indian service, to establish convenient departments and districts for the proper administration of the duties now imposed by law on the superintendents of Indian affairs and upon agents and sub-agents, and to substitute for such superintendents and agents officers of the Army of the United States, who shall be designated for that purpose, and who shall then become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the superintendents and agents thus superseded, and without additional compensation therefor. Officers of the Army so designated shall not be required to give bonds now required of civil appointees, but shall be responsible for any neglect or maladministration, according to the Rules and Articles of War.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all contracts for transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner and at the same time provided for transportation for the use of the Army.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, to provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargain, barter, and exchange with the several Indian tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer several amendments to the bill. In the first place, I will offer some which are rather verbal by way of correction. On page 8, lines one hundred and sixty-five, one hundred and sixty-nine, one hundred and seventy-two, one hundred and seventy-five, and one hundred and seventy-eight, the word "thirteenth" should be "twelfth;" so as to read "for twelfth of thirty installments," &c.; otherwise the effect would be that the Indians would lose one installment to which they are entitled. Last year we appropriated for the eleventh of their installments, and this year the appropriation should be for the twelfth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On the fourteenth page, lines three hundred and twenty-three and three hundred and twenty-seven, in the appropriation for the Kickapoos, the word "fourteenth" ought to be changed to "thirteenth." Last year we appropriated for the twelfth installment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On the seventeenth page, line three hundred and ninety-four, in the appropriation for the Omahas, the word "ten" should be "nine," so as to read, "for the last of nine installments," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, no objection being offered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move the same amendment in the four hundred and seventh line, on the same page, in the appropriation for the Ottos and Missourias, to strike out "ten" and insert "nine" before the word "installments."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On the eighteenth page, line four hundred and twenty, under the head of "Pawnees," "five" should be changed to "four," so as to read, "for last of four installments," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, no objection being offered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On page 19, line four hundred and forty-four, I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert "nine" before the word "installments."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In lines four hundred and fifty-one and four hundred and fifty-five, on the same page, the word "ninth" should be changed to "eighth," so as to read, "for eighth of ten installments," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those changes will be made, no objections being interposed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On page 28, line six hundred and fifty-seven, the word "ninth" should be stricken out and the word "eighth" inserted, so as to read, "for eighth of ten installments," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made, no objection being offered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On the same page, line six hundred and sixty-nine, the word "fourth" should be changed to "third;" and in lines six hundred and seventy-five and six hundred and seventy-nine the word "ninth" should be changed to "eighth."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those changes will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On page 63, line fifteen hundred and twenty-seven, I move to insert after the word "of" the words "sheep and of;" so that the clause will read:

For subsistence for the Navajo Indians, and for the purchase of sheep and of agricultural implements, seeds, &c.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Do you propose to increase the appropriation?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now propose to move some amendments which contain appropriations. On page 61, after line fourteen hundred and ninety-three, after the miscellaneous appropriations, I move to insert the following:

For the reappropriation of the sum carried to the surplus fund for warrant numbered one hundred and seventy-two, dated June 30, 1865, under the head "for surveying and allotting to the proper persons the reserved tracts, per the ninth and tenth articles of the treaty with the Sacs and Foxes, and other tribes of Indians of July 15, 1830," $1,209 97.

This is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in a letter which I hold in my hand, and which I will read if it is desired.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It had better be read, so that we can understand what this amendment is about.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 19, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to submit for the consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the subject embraced in the inclosed copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the 17th instant, namely: by the fifth section of the act of July 31, 1854 (Statutes-at-Large, volume ten, page 332) an appropriation was made by Congress for surveying and allotting to the proper persons the reserved tracts per the ninth and tenth articles of the treaty with the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri, of July 15, 1830.

Under the impression that all claims, on account of the above appropriation, had been settled, an unexpended balance, to the amount of $1,209 97, was remanded on the 30th of June last, and carried to "surplus fund."

It now appears that William Ashley Jones, Esq., has a meritorious and just claim of $1,142 62 for services as a commissioner under the appropriation above referred to; and as there are no funds at the disposal of this Department applicable to the payment of said claim, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends that an application be made to Congress to reappropriate to its original purpose, in order that a settlement of said accounts may be made.

This recommendation of the Commissioner is approved by this Department and the favorable action of the Committee on Indian Affairs is respectfully requested.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAMES HARLAN, Secretary.

Hon. J. R. DOOLITTLE, Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The second amendment which the Committee on Indian Affairs intended to propose covers precisely what was put, as I am informed, upon the legislative appropriation bill. It is for payment of the goods that were burned on board steamboats at St. Louis. That matter having been acted upon by the Senate, and being now pending in the legislative appropriation bill, I shall not move an amendment on the present bill. If it remains upon the legislative appropriation bill that is all that is necessary.

On page 6, after line one hundred and eighteen, I move to insert the following amendment:

For the purpose of quieting the claim of the Lac de Flambeau band of Chippewas for an interest in lands ceded to the United States by the Bois Fort band of Chippewa Indians, $5,000.

I have here a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon which this appropriation is asked. The facts, I will state, are simply these: there was a treaty with these Chippewas, and this band joined in the treaty, as long ago as 1854. By the terms of the treaty, all their right to a very large section of country was ceded to the United States. Some of these Indians or their chiefs claimed that they did not fully understand the provisions of the treaty, and that they had not intended to cede as much as it appears by the terms of the treaty they had ceded. They came on here with the other Chippewas at the present session. During the last winter a treaty was negotiated with the Bois Fort band of the Chippewas; but inasmuch as this Government had a treaty with these Lac de Flambeau Indians, and it appeared to be ratified, the Government could not concede, on its behalf, that they had been imposed upon in this way, and did not make any new treaty with them. It so happened that there were four of the chiefs of the Lac de Flambeau band here. Three of them sickened with the small-pox and died in this city, and there was but one of them to return home. It was believed by the Department of the Interior, or feared at least, that from the circumstances of their being dissatisfied with their arrangement, their not having made a treaty here, and these chiefs having sickened and died here, trouble would arise with them. It was therefore thought desirable that Government should appropriate this sum of money by way of a present to this tribe. It was thought it would be a matter of economy and a matter of conciliation toward the tribe. There is no treaty stipulation which binds us to pay this money; but the Department appeals to the generosity of Congress, under the circumstances, believing that it would be wise to make the appropriation. That is the substance of it. Our committee considered the subject in all its bearings, and though we had some doubts upon it, still, upon the whole, we thought it was wise to make this appropriation, or allow the Department to do it; and therefore we have recommended it. I hope the Senate will adopt it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer another amendment, to come in after the amendment which I have just offered, after line fourteen hundred and ninety-three, on page 61:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the indebtedness incurred for the Indian service in the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington in the years 1860, 1861, and 1862, $40,000.

I have a letter here from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs which explains the facts upon which the committee thought proper to recommend this amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does it come from the Department?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the Department recommend it?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir; and this is the Commissioner's letter explaining the circumstances:

"On entering on the position of head of the bureau I found a large number of unsettled papers on file here, issued by various agents in Oregon and Washington Territory in 1860, 1861, and 1862. They amount in the aggregate to $7,940 90 in Oregon and $21,353 43 in Washington Territory. The records of the office do not show clearly why this indebtedness accrued; but it appears that during the years 1860, 1861, and 1862, owing to changes in the offices for the department of Oregon and Washington, funds were not regularly transmitted to defray the current expenses of the service. Superintendents and agents, not being fully advised as to the amount of the funds applicable to the service there, and being necessarily obliged to depart from the rules of the department against incurring any indebtedness, issued vouchers for whatever articles they purchased or whatever labor they hired, without reference to the funds at the disposal of the department to meet them. It is certain that vouchers were issued during those years to an amount greatly exceeding the appropriations then applicable to their payment. They have been presented and paid from time to time since, partly out of funds originally applicable to their payment, and partly out of funds made applicable by virtue of the act of March 3, 1863, authorizing not exceeding $68,000 of unexpended balances of appropriations for the Indian service in Oregon and Washington to be so used. There are now no funds applicable to the payment of these outstanding claims, and none appropriated for the Indian service in Oregon and Washington Territory which could be diverted to that object without seriously embarrassing the service there; yet the claims should be paid. A large portion of them are for labor done under the direction of officers of the Government, while others are for goods or provisions sold to the Government. The parties have lived out of their just dues for four or five years, some of them even longer, and this department is continually in receipt of urgent appeals for the payment of these vouchers.

"I have stated above the amount of these claims now on file in this office. Others have been filed by the claimants and withdrawn again, after a vain endeavor to procure their money; and occasionally a new claim is presented; so that it is impossible to say exactly what sum will be required to pay all the just claims now remaining unpaid. I think, however, that at least $40,000 will be required for the object. I have therefore prepared an estimate," &c.

Now, Mr. President, it is not satisfactory to the committee that this thing should be so; but the facts are, that in consequence of the changes from time to time of the officers on that coast, and the length of time required to make out their bonds there and send them to the office here, before any money could be remitted, the necessities of the Indian service there had to go on, or did go on, and the officers, without waiting for the funds to come, actually incurred expenditures for labor, goods, &c. This indebtedness accrued against the Government in this way, and the department here is charged with it, and annoyed continually by it; and the question is, what shall be done? Shall the debt be repudiated, because in consequence of that state of things the agents on that coast transcended, really, their legal powers from the necessity of the case? The Senator from Oregon can explain more particularly how the matter transpired there, if it is necessary or desirable.

Mr. NESMITH. These liabilities accrued substantially in the way that has been mentioned by the Senator from Wisconsin, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. In 1861 changes were made in all the Indian offices, both in Oregon and Washington Territory. In Washington Territory there were two changes made, and they were made very rapidly, and the first superintendent never had any funds transmitted to him; I believe, at least not until about the close of his term. He was there for some six or eight months before his successor's bonds could be received here, and he be supplied with funds. The same condition of affairs existed in Oregon, except that there was but one appointment of superintendent. We were left there entirely destitute of funds for the prosecution of the business connected with the department, owing to the difficulties growing out of the war, the change in the head of the office here, and the delay in transmitting funds. Those officers found themselves in charge of reservations on which Indian tribes recently hostile had been removed, and there was no alternative left on their part. They had either to continue the business, retain the Indians there, and make sufficient disbursements for their subsistence, and the prosecution of the improvements which were then in process of completion, or they had to abandon the Indians, let them abandon the reservations, turn everything loose, and wait until they could communicate with the department here and get the money which had been appropriated. Those officers had not even been informed of the amounts appropriated. Under this condition of affairs they did employ labor and did make purchases of supplies absolutely necessary for the prosecution of the business there until they could communicate with the department here, and until statements of the different appropriations and the different heads under which they had been appropriated were transmitted to them. It subsequently transpired that they did exceed the amount of the appropriations some thirty-five thousand or perhaps forty thousand dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Over $60,000 has been already appropriated to pay them heretofore, according to the letter which has been read.

Mr. NESMITH. All the claims, with the exception of this balance of $40,000, were paid out of the current appropriations. These are simple additions in excess of the appropriations for those years. The Government has had the supplies and has had the service. The people there have been lying out of their money for three or four years. I think this is a just claim, and that the Government should pay this money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am somewhat familiar with the circumstances under which these claims accrued. I know very well that men in Oregon have advanced their goods and their labor to these Indian agents and received vouchers; that these vouchers have never been paid; and this money, if it is appropriated, will go to persons who are entitled to it, because they have rendered an equivalent for it to the Indian department in good faith. Men have been employed by the Indian agents where the circumstances required that they should be so employed. Of course it was impossible for men who were acting in the capacity of laborers to know whether or not there was an appropriation to meet the particular case. They could only depend upon the vouchers which they received from these Indian agents, and they, of course, expected that upon the presentation of those vouchers, which they had received in good faith, they would be paid for their labor or for their goods or whatever they furnished to the department. But, on the contrary, after making these expenditures of labor and goods, and, in some instances, money, they have been compelled to wait for several years. We know that there is throughout the State of Oregon a feeling that there has been great injustice done by the Government in this respect in not paying these claims. I know of my own knowledge that very many of the claims are claims that ought to be paid by the Government. The Government has received an equivalent. Men have rendered services, given their goods and their property in good faith to the Government, and received their vouchers. When they presented their vouchers there was no money to pay them. I am satisfied that if there is any appropriation that is just this is one, and it ought to be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to move the following amendment, to carry into effect the treaty with the Winnabagoes. It is to insert on page 27, after line six hundred and fifty, the following:

For the erection of saw-mill, with grist-mill attached, on their new reservation, as per third article treaty of March 8, 1865, $10,000.

For expense of branding and fencing one hundred acres of land for each band of said Indians, as per third article of treaty of March 8, 1865, $0,087 60.

For expenses of sowing and planting one hundred acres of land for each band of said Indians, and furnishing seed for the same, as per third article treaty of March 8, 1865, $5,750.

For the purchase of guns for said Indians, as per third article treaty of March 8, 1865, $2,000.

For the purchase of four hundred horses, one hundred cows, twenty yoke of oxen, twenty wagons, and forty chains, as per third article treaty of March 8, 1865, and Senate amendment thereto of February 13, 1866, $60,300.

For the purchase of agricultural implements, as per third article treaty of March 8, 1865, $500.

For the erection of an agency building, school-house, warehouse, and suitable buildings for the physician, carpenter, interpreter, miller, engineer, and blacksmith, on the new reservation of said Indians, as per fourth article treaty of March 8, 1865, $21,000.

For erection of a house for each chief of the said tribe, as per fourth article treaty of March 8, 1865, $22,500.

For expenses of the removal of the property of said Indians to their new homes, as per fifth article treaty of March 8, 1865, $300.

For subsistence of the Winnabagoes for one year after their arrival at their new homes, as per fifth article treaty of March 8, 1865, $95,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment, to come in after line two hundred and thirty, on page 10:

For this amount, being in consideration of certain lands ceded the United States, to be invested and held by the said United States at an interest of not less than five per cent., and to be paid to the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations immediately on the enactment of certain laws regarding persons of African descent residing in said nations, as per third article of the treaty of April 23, 1866, to be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a temporary loan at interest at the rate of five per cent., $300,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause a census of each tribe to be taken, as per first clause eighth article treaty of April 28, 1866, $1,500.

For this amount, to be advanced the Choctaws for the cession of the leased district and the admission of the Kansas Indians, as per forty-sixth article treaty of April 28, 1866, $150,000.

For this amount, to be advanced the Chickasaws for cession of the leased district and the admission of the Kansas Indians, as per forty-sixth article of the treaty of April 28, 1866, $50,000.

For pay of commissioners to be appointed by the President, as per forty-ninth and fiftieth articles of the treaty of April 28, 1866, and Senate amendment thereto, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $1,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On page 56, after line thirteen hundred and fifty-five, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move to insert the following:

Camanches and Kioways:

For first of forty installments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, being an amount equal to ten dollars per capita for four thousand persons—the number agreed upon for the present year—as per fifth article treaty of October 18, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $40,000.

For transportation of goods, provisions, &c., purchased for the Camanche and Kioway Indians, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $8,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is that to carry out a treaty?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I offer the following amendment to come in after the amendment just adopted:

Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and Apaches:

For first of forty installments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the Apache Indians, being an amount equal to twenty dollars per capita for eight hundred persons, as per second article, treaty of October 17, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $16,000.

For transportation of goods, provisions, &c., purchased for the Apache Indians for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On page 17, after line four hundred and five, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move the following appropriation for the Osages:

Interest on $300,000 at five per cent. per annum, to be paid semi-annually in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per first article treaty of September 23, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $15,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of surveying and selling the lands ceded in trust by said Osage Indians, as per thirteenth article treaty of September 29, 1865, $20,000.

For transportation of goods, provisions, &c., purchased for the Great and Little Osage Indians, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I offer the following amendment from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to come in on page 59, after line fourteen hundred and thirty-four:

Klamath and Modok Indians:

For first of five annual installments, to be applied under direction of the President, as per second article treaty of October 14, 1864, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $8,000.

For this amount, to pay for such articles as may be advanced the Indians at the time of signing the treaty, and to subsist them during the first year after their removal to the reservation, the purchase of teams, farming implements, seeds, tools, clothing, and provisions, and salary of the necessary employes, as per third article treaty of October 14, 1864, $35,000.

For the erection of one saw-mill, one flouring-mill, buildings for the blacksmith, carpenter, and wagon and plow maker, the necessary buildings for one manual labor school, and for hospital buildings, as per fourth article treaty of October 14, 1864, $11,300.

For the purchase of tools and material for saw and flour mills, carpenter, blacksmith, wagon and plow maker's shops, and books and stationery for the manual labor school, as per fourth article treaty of October 14, 1864, $1,500.

For first of fifteen installments to pay salary and subsistence of one superintendent of farming, one farmer, one blacksmith, one sawyer, one carpenter, and one wagon and plow maker, as per fifth article treaty of October 14, 1864, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $6,000.

For first of twenty installments to pay salary and subsistence of one physician, one miller, and two school teachers, as per fifth article treaty of October 14, 1864, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $3,600.

For the erection of agency buildings, $4,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is that to carry out a treaty?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have one more amendment to carry into effect the treaty with the Nez Percés. It is on page 35, after line eight hundred and thirty-seven, to insert the following:

For first of four installments to enable the Indians to remove and locate upon the reservation, to be expended in plowing land and fencing lots, as per first clause fourth article treaty of June 9, 1863, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $70,000.

For the purchase of agricultural implements, including wagons or carts, harness, cattle, and sheep, or other stock, as may be deemed most beneficial, as per second clause fourth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $50,000.

For the erection of a saw and flouring mill, to be located at Kamia, as per third clause fourth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $10,000.

For first of the sixteen installments for boarding and clothing the children who shall attend the schools, providing the schools and boarding-houses with necessary furniture, the purchase of necessary wagons, teams, agricultural implements, tools, &c., and for fencing of such lands as may be needed for gardening and farming purposes for the schools, as per fourth clause fourth article treaty of June 9, 1863, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $6,000.

For building two churches, as per fifth clause fourth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $2,500.

For salary of two subordinate chiefs, as per fourth article treaty of June 9, 1863, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $1,000.

For the erection of buildings for the subordinate chiefs, and to plow and fence the land for said chiefs, as well as to procure the necessary furniture, and to complete and furnish the house, &c., of the head chief, as per fifth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $2,500.

For the erection of two school-houses, including boarding-houses and the necessary out-buildings, as per first clause fifth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $10,000.

For the erection of a hospital and providing the necessary furniture, as per second clause fifth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $1,200.

For the erection of a blacksmith shop, to be located at Kamia, to aid in the completion of the smith's shop at the agency, and to purchase the necessary tools, iron, steel, &c., as per third clause fifth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $2,000.

For the erection of houses for employes, repairs of mills, shops, &c., and providing necessary furniture, tools, and materials, as per fourth clause fifth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $3,000.

For salary of two matrons to take charge of the boarding-schools, two assistant teachers, one farmer, one carpenter, and two millers, as per fifth article treaty of June 9, 1863, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $7,600.

For the erection of a house for the Indian chief Timothy, as per sixth article treaty of June 9, 1863, $600.

To pay the claims of certain members of the Nez Percé tribe for services rendered and for horses furnished to the Oregon mounted volunteers on the 6th of March, 1856, at Camp Cornelius, as per seventh article treaty of June 9, 1863, (to be paid in gold,) $4,665.

To enable the President to cause the boundary lines of the reservation to be surveyed and properly marked and established, and the reservation to be surveyed into lots of twenty acres each, as per third article treaty of June 9, 1863, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There is one more amendment which I am authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs to propose to the bill; and that is to add to this appropriation bill the appropriation for which a joint resolution was reported by the committee some time since to pay deficiencies for the support of the Indian refugees in southern superintendencies. I now offer that proposition as an amendment to this bill, to come in as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000 for the payment of supplies already furnished to the destitute Indians of the southern superintendency, for removing them to their homes, and for relieving such destitute persons among said Indians as are in actual want and suffering.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have very great doubts about that amendment. I should be glad to have the attention of the Senator from Ohio to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is more than the amount they claimed of us.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The amount estimated for by the Department was over $700,000. The amount which was actually expended when the question was presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs was $385,000, and the estimates for the expenditures up to the 1st of August were over $700,000. Our committee, after very long and patient investigation into this matter, bringing before us all the agents of these tribes, and the Secretary of the Interior himself also coming before the committee to impart any information that had come to his knowledge and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, became satisfied that, so far as the money which had been expended was concerned, we must make the appropriation; and as to the condition of the Indians, we were fully satisfied that some further appropriation was necessary to keep them from actual starvation. We have cut the thing down, as I think, to the very lowest point, so far as any future or additional expenditure is to be made, that we can do without suffering these people to starve upon our hands.

If the Senate will give me their attention I can state the facts in this case in a single moment. When the war commenced the southern Indians joined the rebellion, with about one half the Creeks and a third or more of the Choctaws, and drove the loyal Indians, as they were called, out of the country, in the depth of winter, into Kansas, to the number of about twenty thousand. Their presence in the State of Kansas gave continual dissatisfaction to the people of Kansas, and we were constantly pressed to pass a law to compel the Interior Department to remove those Indians out of the State of Kansas into the Indian country. At last Congress passed an act which directed the Secretary of the Interior to remove those Indians from the State of Kansas back to their homes. This was undertaken. When they were removed back to their homes, the long and short of the whole story is, there was nothing upon which they could live except some few cattle that were found in the country. Some of them have not reached their homes yet. Complaints have been made that the thing has not been managed with as much wisdom as it might have been. Perhaps those complaints are well founded; but whether it has been managed with the discretion that it ought to have been or not, the truth is the Indians were there; the Indians were upon our hands; the Indians were almost in a state of absolute starvation; and the Government has never fed them any too well. It has cost no large sums of money, it is true. We confiscated the annuities of the Choctaws and all the Indians of the Indian country, and used that money to aid in supporting them. In addition to that, we have been compelled to expend large sums of money out of the Treasury. Let me say to my honorable friend from Ohio that the result to which our committee came, after the fullest examination, was, that we would favor this appropriation of half a million dollars, and that it should be the last. Most of the Indians are now at their homes, and we are making arrangements and treaties with them, and now they must take care of themselves. They can do it. These Indians, in comparison with other Indians, are civilized; and with the assistance we have given them, and the crops growing this year, they will be able to live. That is the real truth. I hope my honorable friends from Ohio and Maine will not resist this appropriation, for it is an appropriation to which we must come at the last. The money has been expended, and it must be paid.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to read extracts from two letters from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon this subject, and then I shall leave the question entirely to the Senate to decide. I know how futile it is to attempt to resist appropriations of this character. We have expended millions in this way. I must confess that these letters, and others, brought me very much to agree to the general proposition to transfer this whole bureau to the War Department. The first letter that I will read is dated May 10, 1866, and addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

"SIR: In compliance with your direction, under date of the 7th instant, I called upon Superintendent Sells on the 8th"—

And here I may say that it was alleged before the Finance Committee that Mr. Sells had a son who was a partner of the contractors furnishing these goods. Although that is not criminally wrong, yet certainly it creates unpleasant impressions.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Upon that subject, if my honorable friend will allow me to interrupt him, I desire to say a word, as it is a matter involving the character of Mr. Sells. It is a fact, I believe, that his son was for a short time connected with Perry, Fuller & Co., in Lawrence; but the moment the attention of the Interior Department was brought to the fact that there was a contract existing between the superintendent and a firm of which his son was a member, an order was at once issued by the Department absolutely forbidding any such kind of contracts being entered into by any agent of the Indian department with any firm in which any relative of the agent or superintendent had any interest whatever. The son of Mr. Sells immediately withdrew from this firm, as I understand the fact to be. The contract to which reference has been made was but for a very small portion of the supplies which were sent to that country. I will say to my honorable friend that this whole subject was before the Indian Committee, and pretty fully investigated, and we became satisfied that there was nothing in the transaction which involved the integrity of Mr. Sells. I felt bound to say this much.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me go on and finish my statement. I am very glad to hear that there was such an order; but the Senate will see at once the connection between what I state now and these letters. Mr. Sells, the superintendent of these Indians, it was said had a son a member of the firm of contractors who, it was alleged, were to have very large and undue sums from the Government for supplying these very Indians. Now, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the 10th of May, wrote this letter to the Secretary of the Interior:

"Sir: In compliance with your direction under date of the 7th instant, I called upon Superintendent Sells on the 8th for an approximate statement of the disbursements made of the funds heretofore placed to his credit, not definitely accounted for, and also an estimate of the amount absolutely necessary to prevent starvation and suffering by the Indians of his superintendency up to the close of July next."

"On this day Superintendent Sells has submitted the report and estimate called for, which, with the letter accompanying it, I have the honor to transmit herewith."

I have that letter.

"I also transmit a letter of Agent Harlan, dated May 1, and letters of Agents Reynolds and Dunn, dated May 8, 1866, relating to the necessity of the expenditures heretofore made by Superintendent Sells, and of a continuance of supplies to the Indians of their respective agencies."

Then, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs very properly says:

"When I became aware of the fact that the expenditures for subsisting and clothing these Indians had exceeded the amount of funds at the disposal of the Department applicable to that object, I directed Superintendent Sells to incur no further expenditures in that behalf. I saw no other safe course to pursue; but I feared then, and am certain now, that great suffering will be the result if steps are not taken to continue the aid of the Government to these destitute Indians."

Here is a very simple proposition. During the session of Congress, while we might have been called upon at any moment, if the money appropriated at the beginning of the session was exhausted, no further appropriation was made, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs directed the local superintendent there to stop all disbursements on this account. If the matter had ended there, there would have been no claim for a deficiency. A few days after, I think the next day, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs wrote another letter, which I believe was also directed to Mr. Harlan, the Secretary of the Interior. Here it is:

"Sir: On the 10th of November last I had the honor to submit an estimate of the funds required to feed and clothe destitute Indians of the southern superintendency for the fourth quarter, 1865, and the first quarter, 1866, and to provide them with agricultural implements and seeds to enable them to provide after this year for their own subsistence."

"The number of these Indians then requiring subsistence was thirty thousand seven hundred and seventy; and the number to be clothed was thirty-two thousand two hundred and seventy. The ravages of war had rendered all these utterly destitute, and dependent on the Government for all the necessities of life."

"The amount of funds called for by Superintendent Sells, at the time stated, to support these Indians for six months, was $1,185,331. This I considered a reasonable sum for the objects in view; but, in submitting the estimate, I reduced the amount to $1,000,000, thinking that, with economy, this would be sufficient."

"In response to this estimate, Congress, on the 23d December, 1865, authorized a transfer of $500,000 from appropriations remaining unexpended for the suppression of the African slave trade, to the objects for which funds were then asked."

I do not exactly see the connection between the two subjects; but it seems that this agent asked for $1,185,000; the bureau here reduced it to $1,000,000; and the Indian Committee then came in, and Congress, upon their motion, appropriated $500,000. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs goes on and says:

"This sum would not provide subsistence alone for these Indians. It allowed about nine cents per day to each person for the time designated. Winter being upon them, clothing was as necessary to prevent starvation as food."

"Of the fund placed at the disposal of the Department for the support of these Indians, $480,000 were expended by the superintendent, and the residue has been expended by Special Agent E. T. Smith for provisions furnished the Indians by him at points where no regular agent was stationed."

"The statement of Superintendent Sells, which I had the honor to transmit to you on the 10th instant, (the day of its receipt,) shows that up to March 1, 1866, he had expended $227,159 68 more than had up to that time been placed in his hands."

How could a superintendent of Indian affairs, in a remote region, dare take upon himself the responsibility of expending a quarter of a million dollars without any authority of law, when Congress had refused to make the appropriation? Then, sir, this pregnant question came before us, where did he get this money to expend? Did he run in debt or allow these contractors to go on furnishing supplies after the money appropriated by Congress had been exhausted? Was that the mode; or did he pay this money out of his own pocket? We supposed that no Indian superintendent could pay this sum out of his own pocket. The probability is that he allowed the contractors to go on under the old contracts to furnish supplies. We had no other information than this letter. What right had he, though, a subordinate officer of the Government, against the order by his own superior, who directed him not to expend more than the amount appropriated, and who states to us in this letter that he directed him not to expend more than the appropriation; what authority had he to expend more than a quarter of a million dollars without authority of law, when Congress was in session, and when no request was made of Congress to appropriate money for this purpose? These letters were laid before the Committee on Finance and they could not help but have an influence upon our action. I will read on.

"The sum of $50,000 has since been remitted to him leaving a deficiency of $177,159 68 up to that date."

"The estimate of Superintendent Sells for funds required to cover this deficiency, and continue the subsistence of these Indians up to the end of July next (the time when their crops may become available) is for $777,712 18; but as he credits $45,000 instead of $50,000 since March 1, it should be $772,712 18; as follows:

For deficiency up to March 1, 1866.....	$177,159 68
For subsistence for 12,850 loyal Creeks, Seminoles, and Wichitas, from March 1, to July 31, 1866, 153 days, @ 15 cents per day each.....	343,102 50
For subsistence 16,500 Indians of mixed tribes, from March 1 to July 31, 1866, 153 days, @ 10 cents per day each.....	252,450 00
	$772,712 18

"That these Indians are destitute, and will really suffer starvation if not provided for by the Government, there can be no doubt; and I do not think the necessary relief can be furnished for a less sum than that indicated by the superintendent."

"In my communication of the 10th instant I stated that I had directed Superintendent Sells—"

And here I wish again to call the attention of the Senate—

"to discontinue expenditures for the support of these Indians. Although I am assured that they are now suffering for food, I do not feel authorized to revoke this order until funds are appropriated to meet such expenditures."

That is what Mr. Cooley says, and very properly says, that he directed Superintendent Sells to stop these expenditures. This is his second letter; and yet in the face of that it seems that he went on and expended the money, without regard to Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to my friend that the Commissioner says that by looking at the dates the Senator will see that it was not until after the indebtedness had been incurred that he directed Mr. Sells to stop the expenditure.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that; but then only $177,000 had accrued up to that time. That was the deficiency.

Mr. STEWART. How much is it now?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know. This letter continues:

"I cannot therefore too strongly urge early action in this matter by Congress. When human creatures are starving I cannot hear their complaints with indifference; and I feel strongly the embarrassment of being utterly unable to respond to their calls for assistance."

That is the condition of affairs. This officer undertook, anticipating an appropriation, to expend $500,000 when Congress was in session, and against the orders of his own superior, unless there is some discrepancy in the dates, and I give you the letter as it was furnished to us. Under these circumstances it seemed to us proper to stop these appropriations. There were a great many other things stated in regard to these Indian matters that I do not care about repeating now, because I never like to deal in matters of fact unless I have the proof before me, or some responsible party makes the allegations; but I take the statement furnished here that these Indians have absorbed more than $1,000,000, considerably more than the amount appropriated for them, and that now we are asked to appropriate $500,000 more. I show you that the estimate made for these expenditures up to the 1st of July next is $777,000. I ask what assurance we have, if we should now appropriate this $500,000, that we should not have to make good a deficiency of another $500,000 hereafter. What restraint have we over the expenditure of this money? What right had Mr. Sells to go on and expend money in advance of an appropriation by Congress for an indefinite purpose of this kind, especially when the allegation is made to us by persons interested in this fund—an allegation that is not controverted or denied—that contracts were made with a firm doing business in Arkansas and the Indian Territory for flour at thirty-four dollars a barrel and corn at eight dollars a bushel? Under these circumstances I submit whether a provident care of the public money should not compel us to resort to some other management of Indian affairs.

I do not complain of the action of the Senate in regard to the proposed transfer of this bureau to the War Department, because I am not sure but what there would be the same complaints arising if this money were expended by the War Department; but it seems to me there ought to be some reforms, some control, some checks. Now Superintendent Sells in the disbursement of these large sums of money is as absolute as a dictator. It seems from these letters that he must have violated the orders of his superior, because Mr. Cooley tells us on the 10th of May that he directed the discontinuance of these expenditures, and that up to the 1st of March the amount of expenditure in excess of the appropriation was $177,000. I want to know where that money was got. Was it drawn out of the Treasury without an appropriation? Certainly not, because the accounting officers would not allow them to do it. Was it money due to the contractors who were going on furnishing supplies after the fund was exhausted? If so, they did it at their peril. Was it in violation of the orders of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs? If so, certainly it has no claim here, before Congress. Who paid out that money? Where was it got? How could they expend the money without an appropriation? All these were questions that we could not answer. The Committee on Finance, therefore, did not act upon these appropriations, simply because we had not satisfactory information on the subject.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate, but will call to mind two or three things in a very few words. It will be remembered that this estimate from the Interior Department came at the very beginning of the session. The estimate then was $1,100,000 for the purpose of keeping these Indians from starving until something could grow out of the ground for them to eat. It went to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It seemed very large. We had already paid out a great deal of money for these Indians. A proposition was made to furnish $500,000, and as Congress would not probably adjourn until spring, if that could not carry them on we would pass another appropriation and help the thing through. We could not let these Indians starve on our hands. They were our friends, who had been driven into Kansas on account of their loyalty to the Government. Under a law of Congress the Secretary of the Interior had been compelled to take them back to their own country, where there was no corn and no vegetation growing. They were on our hands. It was in the winter when nothing would grow. The fact is that we did appropriate that $500,000, and the Department has been constantly pressing on us the consideration of this additional appropriation which would be necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. Who furnished the money to Mr. Sells?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not know. I suppose the contractors made contracts for the delivery of these goods. I presume they have kept delivering them right along.

Now, Mr. President, the Committee on Indian Affairs, looking the subject all over, being just as anxious as we could be to get rid of this expenditure, came finally to the conclusion to recommend the appropriation of $500,000, which will pay for what has been expended, and leave about one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars to carry the thing along until the 1st of August. By that time we thought these Indians could live from what grew out of the ground in that country, and what game they could secure or fish they could take in the river. Up to that point we were willing to go; but there the matter was to stop, and that was to be the end of any of this expenditure for the purpose of sustaining these refugee Indians. That was our conclusion. It was with that view that we recommended the passage of the joint resolution which we reported, and which we now propose to put as an amendment on this bill. It seems to us to be a necessity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask how many Indians there are that the Department has been feeding.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There were about twenty thousand of the northern Indians, and some things were furnished after the war was over to some of the southern Indians, who were suffering also. I have here a detailed estimate, not made by Superintendent Sells, going into all the details. We put the amount down to the very lowest figure that we could. It would not do to let these Indians starve and let their blood be upon our hands. Their rations are as low as they can possibly be to live, in my opinion. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will state that there are some two or three matters connected with Indian affairs in relation to some deficiencies, one of them in the Territory of Nevada, but they did not come to the committee in time to enable us to consider them sufficiently to offer them to this bill. We propose therefore to offer them hereafter upon the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I offer the following amendment to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That any loyal person, a citizen of the United States, of good moral character, shall be permitted to trade with any Indian tribe upon giving bond in the penal sum of not less than $5,000 nor more than $10,000, with at least two good securities, to be approved by the superintendent of the district within which such person proposes to trade, renewable each year, conditioned that such person will faithfully observe all the laws and regulations made for the government of trade and intercourse with Indian tribes, and in no respect violate the same: Provided, That the laws now in force regulating trade and intercourse with Indian tribes, affecting licensed traders, and prescribing the powers and duties of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, superintendents, agents, and sub-agents in connection therewith, shall be continued in force and apply to traders under this provision, except as herein otherwise provided.

When the bill was under consideration in the Senate which came from the special committee, I believe, of which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] was chairman, I submitted an amendment in general terms embodying the idea that is embraced in this amendment. It was adopted with great unanimity by the Senate, and went to the House of Representatives; but the bill still lingers in that body. The amendment which I have now offered is the substance of that, except that it has been redrawn by a colleague of mine who is a member of the Indian Committee in the House of Representatives.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not think there can be any objection to the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. The bill remains unacted upon in the House of Representatives in consequence of some inability to report it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If I understand that amendment, the party gives a bond to comply with all the regulations for keeping whisky and contraband articles out of the Indian country. That is so, is it not?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the title of the bill was amended by adding the words, "and for other purposes."

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 222) entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference they have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to the first amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill; and that it agree to the second amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, and that it agree to the third amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, and that it agree to the fourth amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill.

That the Senate agree to the fifth amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill with an amendment as follows: "in all cases where the possession of such goods shall be shown to be in the defendant, or where the defendant shall be shown to have had possession thereof, such possession shall be deemed evidence sufficient to authorize conviction, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury."

That the Senate agree to the sixth amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, and that the Senate agree to the seventh amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill.

Z. CHANDLER,

JOHN CONNESS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS D. ELIOT,

JOHN L. THOMAS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was Ordered, That the petition of Denis Sullivan, of Alexandria, Louisiana, praying for compensation for property destroyed by forces of the United States, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a resolution tendering the thanks of Congress to the working men of Lyons, France, for the presentation of a silken flag in memory of the late President Lincoln, to the Government of the United States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 613) to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 37) making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas;

A bill (S. No. 58) granting land to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from Corvallis to the Aquina bay;

A bill (S. No. 99) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Albany, Oregon to the eastern boundary of said State;

A bill (S. No. 156) making additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State;

A bill (S. No. 168) to provide for the disposal of certain lands therein named;

A bill (S. No. 221) relating to lands granted to the State of Minnesota to aid in constructing railroads;

A bill (H. R. No. 725) to provide for the payment of the sixth, eighth, and eleventh regiments of Ohio volunteer militia, of Cincinnati, Bard's company of cavalry, and Paulsen's battery, during the time they were in the service of the United States in 1862;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867;

A bill (H. R. No. 613) to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 683) for the relief of J. Judson Barclay.

THANKS TO WORKING MEN OF LYONS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the thanks of Congress be, and are hereby, tendered to the working men of Lyons, France, who have presented a silken flag prepared at their instance by the Weavers' Association of that city in memory of the late President Lincoln, and intended to be displayed at the ceremonies of Congress on the 12th of February last; and that the flag be deposited with the archives of the Government in the State Department.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate concur with the House of Representatives in that resolution. It is not necessary that it should be referred. I have examined it at the desk.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOWARD. My colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is about to be absent for the purpose of visiting his home, and I venture to ask for him leave of absence for one week from this time.

Leave was granted.

MASSACHUSETTS MILITARY CLAIMS.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia to report a joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the auditing of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense.

The joint resolution was read a first time by its title and passed to a second reading.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have that resolution acted upon at the present time. It proposes to authorize the appointment of two commissioners to examine into the claims of the State of Massachusetts for something like four hundred thousand dollars expended for coast defense. A joint resolution on this subject was reported the other day by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. SPRAGUE,] from the Military Committee, but objection was made to it at the time; and in order to get the facts of the case this resolution proposes the appointment of two commissioners by the Secretary of War to examine into the subject.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us have it printed, so that we can see what it looks like.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the resolution now reported by him may be considered at the present time.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to see it in print.

Mr. WILSON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution lies over under the rule.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 405.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 405) making appropriation for the construction and repair of the levees of the Mississippi river, in the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas, and for the improvement of the river, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates the sum of $1,500,000 to reconstruct and repair the levees on the Mississippi river, in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas. This sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the purpose mentioned, as follows: $595,000 in the State of Louisiana, $655,000 in the State of Mississippi, and $250,000 in the State of Arkansas, as nearly as may be, with a proper regard to the efficiency of the repair. The Secretary of War is, at the next session of Congress, to make an accurate and detailed report to each House of the amount of money expended under this act; the amount of work done, how, and in what manner; where, and by whom; the particular levees repaired or reconstructed; the rates paid for work and material; the condition of the levees; the area protected by such repairs or reconstruction, and what sums, if any, remain unexpended.

Mr. CLARK. There was a report submitted by the committee who had this subject in charge, and I will ask for the reading of the report, as it states the matter as succinctly as I could do it.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. CLARK on the 2d instant, from the select committee on the subject:

The select committee appointed by the Senate, to whom was referred the memorial from the boards of levee commissioners for the State of Louisiana and the Yazoo valley district of the State of Mississippi, praying the aid of Congress in the reconstruction of the levees on the Mississippi river, submit the following report:

The subject of protecting the alluvial lands in the valley of the Mississippi river from overflow by its annual floods has in former years engaged the attention of Congress, and various legislative provisions have been adopted having that object in view. Levees constructed by private exertion in the State of Louisiana had reclaimed a large body of swamp land, stated as high as two million acres, which was sold and the proceeds carried to the public Treasury. In consideration of the benefit thus derived, and for other reasons, by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1849, the remaining swamp lands in Louisiana were donated to that State for levee purposes. By the act of Congress approved 28th September, 1850, the same provision was extended to Arkansas and other States in which alluvial and overflowed lands existed.

By the act of Congress approved September 30, 1850, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, the sum of $50,000 was appropriated for the "topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, with such investigations as may tend to determine the most practicable plan for securing it from inundation, and the best mode of so deepening the passes at the mouth of the river as to allow ships of twenty feet draught to enter the same."

By the act of Congress approved August 31, 1852, making appropriations for the Army, an additional appropriation of $50,000 was made "for continuing the topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, with such investigations as may tend to determine the most practicable plan for securing it from inundation."

In pursuance of these appropriations extended surveys and investigations were carried on for several years under the direction of Captain (now Major General) A. A. Humphreys, of the United States Engineer corps; and the report prepared by this officer was submitted in August, 1861, to the War Department.

In December last General Humphreys was instructed by the War Department to make an examination of the river, with a view to the speedy repair of the principal breaks in the levees. This survey was completed by the 8th of January last; but as neither General Canby nor the War Department possessed the requisite means for the execution of the repairs, no work on the levees was done. General Humphreys's report of this survey has been communicated to the Senate, and has materially facilitated the labors of the committee.

The country which will be protected by a proper system of levees is the alluvial bottom of the Mississippi river, of great and inexhaustible fertility. Its area is stated by General Humphreys at "31,700 square miles; of which a mere narrow strip, along the banks of the river and along a few bayous, has been opened for cultivation. Of this area 12,300 square miles is below Red river, and belongs to the sugar region. Under a proper system of drainage one third of it may be eventually opened and cultivated, to wit, 2,500,000 acres. There are now under cultivation in this region about 1,000,000 acres. Of the remaining 19,400 square miles, perhaps 3,000 square miles may be north of the cotton-growing region, leaving some 16,000 square miles within that region, of the most fertile alluvion, two thirds of which may be finally rendered cultivable under a proper system of leveeing and draining. This would give 7,000,000 acres of cultivated land, capable of growing a bale of cotton to the acre."

This product would be much larger than any crop yet raised in the United States.

The first levees were made by individual effort. Then came county and district organizations in the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, under the sanction of the State authority; and at the beginning of the war much had been effected for this important object. But the outbreak of hostilities stopped the progress of the work. During the war many breaks occurred by the action of the floods, and at some points large openings in the levees were cut for military purposes. In four years nothing was done for protection or repairs; and the work of repair by the State of Louisiana during the past winter did not withstand the spring freshet, and has for the most part been swept away.

The important branches in the levees are enumerated in the report of General Humphreys, and are described in detail; but it is known that some others have occurred since his survey was made, and those which then existed have been much enlarged. The number of acres now overflowed cannot be stated except approximately; but it appears that thirteen of the most fertile parishes of Louisiana are nearly or quite desolated, while others are partly overflowed. To this must be added much the larger portion of the cultivated lands in the Yazoo valley district of Mississippi, and nearly the whole of the cultivated alluvial country in eastern Arkansas.

General Humphreys estimates for the complete and permanent repair of all the levees of the river as follows:

	Cubic yards.
For the State of Arkansas.....	3,000,000	$1,200,000
For the State of Mississippi.....	1,500,000	1,500,000
For the State of Louisiana.....	3,000,000	1,200,000

Total for permanent repairs of all the levees, $3,900,000

It is urged, however, by the delegates of the levee commissioners that the above sum would be insufficient, and to provide for smaller breaks, and the recent caving of the banks, large additional amounts must be raised either by the Government or by the people in that country.

The committee are satisfied that the people of these States are unable, without aid from the Government, to undertake and complete the necessary repairs. At present there is a general bankruptcy of means. They possess neither the labor nor the money; and, with overflowed lands and general pecuniary distress, it is impossible for them to command credit. In the State of Louisiana thousands of families have been forced to fly from their homes and are supported by public and private charity. And in districts where the distress has been less immediate, the fruits of industry have been swept away by successive floods. But, even if this impoverishment did not exist, so numerous and so large are the crevasses in the river that it would hardly be practicable to rescue any large portion of the country by the unaided efforts of the people. Unless the resources of the nation be promptly interposed, a large extent of country, supporting a numerous population of both races, must be abandoned and will speedily relapse into its original wild and uncultivated condition, and the general prosperity of the country very sensibly affected.

The question would seem, therefore, to be as to the extent to which, in view of the pressing need of the people and the great national interests at stake, relief should be afforded by the Government. That this relief should assume the form of an appropriation for a work of an extensive nature, and demanding a large sum for its completion, does not appear advisable in the present condition of the Treasury. The committee are of opinion that the amount of aid to be granted should be limited to repairing, in an effective and durable manner, those important breaches which are beyond the power of individual or local effort, and by the closing of which large districts formerly cultivated may be rescued from the floods, until by one or more crops the planters may be able to provide for their own security. Having in view these principles and the extent to which these works may be aided by the efforts of the resident population, the committee submit a bill, the effect of which they confidently believe will be the reclamation of a large body of land in season for the crop of the next year.

The committee propose to confide this work to the United States Government engineers under the direction of the War Department.

It is hardly necessary to enlarge upon the great national and political importance of this measure. The area of land now proposed to be rescued from the floods, by the repair of the levees, is the Yazoo bottom of the State of Mississippi, the Tensas bottom of Arkansas and Louisiana, and the delta of the Mississippi. These bottoms are of vast extent and embrace the richest cotton and sugar lands of the United States; and, for the production of the first-named staple are second to none upon the globe. In the State of Mississippi 300,000 acres of cultivated land will be redeemed, and in Louisiana a much larger portion. In the first-named State it is claimed by the memorialists that if this protection be afforded there will be a crop of 300,000 bales of cotton grown in the Yazoo district, in addition to other products, the ensuing year. In the State of Louisiana the memorialists refer to the State census of 1859, to show that the product of cotton in this overflowed section was 294,044 bales, and of sugar 269,828 hogheads, making with other productions at their current prices a value of $105,656,094. These statements are fully sustained by the report of General Humphreys. By this document it appears that the cotton crop of 1860, of that portion of the alluvial region above the mouth of Red river, where it is proposed to make repairs, must have exceeded 600,000 bales, which at thirty cents per pound would be worth $72,000,000. The sugar crop of 1860 of the country below Red river proposed to be protected, he states, was 241,000 hogheads of sugar and 317,000 barrels of molasses; the value of which, at present prices, would be over $40,000,000.

The annual tax upon this raw cotton alone, at two cents per pound, would be $4,800,000. Even assuming that it will take three or four years for the normal production to be restored, we still have an income of millions of dollars as the annual product from this tax. This is, however, a single item only. The commercial transactions incident to the growth, sale, and shipment of these staples, the manufacture of the cotton, or its shipment to foreign ports, involves a return to the revenue of many millions of dollars, and makes this measure of relief to the people one of relief also to the revenues and to the present taxpayers of the country. The effect that a largely augmented crop of cotton in the coming year would have upon the exchanges, thereby reducing the shipment of gold to foreign ports, and the consequent effect upon the public currency and credit, are considerations of grave importance, but too obvious to require more than a suggestion by the committee. Nor should it be forgotten that anterior to the war a great and growing trade existed between this valley and the other portions of the Union. Its supplies of grain, meat, mules, &c., came in large measure from the States which are situated upon the upper waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries. Its staples were carried by the shipping of the eastern States to the points of consumption and manufacture. The eastern States supplied also the manufactures of cotton, woolen, iron, steel, shoes, and other articles, and the agricultural implements required by the people of this section. To restore this trade, to revive the prosperity of this section, to develop its industry, and by a recovered prosperity and an enlargement of commercial intercourse, to renew and strengthen those feelings of affection which ought to exist among the people of the different portions of the country, are objects which will not be deemed of light importance, and will more than justify the measure presented by the committee.

For four years the national Government has been struggling with the people of this portion of the country to secure the recognition of its authority and to preserve the Union of the States. In the progress of this war this section has been desolated and much suffering inflicted on the inhabitants. The industry which once so largely contributed to the general prosperity has been interrupted, and every interest now lies prostrate. The contest having terminated by the submission of the inhabitants to the authority of the national Government, it is believed that every proper aid should be given to these people to renew their industry and to develop the rich productions of their soil. Such a measure of relief as the one proposed would be to them a proof of the liberal and impartial spirit in which it is proposed to administer the Government, and would create that fraternal feeling which it is so desirable to foster and maintain by all appropriate means.

The power of Congress to improve harbors and rivers has been long exercised, and is not doubted by the committee. Experience demonstrates that unless the waters of this river be limited to its proper bounds, the result is a deposit of earth or alluvion gradually filling up the mouth and increasing the bars of the river. The restoration of the levees will give greatly increased volume and force to the waters, and remove the impediments to navigation, while it will rescue from annual devastating floods a vast area of land of wonderful fertility, capable of supporting, with a well-ordered industry, millions of inhabitants, ministering largely by their products to the national wealth and to the wants of the civilized world.

It is the part of wisdom to restore the breaches and desolated places which wasting elements and a more wasting civil war have made. Whosoever may have been the folly to pull down, let ours be the magnanimity and the effort to build up.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless the Senator wants to go on with this bill to-day, I wish to move an executive session.

Mr. CLARK. I was about to say that I did not propose to carry this bill to its passage to-day. My object in calling it up and having it read and having the report read was to call the attention of Senators to it. It is a very important measure, and it will need undoubtedly the action of the Senate. I intend to call the attention of the Senate to it again at a very early day. I will now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment to enable me to get some House amendments to a Senate bill concurred in.

Mr. CLARK. I have no objection to that, if it will not displace this bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

FOLSOM AND PLACERVILLE RAILROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to take up for consideration the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 125) granting aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California.

The motion was agreed to. The amendments of the House of Representatives were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the first section and the second section of the bill and in lieu thereof insert, "that the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of California, and designated by the Legislature thereof to construct the road hereinafter named, and to its successors and assigns for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in said State, and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said right of way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass over the public lands; also, all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water stations."

In section three strike out all after the word "officers," where it occurs the second time in line thirteen, to and including the word "sections," in line twenty-one.

In section four, line two, strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."

In section four, line twelve, after the word "are," strike out to and including the word "are," in line thirteen.

In section four, line thirteen, strike out after the word "act" to and including the word "completed," in line fifteen.

Add to section four, "Provided, That said commissioners named in this section shall be paid by the company ten dollars per day for the time actually employed, and ten cents per mile for the distance actually and necessarily traveled each way."

In section five, line three, strike out "draws" and insert "drains."

In section five, line thirteen, strike out "like transportation and,"

Add to section five, "that the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free of all toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States, and the same shall be transported over said road at the cost, charges, and expenses of the corporation or company owning or operating the same when required by the United States to do so."

Add to section six, "and the sections and parts of sections which by the aforesaid grant shall remain in the United States within ten miles on each side of said road shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of public lands when sold."

In section seven, line six, strike out "two" and insert "one."

At the end of section seven strike out "seventy" and insert "sixty-nine."

In section eight, line seven, strike out all after the word "case" to the end of the section and insert in lieu thereof "the title to the public lands herein reserved for the construction of said road shall revert to the United States."

In section ten, line six, strike out "two" and insert "one."

In section twelve, line five, strike out "two" and insert "one."

In section thirteen, line one, after "that," strike out to and including the word "purposes," in line six.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the amendments be concurred in.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I inquire whether these amendments have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not been. The bill is returned from the House of Representatives with these amendments. This is the first time the Senate has been called to act on them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator whether the chairman of the committee has examined them.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe not. But as the amendments are all restrictive of the Senate bill and reducing the grant made, I supposed there would be no objection to a concurrence in them. The amendments are all restrictive on the bill as it passed the Senate. I have examined them closely.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot tell much about it from the mere reading of the amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in the consideration of executive business the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 3, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ACCOUNTS OF HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. KERR, from the Committee of Accounts, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is ordered by this House that hereafter it shall be the duty of every officer or employé of the same, before presenting for payment or approval to the Committee of Accounts, any account or claim for service or labor or material, to cause the same to be duly certified to be correct by the proper officer, and to procure an affidavit to be attached thereto, signed and sworn to by the officer under whose immediate supervision such account or claim accrued, setting forth that the same is just and correct, and that the amount thereof is the true amount required by law or the order of this House, or that it is the amount due upon contract and is the usual price for such service, labor, or thing, and that no officer or person except the one named therein, has any interest, directly or indirectly, in such account or claim.

Mr. KERR. I demand the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KERR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. COFFROTH, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of John McGorish, asking for a pension, reported adversely from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and also the letter of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of Pensions on the same case.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD, EASTERN DIVISION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. A bill explanatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864, was set down as a special order for to-day. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who is interested in it, informs me that he is quite unwell, and as the bill is not yet returned from the printer, I move that it be postponed until Thursday next, after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU BILL.

Mr. ELIOT. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Freedmen's Bureau bill.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bill of the House of Representatives No. 613, entitled "An act to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed and do agree to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the first and second amendment as made by the Senate.

That the House agree to the third amendment made by the Senate, with the following amendments: Strike out the word "having," on page 2, line five, of said amendment, and insert the word "has."

Strike out on pages 4 and 5, in section eleven of the amendment, the words "upon completion of the transfers of the said lands in the manner specified in the preceding section, the President of the United States shall have power to return to their former owners the lands now occupied by persons under General Sherman's special field order dated at Savannah, Georgia, January 16, 1865, excepting such lands as may have been sold by the United States for taxes, but such," and insert after the word "restoration," on page 5, line six, of the amendment, the words "of lands occupied by freedmen under General Sherman's field order dated at Savannah, Georgia, January 16, 1865."

Insert on page 5 of the amendment, in line nine, after the word "them," the words "by the former owners of such lands or their legal representatives."

Strike out on page 5 of the amendment, in section twelve, line four, the words "owned by or claimed as the property of the," and insert the words "held under color of title by the late."

Strike out on page 5 of the amendment, section twelve, in lines nine and ten, the words "be withdrawn States which" and insert the words "cease to exist, such of said so-called confederate States as shall."

That the House agree to the fourth amendment as made by the Senate.

That the Senate agree to the above-named amendments to the third amendment as made by them.

HENRY WILSON,
IRA HARRIS,
J. W. NESMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THOMAS D. ELIOT,
JOHN A. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ELIOT. I demand the previous question on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HALE. I would inquire if the amendments of the Senate have been printed.

Mr. ELIOT. Yes, sir; long ago. Everything has been printed except the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HALE. I hope the gentleman will explain the report.

Mr. ELIOT. I am asked by the gentleman from New York to explain the amendments of the Senate, and I will do so.

Mr. Speaker, the first amendment which the Senate made to the bill as it was passed by the House was simply an enlargement of one of the sections of the House bill, which provided that the volunteer medical officers engaged in the medical department of the bureau might be continued, inasmuch as it was expected that the medical force of the regular Army would be speedily reduced to the minimum, and in that case all the regular officers would be wanted in the service. It was therefore thought right that there should be some force connected with the Bureau of Refugees and Freedmen. The Senate enlarged the provisions of the House bill by providing that officers of the volunteer service now on duty might be continued as assistant commissioners and other officers, and that the Secretary of War might fill vacancies until other officers could be detailed from the regular Army. That is the substance of the first material amendment.

The next amendment strikes out a portion of one of the sections of the House bill, which related to the officers who serve as medical officers of the bureau, because it was provided for in the amendment to which I have just referred.

The next amendment strikes out from the House bill the section which set apart, reserved from sale, a million acres of land in the Gulf States. It may perhaps be recollected that when the bill was reported from the committee, I stated that in case the bill which the House had then passed, and which was known as the homestead bill, and which was then before the Senate, should become a law, this section of the bill would not be wanted. The bill referred to has become a law, and this section five providing for that reservation has therefore been stricken from the bill.

The next amendment made by the Senate was to strike out a section of the House bill which simply provided that upon application for restoration by the former owners of the land assigned under General Sherman's field order, the application should not be complied with. That section is stricken out and another substituted for it, which provides that certain lands, which are now owned by the United States, having been purchased by the United States under tax commissioners' sales, shall be assigned in lots of twenty acres to freedmen who have had allotments under General Sherman's field order, at the price for which the lands were purchased by the United States; and not only that those freedmen should have such allotments, but that other freedmen who had had lots assigned to them under General Sherman's field order, and who may have become dispossessed of their land, should have assignments made to them of these lands belonging to the United States. I think the justice of that provision will strike every one. And it will be perhaps a merit in the eyes of many that it does not call upon the Treasury for the expenditure of any money. In the bill which was passed by the House it will be recollected that there was a provision under which there should be purchased by the Commissioner of the bureau enough public lands to be substituted for the lands at first assigned to freedmen. Instead of that, provision is made by which they can have property belonging to the United States which has come into its possession under tax sales, and where the titles have been made perfect by lapse of time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. What is the price at which these lands are to be sold to freedmen?

Mr. ELIOT. A dollar and a half an acre.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. That is not the cost to the Government.

Mr. ELIOT. I ought to state that the price is fixed in the bill at $1 50 an acre. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WASHBURN] says that is not the cost to the Government. I am not so familiar with the facts as to be able to state how that is.

The next amendment of the Senate provides that certain lands which were purchased by the United States at tax sales, and which are now held by the United States, should be sold at prices not less than ten dollars an acre, and that the proceeds should be invested for the support of schools, without distinction of color or race, on the islands in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke. That is all the provision which was made for education. It will be remembered that in the other bill there was a provision which was deemed pretty elaborate and pretty extensive. That provision was stricken out and the provision of the Senate is a substitute for it.

The next amendment, or rather a part of one long amendment, consists of two sections that merely provide for carrying into execution the prior sections to which I have referred.

The only other material amendment made by the Senate gives to the Commissioner of the bureau power to take property of the late confederate States, held by them or in trust for them, and which is now in charge of the Commissioner of the bureau—to take that property and devote it to educational purposes. The amendment further provides that when the bureau shall cease to exist, such of the late so-called confederate States as shall have made provision for education without regard to color should have the balance of money remaining on hand, the same to be divided among them in proportion to their population.

I believe I have gone over the amendments which have been made by the Senate, and I hope I have explained them so as to be understood by my friend from New York, [Mr. HALE.] I now call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] that we cannot tell at this time just what this bill is. It has never been printed as amended by the committee of conference. We can only judge as to its present form by what has been said by the gentleman. I do wish that the gentleman would consent to have it printed in the form in which it has come from the committee of conference, so that we may understand it. We understand this much, and this alone, that there is "nigger" in its head, "nigger" in its bowels, and "nigger" in its heels. I suppose that it is "nigger" all through; but whatever may be its character we would like to understand it.

Mr. UPSON. I raise the question of order that debate is not in order, the previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The House is acting under the operation of the previous question, and debate is not in order.

The question being on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference,

Mr. FINCK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FINCK called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. FINCK. I move that the report of the committee of conference be laid on the table, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 25, nays 102, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Boyer, Coffroth, Dawson, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Johnson, Kerr, Le Blond, Marshall, Niblack, Noell, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, and Trimble—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brownell, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Deeming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Bekley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingorsoll, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Laflin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, McClurg, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—102.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banks, Baxter, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Broomall, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Defrees, Delano, Denison, Dumont, Goodyear, Grider, Griswold, Harris, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jencks, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kuykendall, Loan, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Moulton, Nicholson, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Van Aernam, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—55.

So the House refused to lay the report on the table.

The question recurring on agreeing to the report, it was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THANKS TO WORKING MEN OF LYONS.

Mr. RAYMOND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the thanks of Congress be, and they are hereby, tendered to the working men of Lyons, France, who have presented a silken flag, prepared at their instance by the Weavers' Association of that city, in memory of the late President Lincoln, and intended to be displayed at the ceremonies of Congress on the 12th of February last, and that the flag be deposited with the archives of the Government in the State Department.

Mr. RAYMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL REPORTS OF 1864.

Mr. LAFLIN. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution providing for printing twenty-five thousand extra copies of the Agricultural Report of 1864, have directed me to ask that they be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and to move that it be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was not agreed to—ayes 45, noes 55.

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolution.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 725) to provide for the payment of the sixth, eighth, and eleventh regiments of Ohio volunteer militia, of Cincinnati, Bard's company of cavalry, and Paulsen's battery, during the time they were in the service of the United States; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition in Paris in 1867.

RAILROAD TO PORTLAND, OREGON.

Mr. BIDWELL had, under the rules, entered upon the Journal a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 123, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad in California to Portland in Oregon," with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, was recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT—AGAIN.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 25; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. LAFLIN and Mr. ANCONA.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes seventy-three, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. LAFLIN. I rise, under the rules, to close the debate on the resolution.

Mr. ANCONA. I rise to a question of order, that the gentleman from New York is not entitled to the privilege of closing the debate after the previous question has been seconded for the reason that he has reported against the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order. The rules allow the member who reports a proposition, after the previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered, to close the debate.

Mr. ANCONA. Does not the gentleman from New York lose his privilege because he has reported against the adoption of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. He does not.

Mr. ANCONA. I thought, when my motion prevailed against the report, I would of course be entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The ground for the decision of the Chair has been fully stated heretofore. No member, after a bill or resolution has been reported, can cut off the right of the member reporting the proposition to close the debate. The rule is exactly appropriate to this case.

Mr. LAFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition, neither has the Committee on Printing, to act in opposition to the general wish of the House; but with that committee I am satisfied the House is acting under a misapprehension. If it were not for that I should not have availed myself of the privilege granted to me as chairman of that committee to discuss the resolution before the House.

This resolution does not apply to the Agricultural Report of 1865, but to an Agricultural Report of which a very large edition has been printed and distributed. I wish to state a fact for the House to consider before they proceed in this summary manner to vote on the resolution calling for the printing of twenty-five thousand extra copies of an Agricultural Report. I am told by my associate on the committee from West Virginia, [Mr. LATHAM,] who has given this subject special investigation, that a large edition already has been printed of this Agricultural Report, and that the electrotype plates are so worn that it will be impossible to print this edition of twenty-five thousand extra copies without renewing them altogether.

I would like to know where the argument is to come from that will drive us to the necessity at this time of publishing a new book, requiring resetting from beginning to end, at an expenditure not to be estimated in the ordinary way at a dollar and a half or two dollars a volume. It would amount to thousands of dollars to print twenty-five thousand copies of the Report of 1864. So far as the type are concerned, they are now distributed, and it will really be the publication of a new book.

Mr. ROSS. I believe the plates of the Report for 1863 allowed us to have seven hundred and fifty copies each. The gentleman has been very liberal in reporting for all printing except that which is beneficial to the farmers of the country. He has now persistently set himself against the expressed will of the House. I believe he has reported in favor of printing a large number of the Reconstruction Report, while he strenuously opposes the printing of this Agricultural Report for the benefit of the farmers.

Mr. LAFLIN. Does the gentleman intend to interject a speech into mine? I thought he rose to a question.

Mr. ROSS. I wanted to know how the plates for 1864 gave out, while we have had so many more copies of the Report of 1863. What is the matter with the plates?

Mr. LAFLIN. I was proposing to answer the gentleman's question, but he continued his speech and did not give me an opportunity. Now, sir, I am not able to say why it was that the metal used in 1863 proved superior to that used in 1864. I am telling what I understand to be the fact, on the authority of my colleague on the committee, [Mr. LATHAM,] that the plates are worn out; but the reason why they are worn out I have not been able to discover.

Mr. ANCONA. If the gentleman will allow me, I think I could help him to a satisfactory answer to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Ross,] by assuming that these plates are not worn out at all, but that the Public Printer only wishes to save himself from the labor of printing this additional number, and makes that a mere pretext.

Mr. LAFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to understand the drift of the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If the gentleman means to intimate that the Superintendent of Public Printing desires to serve the ends of economy and of public interest, I conceive that he is right; but if by that intimation he intends to convey the impression that the Superintendent of Public Printing does not design and is not willing to do his duty, I repudiate, on his behalf, such an intimation.

Now, I say to this House that if this resolution is passed you have got to go to the expense of preparing the work de novo. If gentlemen want more books than they have now, in the name of common sense let them, instead of passing this resolution, pass a resolution to print the Agricultural Report of 1865. To print twenty-five thousand copies of the Report of 1864 will cost as much as to print seventy-five thousand copies of the Report of 1865. Let us, therefore, show some practical sense, some judgment, and have the books of 1865 printed instead of 1864. We might go on and print the Agricultural Reports of 1862 and 1863, and so on with regard to every book ever ordered by Congress, with just the same propriety as to print this.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman allow me to say a few words on the subject of plates?

Mr. LAFLIN. A very few.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it rather recommends itself to the House that these plates are worn out. If the House knew how these plates are gotten up they would not consider them of any great use. In 1863, a few days after the battle of Chancellorsville, happening to be in this city, I called upon the Commissioner of Agriculture, and he showed me an engraved picture of a sheep which he said he had imported from Europe, and he was going to have the picture inserted in the next Agricultural Report. I remarked that it was a very fine animal; I never in my life saw a sheep so large across the hams and withers. The Commissioner was very much pleased with my remarks. "Now," said he, "I will show you the original photograph of the sheep." So he got it out. It did not look like the engraved plate at all. Then he showed me another picture of the sheep, which he had had painted up after the original photograph and improved so that the lithographer could make the fine picture that was to embellish the Agricultural Report. Now, I submit that if these plates are gotten up by the Commissioner of Agriculture in that manner we had better have the book without the plates.

Mr. LAFLIN. I did not yield for a speech on the subject of pictures. I supposed the gentleman was going to say something on the subject of printing.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know anything about printing. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States printed during the last year one hundred and fifty-five thousand copies of the Agricultural Report, and it must have cost the Government from a dollar and a half to two dollars per volume for each extra copy beyond the cost of composition. The paper and press-work alone cost a dollar and a half per volume. We have got to expend, to prepare twenty-five thousand copies, as much money as if we printed one hundred thousand copies. Every member is receiving from five to six hundred copies of the Agricultural Report for distribution, at a cost of ten or twelve thousand dollars; and when we bear in mind that these Agricultural Reports are sent, not to the men who cannot afford to buy newspapers, but to the men who are best able to buy those papers, I ask whether it is not a subject worthy of consideration why we should tax the men who cannot afford to buy these papers for the sake of giving these books to the men who are.

I am perfectly satisfied that if the tax-payers of the country understood, what every member of this House understands, that all he has to do to obtain a copy of the Agricultural Report until the supply is exhausted, is to write to his member of Congress and request the same, it would not be six months before the House would be deluged with demands that would occupy not only the Public Printing Office, but all the printing offices in New York and Philadelphia. It would consume not only, as we do now, such a vast proportion of the paper of the United States, but would take nearly all of it. And indeed I do not know how this great evil of printing such inordinate, extravagant, and enormous editions of books is ever to be corrected except when the people come to understand that all they have to do to obtain books is to send to members of Congress, and then the demand will become so enormous that not even my liberal friend from Illinois [Mr. Ross] or my kind and generous friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] will have the hardihood to rise upon this floor and ask for such editions.

Why, sir, I am astonished to see gentlemen on the other side of the House demanding an extra edition of the Agricultural Report of 1864. So far as I have seen or have been able to read the papers which represent and advocate their principles, they have been unanimous in their declarations of the extravagance of the public printing; and it was but a short time ago that I noticed that they had commenced a campaign against members on this side of the House that they had willingly consented to such extravagance. Why, sir, I saw it stated in a Democratic paper that the committee of the Senate had already initiated a movement whereby somewhere about a million dollars was to be expended in printing reports whereby money was to be expended, not for the purpose of any benefit to the public, but for the purpose of rewarding some worn-out politicians.

Mr. ROSS. There has been no complaint about the printing of Agricultural Reports. It is the printing of political documents that we have been objecting to.

Mr. LAFLIN. I fully understand that. I fully understand that the object of the gentlemen is to run up such an enormous sum of expenditures in every department that they can go before the people of the United States and decry and condemn this Administration for its extravagance. And when gentlemen upon that side of the House can go before the people and can show that each member of Congress is receiving an expenditure made in his behalf in public printing of from two to three thousand dollars a year and say, "We are not responsible; this thing has been done to us by the majority with the consent of those who control that majority," they can apply the argument with great power and force.

Mr. ROSS. If the gentleman wishes to put himself and his party friends on record against publishing the Agricultural Report and in favor of publishing political documents, we are willing to accept that issue.

Mr. LAFLIN. So far as our relations to that matter are concerned, I stand ready to justify them both here and anywhere. In no particular has the Committee on Printing allowed themselves to be influenced by merely political considerations in their action. The very last report which was made from that committee, and which was submitted by the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. LATHAM,] ought of itself to be sufficient to disprove such an imputation as that. That report was in favor of printing both the majority and the minority reports of the joint committee on reconstruction; no partiality, no preference was shown. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Ross] knows that this House was not under any obligation to print that minority report. Now, I defy any member of this House to point to any report which this committee has made, or to any report which they have declined to make, which would authorize him to cast that imputation upon the committee. I hope that by this time the House thoroughly understands this question. Now, if after this explanation, members shall choose to adopt a resolution calling for the printing of this extra number of Agricultural Reports, at this immense cost to the Government; if they choose, simply for the purpose of procuring twenty-five thousand additional copies of the Agricultural Report of 1864, to impose an expense upon the Government which would give them from fifty to seventy-five thousand more copies of the Report of 1865, then all I have to say is, that I have done my duty, and upon them rests the responsibility.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFLIN] yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. LAFLIN. I will yield five minutes, and then I shall call for the vote.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think that this question has any side of the House to it. We are all on one side, I trust, on this great question. I do not understand why the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFLIN] should be so fearful of Agricultural Reports. He seems to think this will lead to an enormous expense on the part of the Government, because the plates are all worn out, and new ones must be made. After I heard from the gentleman that those plates were out of order, I called upon Mr. Newton, the head of the Agricultural Bureau, and asked him about them. He informed me that the plates were in good order, and that all that was required for the printing of these extra Reports was the necessary paper for that purpose.

In 1860 the agricultural area of the country embraced 163,110,720 acres of improved land, and 244,101,818 acres of land unimproved. Of course since then a large additional number of acres have been put under cultivation. As far as I have been able to ascertain from the last census, the number of farms in the United States then was 2,428,895; farm laborers, 795,679; total, 3,219,574.

Mr. Speaker, there were printed of the Agricultural Reports for 1864, by order of this House, twenty-five thousand copies less than in 1863, and in 1863 twenty-five thousand less than in 1862, as the following statement will show:

1864.....	140,000

And the number allotted to the Agricultural Department was distributed according to a statement from that Department, as follows:

"The number sent to each party decreasing with the decreased supply granted and the increase of parties to be supplied. The exact numbers changing thus, from time to time only an approximation to the average is given: to five thousand and fifty regular agricultural correspondents, from one to two copies each; to two hundred and ninety meteorological correspondents, from one to two copies each; to forty-six State Agricultural and Horticultural Societies, from ten to twenty-five copies each; to one thousand and forty-five county Agricultural and Horticultural Societies, from one to ten copies each; to three hundred and twenty agricultural and daily newspapers, from one to two copies each; to three hundred United States and foreign consuls and ministers, from one to four copies each; to President, heads of Departments, judges of Supreme Court, &c., from one to two copies each—making an average of from twelve to sixteen thousand copies to what may be termed official and regular recipients.

"The second copy given to the agricultural and meteorological correspondents (who perform their constant and oftentimes arduous duties gratuitously) is generally requested to supply a loss, or for some special use. So, also, to papers which sometimes have two editors who each desire a copy."

Why was this deduction made when the farmers require them? The gentleman asks, why do the farmers want these books? It is for information; and for that purpose this book is more important than any other document printed by Congress. Now, who pays the cost of these books? It is paid by the people who ask for them; and the sum required is but small.

Now, every time the gentleman gets up here about printing he calls for reform. And he advocates reform for what and against whom? Reform against the farmers? He objects to giving them these books, and says they can get, I do not recollect how many, newspapers for the amount these books will cost the Government. But they do not want the newspapers, and they do want these books. These books are prepared under the direction of a bureau established by the Government, and contain important information which the farmers of the country have a right to demand of their Representatives.

Why does the gentleman call so loudly for reform, when it is made to apply only to farmers? Some time ago the gentleman said to this House that for the printing of the Government it required one thirteenth of all the paper produced in the United States. But that is not for the purpose of printing these Agricultural Reports, but for other printing. And there is another reason why we should print these Reports of 1864. The gentleman must recollect that there are eleven States which have been in rebellion, the people of which for the last four years have not been able to obtain these Reports. They are now resuming agricultural pursuits, and demand their share of these Agricultural Reports, and they are entitled to them. The interests of agriculture are now being greatly developed there by those who have for years past been engaged in pursuits of war, who are turning their attention to cultivating the soil, and will you not give them this information? It is what the people have a right to ask. But the gentleman says, no, we must retrench. Retrench on what? Why, on Agricultural Reports. I repeat, there is no side of the House on this question. The gentleman talks about the other side wanting to print Agricultural Reports. I admire the courage of the other side of the House in standing up for the farmer.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution, it was agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL called for the regular order.

LAND TITLES IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER announced as the regular order the bill (S. No. 243) to quiet land titles in California, reported from the Committee on Public Lands, Mr. JULIAN being entitled to the floor.

The bill provides in the first section that in all cases where the State of California has heretofore made selections of any portion of the public domain, in part satisfaction of any grant made to the State by any act of Congress, and has disposed of the same to purchasers in good faith under her laws, the lands so selected shall be confirmed to the State. No selection made by the State contrary to existing laws is to be confirmed for lands to which any adverse preemption, homestead, or other right has, at the date of the passage of the act, been acquired by any settler under the laws of the United States, or to any lands which have been reserved for naval, military, or Indian purposes by the United States, or to any mineral land, or to any land which, at the time of the passage of the act, was included within the limits of any city, town, or village, or within the county of San Francisco. The State of California is not to receive under this act a greater quantity of land for school or improvement purposes than she is entitled to by law.

The second section provides that where the selections named in section one have been made upon land which has been surveyed by authority of the United States it shall be the duty of the proper authorities of the State, where the same has not already been done, to notify the register of the United States land office for the district in which the land is located of such selection, which notice shall be regarded as the date of the State selection, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall, immediately after the passage of this act, instruct the several local registers to forward to the General Land Office, after investigation and decision, all such selections, which, if found to be in accordance with section one, the Commissioner shall certify over to the State in the usual manner.

The third section enacts that where the selections named in section one have been made from lands which have not been surveyed by authority of the United States, but which selections have been surveyed by authority of and under the laws of the State, and the land sold to purchasers in good faith under the laws of the State, such selections shall, from the date of the passage of this act, when marked off and designated in the field, have the same force and effect as the preemption rights of a settler upon unsurveyed public land; and if, upon survey of such lands by the United States, the lines of the two surveys shall be found not to agree, the selection shall be so changed as to include those legal subdivisions which nearest conform to the identical land included in the State survey and selection. Upon the filing with the register of the proper United States land office of the township plat in which any such selection of unsurveyed land is located, the holder of the State title is to be allowed the same time to present and prove up his purchase and claim under this act as is allowed preceptors under existing laws; and if found in accordance with section one of this act, the land embraced therein shall be certified over to the State, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The fourth section provides that in all cases where township surveys have been or shall hereafter be made under authority of the United States, and the plats thereof approved, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to certify over to the State of California, as swamp and overflowed, all the lands represented as such, upon such approved plats, within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year from the return and approval of such township plats. The Commissioner is to direct the United States surveyor general for the State of California to examine the segregation maps and surveys of the swamp and overflowed lands made by the State; and where he shall find them to conform to the system of surveys adopted by the United States, he shall construct and approve township plats accordingly, and forward to the General Land Office for approval. But in segregating large bodies of land, notoriously and obviously swamp and overflowed, it shall not be necessary to subdivide the same, but to run the exterior lines of such body of land. In case such State surveys are found not to be in accordance with the system of United States surveys, and in such other townships as no survey has been made by the United States, the Commissioner shall direct the surveyor general to make segregation surveys, upon application to the surveyor general by the Governor of the State, within one year of such application, of all the swamp and overflowed land in such townships, and to report the same to the General Land Office, representing and describing what land was swamp and overflowed under the grant, according to the best evidence he can obtain. If the authorities of the State shall claim as swamp and overflowed any land not represented as such upon the maps or in the returns of the surveyors, the character of such land at the date of the grant, September 28, 1850, and the right to the same, shall be determined by testimony, to be taken before the surveyor general, who shall decide the same, subject to the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The fifth section proposes to enact that it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to instruct the officers of the local land offices and the surveyor general, immediately after the passage of this act, to forward lists of all selections made by the State referred to in section one, and lists and maps of all swamp and overflowed lands claimed by the State, or surveyed as provided in this act, for final disposition and determination, which final disposition shall be made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office without delay.

The sixth section enacts that an act entitled "An act to provide for the survey of the public lands in California, the granting of preemption rights therein, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1853, shall be construed as giving the State of California the right to select for school purposes other lands in lieu of such sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections as were settled upon prior to survey, reserved for public uses, covered by grants made under Spanish or Mexican authority, or by other private claims, or where such sections would be so covered if the lines of the public surveys were extended over such lands, which shall be determined whenever township lines shall have been extended over such land, and in case of Spanish or Mexican grants, when the final survey of such grants shall have been made. The surveyor general for the State of California is to furnish the State authorities with lists of all such sections so covered, as a basis of selection, such selections to be made from surveyed lands, and within the same land district as the section for which the selection is made.

The seventh section provides that where persons in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, have purchased lands of Mexican grantees or assignees, which grants have subsequently been rejected, or where the lands so purchased have been excluded from the final survey of any Mexican grant, and have used, improved, and continued in the actual possession of the same continuous proprietors according to lines of their original purchase, and where no valid adverse right or title (except of the United States) exists, such purchasers may purchase the same, after having such lands surveyed under existing laws, at the minimum price established by law, upon first making proof of the facts as required in this section, under regulations to be provided by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. But whenever it shall be made to appear by petition of the occupants of such land that injury to permanent improvements would result from running the lines of the public surveys through such permanent improvements, the Commissioner of the General Land Office may recognize the existing lines of the subdivision.

The eighth section proposes to enact that in all cases where a claim to land by virtue of a right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican authorities has been finally confirmed, and a survey and plat thereof shall not have been made, as provided by sections six and seven of the act of July 1, 1864, "to expedite the settlement of titles to lands in the State of California," and in all cases where a like claim shall hereafter be finally confirmed, and a survey and plat thereof shall not be made as provided by said sections within six months after such final confirmation, it shall be the duty of the surveyor general of the United States for California, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, or such final confirmation, to cause the lines of the public surveys to be extended over such land; and he shall set off, in full satisfaction of such grant, and according to the lines of the public surveys, the quantity of land confirmed in such final decree, and as nearly as can be done in accordance with such decree; and all the land not included in such grant as so set off shall be subject to the general land laws of the United States.

It is provided in the ninth section that from the decrees of the district courts of the United States for the district of California, approving or correcting the surveys of private land claims under Spanish or Mexican grants, rendered after the 1st day of July, 1865, an appeal shall be allowed for the period of one year after the entry of such decrees to the circuit court of the United States for California, as provided by section three of the act of July 1, 1864, to expedite the settlement of titles to land in the State of California; and the decision of the circuit court shall be final.

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to discuss this bill, I desire to make a proposition to the House, and my subsequent action will be determined by the vote upon that proposition. This is a bill to quiet titles in California. It has been passed by the Senate and reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands of the House. Since the report of the bill, I have received letters and dispatches from intelligent and prominent gentlemen in California, begging me not to press action upon the bill at this session. If we enter upon its discussion at the present time, it will consume whole days of the most valuable time of the session; for I find upon the one side and the other gentlemen who are desirous to debate it; and I mean to allow the fullest range of debate, the subject being an important one. In view of the late period of the session, and in view, also, of fresh information I have received, I propose to submit a motion to postpone the further consideration of the question until next December. If the House should vote down this motion, I shall endeavor to proceed in regular order with the consideration of the bill and the amendments.

Mr. McRUER. I hope that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. JULIAN] will allow the dispatches and letters of which he speaks to be read to the House. I would like to see the character of the letters and dispatches which "intelligent gentlemen of California" have sent here. This is a matter in which we feel the deepest interest. More than ten thousand of our citizens are now holding the titles to their land by an uncertain tenure. Every week's delay adds to the vexation, confusion, and litigation experienced by citizens there. This bill is a measure of deeper concern to the California delegation than all other measures in which they are interested. The delegation has for the last seven months been assiduously at work to perfect this bill. We have now matured a bill to which there can be no well-founded opposition. It meets with the approval of the Land Office here. It receives the united approbation of the whole California delegation. It is asked for by the Legislature of California. It is asked for by numerous individuals throughout the State, who are now suffering in consequence of these vexed questions, which have existed for years between the State of California and the Land department here.

Now, sir, we claim, as a right, that this measure shall be considered by the House at the present time. If the gentleman from Indiana has received from California any valuable information which will warrant the House in delaying this matter I want to hear it; for this question has been discussed almost every day for the last six months in every newspaper in California. The question has been considered and acted upon by the Legislature of that State. I know that a bill to settle these titles will meet with the approbation of nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand honest men in the State. It is a matter of deep interest to every citizen of California who has the welfare of the State at heart. I trust, therefore, that this bill will now be considered by the House. It will not necessarily consume much time. As for myself, I can say all that I want to say in ten or fifteen minutes. The previous question, with our consent, may be called before the morning hour expires.

Mr. JULIAN. In answer to the gentleman's call for information, I send to the Clerk's desk a dispatch which I have received.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, June 29, 1866.

GEORGE W. JULIAN,

Chairman Committee on Public Lands:

Do not report California bill until you hear from me next mail. I will show its enormous injustice. Refer to California delegation for character. Answer.

JAMES C. SEABRISKI,
Attorney for eight hundred settlers.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman who sends that dispatch states that he represents eight hundred settlers on the land in California; and he refers me to the California delegation for his character. I have referred to one member of that delegation, who indorses him as a gentleman of intelligence and worth. I now send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, an article on this question from a leading California newspaper, the American Flag, which is represented to me by intelligent Californians as a respectable and influential newspaper of that State.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A BILL TO QUIET LAND TITLES.—On the 19th of March last, Senator CONNESS introduced a bill into the United States Senate entitled 'A bill to quiet land titles in the State of California,' which was read twice, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed. Mr. HENDRICKS reported the bill with an amendment, on the 20th of April following, making many material alterations, which bill is now before Congress. The original object of the bill was no doubt good, and designed to settle many vexed and doubtful questions affecting land titles in this State.

"The first section provides that the claims, locations, and sales of land made by the State of California anterior to the passage of this act pursuant to the legislative enactments of the five hundred thousand acres of land donated by the Government for the purpose of internal improvements, and other land devoted to the purposes of education, and swamp and overflowed lands shall be confirmed; but there are several exceptions which are particularly specified. One is where a person has become entitled to a preemption under the laws of the United States by reason of having settled upon any legal subdivision of such lands. And further, the act does not confirm any location of lands made under State authority within the limits of any town or city which was incorporated at the time, or within the county of San Francisco.

"It is provided by another section that in case persons have purchased lands of Mexican grantees, in good faith, which have since been rejected, and have improved the same and been in the actual possession thereof, may purchase where there is no adverse title except that of the Government.

"There is one section of the bill proposed as part of the amendment which seems to be objectionable and calculated to work great injustice to thousands of bona fide settlers upon the public domain. It is section two of the proposed amendment, which declares that in all cases contemplated by the first section of the act which are in conflict with preemption or other settlement claims an exemption shall be held before a commission, to determine whether those claiming under the State selections or the preemption or other settlers have the prior right of settlement, and the fact of priority must govern the decision of the controversy.

"A large number of claims to valuable lands are held by speculators, under the selections made by the State before she had any authority to do so, but the selections by the authority of the State were made before the locations by the actual bona fide settlers, and who, supposing their titles good, have made valuable and permanent improvements upon such lands. These honest settlers will be deprived of all their improvements without any compensation whatever by these remorseless speculators and land sharks, who claim under the selections made by the State, if this provision of the bill is not modified.

"It is to be hoped that our delegates to Congress will see that before this act becomes a law, the proper changes are made, so as to protect the rights and interests of the settlers as well as the speculators."

Mr. HIGBY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Does he propose to try the California delegation before this House?

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer the gentleman. I referred to some matter I had recently received affecting this question, and the gentleman's colleague asked if I had such matter to produce it. I am now doing so in accordance with that request.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the gentleman another question, whether, before my colleague made that request, he did not intimate to the House he would move to postpone the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. JULIAN. I stated to several gentlemen upon the floor that I meant to submit a motion to postpone, and if the House voted it down, I then intended to proceed with the consideration of the question.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask another question, whether the Committee on Public Lands did not accept the bill as it came from the Senate, with the exception of the amendments they proposed. I ask whether it was not reported back to the House with those two amendments.

Mr. JULIAN. The committee reported several amendments to the bill; and the gentleman's colleague has several amendments which I agreed he should have an opportunity to offer.

I now ask the Clerk to read the letter I send up to him.

Mr. BIDWELL. I desire to ask whether that letter has a name attached to it.

Mr. JULIAN. It was written to me as a private letter, conveying to me no authority to give the name of the writer. I have shown the letter to several respectable Californians and they say the writer is a gentleman whose word ought to be received. For this reason I have asked to have it read. I now ask that the letter be read.

The SPEAKER. But limited debate is allowed on the motion to postpone.

Mr. HIGBY. I object to the reading of the letter unless the name be given.

The SPEAKER. The postponement does not open the merits of the bill. Barclay's Digest, page 107, declares that postponement admits of but very limited debate.

Mr. McRUER. I desire to say in reference to the extract from the California paper which has been read, that it does not apply to the bill under consideration. The bill to which it refers contains different provisions. If this bill has any fault it is in protecting settlers in California, recognizing preemption claims.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask that the letter be read. The Clerk read as follows:

"SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, June 2, 1866.

"DEAR SIR: We have just received Senate file 206, a bill to quiet land titles in the State of California, introduced by Senator CONNESS, with the amendment reported by Mr. HENDRICKS on the 20th of April last. The bill as originally reported by Mr. CONNESS is objectionable, as it is only asked for by speculators and land-grabbers, a large share of whom are foreign capitalists, but the amendment as reported by Mr. HENDRICKS, if it should become a law, would be a most wicked enactment, as it would drive off thousands of honest settlers from their homes who have settled on the public lands of the United States in this State on the speculators had previously located their school-land-warrants before survey, which locations had been set aside by the Commissioner of the General Land Office as illegal."

Mr. HIGBY. I object to the reading of this letter. It is not pertinent to the bill.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HIGBY. I am not mistaken.

Mr. JULIAN. It applies to the very objections that are embodied in the bill before the House.

Mr. HIGBY. I am not mistaken; it is only a waste of time to read it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's colleague has spoken beyond the limits of the rules of debate on the question of postponement, but if the gentleman insists upon the point the Chair will rule upon it.

Mr. HIGBY. I withdraw it.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the letter, as follows:

"Encouraged by the decisions of the Commissioner with regard to the invalidity of such locations and State selections (made before survey) the settlers went on under the general preemption laws, and thousands of them have proved up their claims before the local land offices, a large share of whom have already paid the Government for their land and made valuable improvements, supposing Congress would not interest themselves so much in behalf of speculators as to pass laws which would enable the land monopolists to rob them of their all. Others again have more recently made settlements on the public lands, and who have more recently made proof of settlement and cultivation, and whose claims are now pending before the Land department at Washington for adjudication. I know that this wicked and monstrous proposition as contained in HENDRICKS' amendment has many advocates in Washington, among them Government and State government officials, all interested in behalf of the capitalists and speculators.

"The amendment of HENDRICKS has been received with surprise and indignation, no one dreaming that any man in Congress would be base enough to rob thousands of honest settlers of their rights to a home on the Government land of the United States."

The SPEAKER. That is a reflection upon a member of Congress in the other branch, and it is so offensive that it ought not to be read in the House. Although the point of order is not made, yet as no Senator can interpose to protect himself against such imputations here, the Chair goes beyond his usual practice and rules that it is not proper to be read.

Mr. JULIAN. I did not intend to ask for anything to be read in violation of the rules. A portion of that letter is certainly pertinent. I had not noticed the character of the words last read.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be found in the Manual. Reflections are not allowable in one branch on members of the other branch of the legislative department of the Government. A part of this letter relating to the bill might be allowed in the range of general debate, although it would then go beyond the legitimate rule of debate on a motion to postpone.

Mr. BIDWELL. I regret exceedingly, as one of the Representatives of the State of California, that my privileges and my rights should be attempted to be subverted here by anonymous communications and by newspaper articles which contain neither facts nor reason, and by statements from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands calculated to mislead this House. As a delegation we have been put off until almost the close of the session, when we are brought to the consideration of the merits of the most important bills ever proposed in this body for the benefit of the Pacific coast. And now I think it is doing us the most rank injustice to consume almost the entire morning hour reading slanderous communications, false in every utterance, and thus waste the hour at last given to our State for this important measure. For what purpose are these statements made? For the avowed purpose of defeating this bill—a bill which the committee passed upon unanimously.

Mr. JULIAN. I do not yield the floor for that style of argument. I wish to say in reply that the gentleman is totally mistaken in asserting that my design or purpose is to defeat this bill. I have no such purpose whatever in view. As I have intimated before it is a question of indifference to me whether the House postpones this bill until December, or determines to pass upon it now. If the House has the leisure and inclination to consider it at present, I have no objection. I have no purpose of hostility to the measure, but I thought it due to myself and to this House, having reported that bill, and having since received information from respectable sources, so conceded by my friend from California, to state as I have done the facts that have come to my knowledge, leaving it for the House to determine the course it would pursue.

Let me say another thing. The gentleman from California has sedulously put forward the idea all through this debate that this is a local measure and one entirely within the control of the delegation of that State. Mr. Speaker, this bill grows out of certain facts which I desire to state. One of these is that five hundred thousand acres of land belonging to California under the law of 1841 have been surveyed by California under a system of survey and sale in violation of the laws of the United States. The same illegal conduct has prevailed in regard to her school lands and swamp lands.

Mr. McRUER. I rise to a question of order. This bill is not under discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. According to the Digest, a motion to postpone admits of "but very limited debate." If that means anything, it means that the merits cannot be discussed on that motion. A motion to refer opens the whole question; but on a motion to postpone the question is simply whether it should be postponed for future consideration.

Mr. JULIAN. I was misled by following the example of my friend from California, [Mr. McRUER,] who debated the merits of the bill with the leave of the Speaker, and would not, as I supposed, raise the point upon me. I was only going to say that this bill grows out of the violated faith of the State of California with the national Government, and therefore it concerns every man in the nation. Every actual settler and homestead claimant has been defrauded exactly to the extent that the State of California has granted her school-warrants on land that ought to have been first surveyed by the General Government. The General Government, as neither of the gentlemen from California will deny, has been wronged by the illegal action of California.

Mr. McRUER. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] when he speaks of the gentleman from California speaking by leave of the Chair, that it was because the gentleman from Indiana did not make the point of order. When a point of order is made, the Chair rules upon it.

Mr. JULIAN. Without having any wish or desire in the matter of my own, I submit the question of postponement to the judgment of the House, and I desire a vote upon it without consuming more time. I move the previous question.

Mr. BIDWELL. Let me say one word.

Mr. JULIAN. I must decline.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the first Monday in December next; and there were—ayes 51, nays 58.

So the House refused to postpone the bill.

Mr. JULIAN. I agreed to allow the gentleman from California to present his amendments, and I now yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BIDWELL. I offer the following amendments to the Senate bill.

In line fifteen, section one, after the word "land," I move to insert the words "or to any land held or claimed under any valid Mexican or Spanish grant;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That no selection made by said State contrary to existing laws shall be confirmed by this act for lands to which any adverse preemption, homestead, or other right has, at the date of the passage of this act, been acquired by any settler under the laws of the United States, or to any lands which have been reserved for naval, military, or Indian purposes by the United States, or to any mineral land, or to any land held or claimed under any valid Mexican or Spanish grant, or to any land which, at the time of the passage of this act, was included within the limits of any city, town, or village, or within the county of San Francisco.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to amend section seven by striking out in line seven the words "as conterminous proprietors" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "joint entries being admissible by conterminous proprietors to such an extent as will enable them to adjust their respective boundaries."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. After the words "Land Office" in line fourteen, section seven, I move to insert the words:

Provided, That the right to purchase herein given shall not extend to lands containing mines of gold, silver, copper, or cinnabar.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to add to section seven the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not be applicable to the city and county of San Francisco.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to amend section eight by striking out the word "made," in the fifth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "requested within ten months from the passage of this act;" also by striking out the word "made," in line ten, and inserting in lieu thereof "requested;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where a claim to land by virtue of a right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican authorities has been finally confirmed, and a survey and plat thereof shall not have been requested within ten months from the passage of this act, as provided by sections six and seven of the act of July 1, 1864, "to expedite the settlement of titles to lands in the State of California," and in all cases where a like claim shall hereafter be finally confirmed, and a survey and plat thereof shall not be requested, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. In line eleven of the same section, I move to strike out the words "six months after final confirmation," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "ten months after the passage of this act, or any final confirmation hereafter made." I move also to insert in line fifteen, after the word "the," the words "expiration of ten months from the;" and I move further to amend by inserting after the word "confirmation," in line sixteen, the words "hereafter made;" so that the latter portion of the section will read as follows:

And in all cases where a like claim shall hereafter be finally confirmed, and a survey and plat thereof shall not be requested, as provided by said sections within ten months after the passage of this act, or any final confirmation hereafter made, it shall be the duty of the surveyor general of the United States for California, as soon as practicable after the expiration of ten months from the passage of this act, or such final confirmation hereafter made, to cause the lines of the public surveys to be extended over such land, and he shall survey, in full satisfaction of such grant, and according to the lines of the public surveys, the quantity of land confirmed in such final decree, and as nearly as can be done in accordance with such decree; and all the land not included in such grant as so set off shall be subject to the general land laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. Those are all the amendments I had to offer.

The question recurred on the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JULIAN obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. JULIAN. I will.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, I have lived a great many years in the State of California, and perhaps have had more to do with these matters there than any man upon this floor; and I have an amendment to offer which my experience assures me is right and just. My amendment contains a provision which will secure the rights of all who have settled upon the land of the United States under the homestead or preemption laws of the United States. But under our treaty stipulations with Mexico we are bound to respect the grants of land which were made by the Spanish or Mexican authorities. There are only some ten or twelve grants the records of which are in the surveyor general's office for California. Now this amendment cannot oust any settlers on those lands, because they are expressly provided for.

Now, I say that if there are eight or ten of these grants there, it is incumbent on this Congress to keep inviolate the national faith and protect the honor of the American name; we are bound by treaty obligation to do so. And as my amendment is carefully guarded in all respects, I think it will appeal to the justice of this House, and will not, I believe, imperil this bill if adopted. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the amendment I propose.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add to section seven the following:

*And provided further, That whenever any just and valid claim to land in the State of California, by virtue of or through any grant or title derived from the Mexican or Spanish Government, the genuine expediente or evidence relative to which grant or title is contained in the Spanish archives in the custody of the United States surveyor general for California, shall not have been presented to, examined, and decided upon by the commission created by the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1851, the grantee or his assigns may, at any time within six months after this act shall have become a law, present a petition to the district court of the district in which the land claimed is situated, praying said court to decide upon the validity of said claim; and thereupon the same proceedings shall be had in said district court, in relation to the hearing and decision of said claim, in all respects, as though said claim had been presented to and decided by the commission created by said act adversely to said claim, except that no transcript of the report of said commission shall be presented to said district court, and the same appeal may be brought from the decision therein, and the same proceedings had for the hearing and decision thereof as is provided by said act: *Provided, however, That nothing in this act nor any proceedings under it, shall impair or affect the right or title of any person or persons, their representatives or assigns, who have acquired any just right or title in said lands under the preemption or homestead laws of the United States.

Mr. BIDWELL. I appeal to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ASHLEY] to withdraw his amendment and not press it at this time. The object of this bill is to quiet land titles, and nothing else. And we do not desire to be called upon to pass on such a measure as he has proposed, as it must lead to a great deal of discussion. And I think his proposition should go before the Committee on the Judiciary, and be brought up as a separate measure, and not be allowed to encumber this bill.

Mr. McRUER. I rise to a point of order; that the proposition of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ASHLEY] is not germane to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The title of this bill is "An act to quiet land titles in California." Anything upon the subject of quieting land titles in California is certainly in order as an amendment. This amendment of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ASHLEY] is certainly in order, whether it commends itself to the House for its adoption or not.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I have but little to say upon my amendment. It confirms nothing in the way of land titles; it says simply that they may be taken before the courts, so that the final decision of the United States Supreme Court can be had upon it. And if their title is held to be good, it is good against the United States, saving the rights of settlers upon the land. And I hold that this is a proper amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to inquire whether this amendment, if it be adopted, will decide, one way or the other, cases of contested land titles now pending in court.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. It will not.

Mr. HIGBY. It will revive cases growing out of the old Mexican grants which are now outlawed. It will carry those cases again into court.

Mr. GARFIELD. What I desire to ascertain is, whether this amendment will affect titles now in litigation.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. It will not affect cases now pending; but it will reopen for adjudication eight or ten cases, the records of which exist in the old archives.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will this amendment reopen the Miranda case?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. It will; but I say to the gentleman—

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I had occasion, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, to examine that case; and I think it ought not to be reopened.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. As to that case I will say that the lands on that rancho have been settled as public lands, and the rights of the parties, so far as they have been acquired under the United States, are protected by this proviso.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. From my examination of that case, I am satisfied that this Congress should take no action which will reopen that controversy. I do not know anything about the merits of this bill; but I am satisfied that that case should never be reopened.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. In answer to that I will simply say that, so far as regards any land case in California which is protected under the treaty of the United States, the proper tribunal to adjudicate it is the Supreme Court of the United States, and not any committee of this House. It was not intended when we made that treaty with Mexico that those rights should be determined by the action of a committee here. This amendment simply provides that the Supreme Court of the United States shall determine the case when it is carried there; and this our national honor requires.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will ask whether the Miranda case has not already been determined by the court.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. It never has been. It was withdrawn before a decision was made.

Mr. HIGBY. I will say that the very case to which the gentleman refers has been before the court.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. It has never been determined.

Mr. HIGBY. The Miranda and the Ortega titles were both in court. The Miranda case was withdrawn, and the Ortega case struggled on. The cases involved the same question precisely. I will state the substance of the matter: Congress prescribed a certain time within which all those claimants under the Mexican grants should appear before commissioners appointed for the purpose of settling those questions. There was a sufficient time allowed for all claimants to appear and commence litigation. The object of the amendment now proposed by the gentleman from Nevada is simply to give another opportunity to parties who have already let slip the opportunity which was afforded them to appear and present their claims. The amendment proposes to reopen to litigation questions which are now closed. That is the object of it. Let me say further, Mr. Speaker, that there is now in the hands of the Committee on Public Lands a bill containing the very same proposition: and it seems as if the object were to attach this as a rider to this bill in order that it may go through with it, or that this bill, affecting great interests of the State of California, shall fail.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. This proposition has been before the Committee on Public Lands, and they have agreed to it as being proper; but as it is now late in the session, and there will probably be no opportunity to report or act on that bill, we deem it best to propose it now. One word in regard to the time allowed for the presentation of these claims. The period allowed was from 1851 to 1853. And I say, sir, that two years constitute a very small period of time to allow in such cases to people who do not understand the English language and who never saw the law in regard to the matter. Now, sir, I think that is a proper amendment. It decides nothing, but leaves the matter for the courts. It saves the rights of these parties.

Mr. JULIAN. I only wish to say that the same proposition has been before the Committee on Public Lands. It was considered in a separate measure, and the committee were of the opinion that it is a proper provision. It was not designed for the benefit of the Miranda claim, but to save the rights of all parties who have been deprived of all opportunity for redress through no fault or avoidable neglect on their part. We thought it proper to give to such parties the power to assert their rights. For this reason the committee had agreed to it, and believing it to be proper, I have allowed my friend from Nevada [Mr. ASHLEY] to present it as an amendment to this bill, as there will be no other opportunity of reaching it during this session.

Mr. BIDWELL. This proposition will open up all the land claims of California, and cases now settled will have to be again gone over; cases where the land has been surveyed and sold and patented under the laws of the United States. It will enable them to bring these titles again into court. It is all wrong.

Mr. JULIAN. It does not cover all of the cases to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. BIDWELL. Bring it up in another bill.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman is hostile to it in any form. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, modified his amendment by adding the following:

Provided further, That the provisions of this bill shall not apply to any case now pending in any of the State courts or United States courts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PRICE. I move to add the following:

Provided further, That nothing in this bill shall be construed as in any manner to interfere with the rights of bona fide preemption claims.

Mr. BIDWELL. The bill is guarded in every section, but I do not object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

First amendment:

Add to section eight:

Provided, however, That the act of Congress entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the Socol ranch, in California," approved March 3, 1853, shall not be so construed as to interfere with the claims of bona fide settlers on the said lands who had settled thereon and were claiming preemptions, in accordance with the laws of the United States, prior to the time of the passage of the said act.

Second amendment:

Add to section nine:

*Provided, however, That from decrees of the district courts, as aforesaid, made after July 1, 1853, and prior to the passage of this act, an appeal may be taken to the United States circuit court for the State of California within one year from the approval of this act: *Provided, That in any such case in which an appeal may be taken under the provisions of this section, the said circuit court shall not be precluded by the terms of the decree of confirmation, or by reason of any clerical mistake therein, from determining the boundaries of the land claimed, in accordance with the original grant and the real justice and merits of the case.

Here the morning hour expired, and the bill went over until the next morning hour.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 37) making a grant of lands, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas;

An act (S. No. 58) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Corvallis to the Aquina bay;

An act (S. No. 99) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Albany, Oregon, to the eastern boundary of said State;

An act (S. No. 156) making an additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State;

An act (S. No. 168) to provide for the disposal of certain lands therein named; and

An act (S. No. 221) relating to lands granted to the State of Minnesota to aid in constructing railroads.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. WILLIAM J. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 117) for the relief of Charles M. Blake, in which he was directed to request the concurrence of the House.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House (H. R. No. 683) for the relief of J. Judson Barclay.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 543, to restore to the States lately in insurrection their full political rights, upon which Mr. BINGHAM was entitled to the floor.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718,) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The paragraph under consideration was as follows:

On candle or cannel coal, and on all bituminous coal mined and imported from any port or place thirty degrees of longitude east of Washington, $1 50 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on all bituminous coal mined and imported from any place not more than thirty degrees of longitude east of Washington, fifty cents per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on anthracite, and all other coal not herein otherwise provided for, $1 50 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on coke and culm of coal, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The pending question was on the motion of Mr. F. THOMAS to strike out from the paragraph just read the words, where they first occur, "thirty degrees of longitude east from Washington," and also the words, "on all bituminous coal mined and imported from any place not more than thirty degrees of longitude east of Washington, fifty cents per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

On candle or cannel coal, and on all bituminous coal mined and imported from any port or place, $1 50 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on anthracite, and all other coal not herein otherwise provided for, $1 50 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel; on coke and culm of coal, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe the House acceded to my request to be allowed ten minutes to reply to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS.] Mr. Chairman, I know the very unequal task that I have to perform when I undertake to reply to the gentleman from Maryland, who so rarely appears upon this floor, but when he does appear comes forth with such impressive eloquence and is so earnest in his appeal to the House that whether he is right or wrong the House is disposed to follow his suggestion. He is, I am happy to say, seldom wrong, but in this case I believe him to be entirely wrong.

In the first place, the gentleman criticises the manner or form of the bill. The form is by no means unusual. It is in the same or a similar form that has been enacted for more than fifty years past in order to make a discrimination in relation to articles that may be imported from one side or the other of a given degree of longitude.

In the next place, the gentleman criticises our proposed bill because it does not give coal equal protection to anything else in the bill. Why, Mr. Chairman, the present bill, contrary to the opinion of the gentleman from Maryland and others in the House, is not a bill for protection. It is a bill for revenue, and unless we adopt it we may lose, perhaps, $200,000,000 of internal revenue. The bill is framed to protect our internal revenue and for no other purpose. If it were not for that we should make no emendations to the tariff at all. If it were not for the vast flood of circulating medium at the present time we should not make any amendments to the tariff. But in consequence of the enormous inflation of the currency it is impossible that laboring men can live upon the same rate of wages that has been heretofore paid, and where we have the old specific rates in our tariff it is impossible that those rates should be adequate to the necessities of either the Government or the manufacturers. If we had an ad valorem tariff on a home valuation there would be no necessity now for an increase in the tariff.

Now, in relation to the article of coal, as I have argued heretofore, it stands upon a different principle from a manufacture, or from wool, which the gentleman from Maryland cited. We cannot by any possibility increase the amount of production, levy whatever tariff we please upon it, as we can upon manufactures or upon wool.

Mr. Chairman, I have only one fault to find with the argument of the gentleman from Maryland. I read what he said yesterday:

"Sir, I very well remember—and it occurs to me just at this moment—a remark made by Mr. Webster in remonstrating against the annexation of Texas. He said that every one accustomed to self-examination and self-scrutiny discovers that there is in human nature an occult principle which incapacitates a man for taking a very lively interest in the affairs of a community situated very remote from his own locality. That remark seemed to me at the time to be not a very apt illustration of the penetration, the deep analytic power which distinguished the philosophic mind of that great statesman. I thought then, I think now, that this principle is to be traced to selfishness or self-interest."

Now, sir, does not that remark apply to the gentleman from Maryland as much as to myself? Is he not as remote from the New England coast as I am from western Maryland? Sir, I scorn the imputation that I ever neglect a measure because it happens to interest California more than I would if it interested Connecticut. I scorn the imputation that I would neglect a measure that interested the Lake Superior region any more than if it interested Maine.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I simply remind the gentleman that that is hardly parliamentary language.

Mr. MORRILL. I will withdraw any part of it if it is offensive to the gentleman, as I certainly intended no offense.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I would say to the gentleman in the best possible spirit, for his deportment is always highly courteous, that at the very time of speaking of that selfishness in our nature I conceded that I was myself subject to the same impulses and the same emotions, and I imputed to him only the feelings that were common to us all.

Mr. MORRILL. In relation to coal, Mr. Chairman, we have proposed the same rate of duty that was in the former bill. The gentleman objected that we should reproduce the same rates, because that bill was rejected on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I beg to remind the gentleman that the bill did not have its enacting clause stricken out on account of this coal question simply. It was stricken out because of the reluctance on the part of the House to legislate in relation to the provisions of a tariff for the Canadian Provinces upon any different principle or rates than what we would for all the world. The House did not wish to have any part of the reciprocity treaty reproduced in any possible shape, and that was why that bill was rejected.

The gentleman from Maryland suggests that it is only for the interest of a few men in Boston and New York that the rate on coal coming from no more than thirty degrees east longitude is inserted. Why, sir, the whole coast north of New York is interested in this matter. The poor people that have hard work to pick up in the streets the little fuel that may be necessary to keep themselves warm during our severe winters have an interest in this bill. They are dependent for their fuel upon coal, and is it reasonable and proper that we, in order to benefit a company that has subsisted for the last eleven years without any protection whatever, shall now ask that these people shall pay at least $1 50 a ton more for their fuel? I certainly cannot conceive that it is necessary that this should be done for the benefit of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. And then let me say that in our internal revenue bill we have benefited that company and the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania to the amount of over a million dollars by exempting coal from any tax whatever. We have benefited the railroad company by exempting them from any tax on freight. Now, is it reasonable that they should ask for anything more? Certainly it appears to me very unreasonable.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this article is used in manufactures. We tax the manufactures after they are made. Is not that enough? It is used for making gas, and there is not an article in the whole list of manufactures that is taxed more heavily, with the exception of tobacco and liquors, than gas. Is it not enough to tax an article after it is produced, without taxing the raw material?

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad, to recur to it again, the gentleman from Maryland has already stated, was in the habit prior to the war of sending something like three hundred thousand tons annually to market, during the war only ninety thousand, and since the war three hundred and forty-six thousand tons. Now, it does seem to me if they can recover and recuperate without this heavy duty on coal, they can do so when we levy fifty cents upon it, which the gentleman acknowledges to be ten per cent. upon the cost. It does appear to me that if we levy a duty of fifty cents per ton on all the coal that comes from Nova Scotia, that is enough. And I will say to the House that in our experience when coal was entirely free, half of all the bituminous coal we received from abroad, or nearly half, came from Liverpool or somewhere else besides Nova Scotia.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend so as to make the duty $1 25 per ton. I do not know that I desire to say anything, except that I do not see that the Committee of Ways and Means have proposed anything new, except that we shall go into the business of taxing degrees of longitude. [Laughter.] It is a new idea, and I do not know that I fully understand it. However, I hope that we will make the duty at least $1 25 per ton.

Mr. MARSTON. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] Under the reciprocity treaty with Great Britain certain articles from the Provinces were allowed to come into this country free, and among them were the articles of wool and coal. During the last ten years, under that treaty, there has grown up in this country a manufacture of worsted goods, made almost entirely of Canada wool, to the amount of $8,000,000 a year. In that manufacture is consumed about four million pounds of Canada wool; while we do not raise in this country more than three hundred thousand pounds. Now, by this bill an increased duty has been placed upon Canada wool, which for a time, at least, will be a great injury to that manufacture. But the people of New England engaged in this manufacture do not complain of this; for although it will cripple us for a time, we believe this country has the capacity to raise all the wool required, and that it will do it.

Another great interest is that of coal, which under the reciprocity treaty was admitted from the Provinces free of duty. During the time that treaty was in operation the capitalists of this country invested largely in coal mines in the Provinces, and have been engaged largely in mining coal there. Those mines are situated immediately upon the shore of the ocean, and yield the very best bituminous coal found on this continent. Now, I appeal to the committee if it is fair and right, after this great amount of capital has been invested under the reciprocity treaty, that a duty should now be imposed of more than one hundred per cent. upon this coal. Before the commencement of the late war, bituminous coal was sold at the mines of Cumberland at seventy-five cents per ton; and I suppose it sold at about the same price at the mines in Nova Scotia.

Now, I am not aware that New England has any natural advantages over any other section of the country. Her climate is rigorous, her soil is sterile, and her location far removed from the regions producing the articles she uses in her manufactures, the breadstuffs and meats she needs for the consumption of her population. We go to North Carolina and other States South for the timber to build our ships, for the cotton for our manufactures, and to those States and the States of the West for our breadstuffs and meats. And after paying the cost of transporting these articles to our region we must then transport the products of our industry to the populations that consume them. Now, is it reasonable that there should also be added the immense cost of transporting coal from the Alleghany regions to the sea and then by water to our homes?

It is said by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] that we ought to put a larger tax than this on for the purpose of revenue as well as protection. Now, I hold that it is an absurdity to tax fuel for revenue; it is an absurdity to undertake to protect fuel.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. STEVENS. I will withdraw the amendment if any gentleman will renew it, as I desire a vote on it.

Mr. MARSTON. I will renew the amendment for the purpose of concluding what I have to say. I was saying, when my five minutes expired, that we pay enormous sums for the transportation of raw materials to supply our manufactures. And it is not reasonable that we should be compelled to transport fuel from the Alleghany to the ocean and thence by water to New England. Sir, if there is any product that ought to be afforded cheap, and that every human being in the country is interested in the greatest degree in having afforded as cheaply as it possibly can be, it is that product which makes light and heat and power. Not only is it to the interest of the people of New England to have cheap fuel, but it is equally the interest of everybody in the country who consumes our manufactures.

Now, sir, I maintain that it is no sort of benefit to Nova Scotia, when, by the outlay of New England and New York capital, coal is mined there and brought away to be consumed here on our own territory. Nor is it any considerable advantage to Maryland, when, by the expenditure of New England and New York capital, coal is mined in Maryland and carried away for use at the North. The advantage is infinitesimal when compared with the disadvantage under which the country labors in consequence of the necessity of transporting fuel such immense distances. Why, sir, if Virginia (pleaded for so eloquently by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] the other day) and Maryland would realize an adequate profit from the immense natural advantages which they possess, let them use their own timber to build ships on their own shores. Let them burn their own coal in their own steamers, their own furnaces, their own manufactories, and then they will be able to consume the products of their agricultural industry on their own soil. Thus they will be able to exchange the silence of the grave, which now broods over the greater portion of that country, for the hum of a busy and thriving industry.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. MARSTON,] New Englander though he be, is not more anxious than I am that New England shall have cheap coal. I believe that the way for her to obtain it is to open generous rivalry with the coal-fields along the coast. I am anxious that she shall have the coal of Nova Scotia as cheaply as she can have any American product. And if gentlemen will look at Executive Document No. 128, the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury to a resolution which I had the honor to introduce here on the 28th of March, they will see there broached the idea of adding stars to our flag and of making Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Canada East States of this Union. That, sir, is a feasible project; and it can be accomplished without war. Nothing but the provisions of the reciprocity treaty could have kept those Provinces out of the Union until the present time; and if we decline to give them legislative protection equivalent to the advantages they enjoyed under the reciprocity treaty, they will, by the force of political gravitation, take their places before many years as States of the American Republic.

The gentleman says that we have put a duty on wool. Yes, sir; and we have added a corresponding duty on woolen goods. The gentleman talks of this tariff as a protective tariff. It is not a protective tariff. It is a mere revenue tariff. I hope to see some day a protective tariff in this country. But this tariff does not compensate the manufacturers for the internal taxes imposed upon them. And the commercial reports with reference to coal show that it is pouring into our country this year in great excess of the importation last year. I hold in my hand a copy of the New York Commercial Times and Financial Chronicle for June 23. It contains a table of foreign importations of leading articles of commerce at that port for the week ending June 15, as compared with the importations during a corresponding period last year. The amount of coal imported during one week last year was 73,666 tons, while this year it is 253,000 tons.

I concede that the Committee of Ways and Means, pressed as they have been, have done the best they could to adjust the tariff to compensate for internal taxes. During the war we have not been living under a tariff. We have been living on the difference between our currency and gold. More than one year ago I said in this House that when gold should fall below 150, our factories and workshops would be obliged to close. When gold dropped to 130, they did close all over the country. This system of free trade, or rather this question of giving protection nicely balanced with the measure of internal taxes which a product bears, is making it the interest of the manufacturer to have an inflated and cheap currency, in order that the difference between it and gold may protect him against the influence of our unwise legislation.

Mr. BOUTWELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. MARSTON. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, there are three vital and satisfactory reasons why this duty should not be increased. The first is that coal being a raw material, and in no sense a manufacture, does not come within the settled policy of the country to protect manufactures. It is an article of fuel as necessary to human existence as air and water, and therefore should be furnished to every person at the lowest possible cost. Second and third, the measure proposed is neither one of revenue, properly speaking, nor of protection. I say it is not one of revenue, properly speaking, because if we deny the doctrine of protection and stand on the principle of revenue, then we ask that the duty for the purpose of revenue shall be upon luxuries before it is imposed upon articles of positive and prime necessity. We have stricken out of the internal revenue system fifty articles, refusing to take revenue on them, not one of which is to be compared with coal as an article of necessity for the people of the country.

Now, sir, I say for the purpose of protection the tax of $1 50 per ton is wholly inadequate. It is well known that coal comes to this country in large quantities from Nova Scotia, the consumption of which is confined to New England and portions of New York; and with this duty of $1 50 per ton it will continue to be imported, because you cannot transport Cumberland coal from the mines five hundred miles away for anything like $1 50 per ton. It costs four dollars a ton to transport Cumberland coal from the port of Georgetown to the port of Boston. Therefore, if you put the duty upon domestic coal even at three dollars a ton, we in New England will still be obliged to purchase foreign coal because we can procure it cheaper. Here, then, we impose a tax upon an article of prime necessity to all classes, and especially to manufacturers, while we allow articles of luxury to come in free from abroad.

If you make this a protective tariff, you must put on a duty of at least five dollars a ton in order to secure the coal miners of this country the monopoly of the New England markets. But I say there is nothing in the whole range of possible taxation which ought not to be taxed for the purpose of revenue before you tax coal. If, however, you propose to tax for protection, a tax of $1 50 per ton is totally inadequate.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the State which I have the honor to represent in part is deeply interested in a tariff. Her vast resources of coal and iron need adequate protection against foreign competition, and many other States of this Union are in like situation. I am therefore in favor of imposing such a duty on coal and iron as will enable us to compete with foreign countries. I must disagree with the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] who asks a diminution of duty on coal. There is no occasion for importing that article from Nova Scotia, as we have an abundance in our own country to supply our New England friends and all others. We must foster and build up our own country. I concur with the views of the honorable gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS,] that the duty on coal ought to be increased. Sir, in 1842 a tariff was passed that gave prosperity to our country, but unfortunately for us in 1844 James K. Polk was elected to the presidential chair, who carried Pennsylvania under a deceptive flag having inscribed thereon "Polk, Dallas, and the tariff of 1842," over the gallant and great protector of the true American system, Henry Clay, and the result was the passage of the free-trade tariff bill of 1846. In 1857 another tariff bill was passed which, if anything, was worse for those States that abounded in coal and iron.

I tell you, sir, that Pennsylvania will not be again deceived, for no man will get her vote for President who is not out and out a protective tariff man. In 1861 a new tariff bill was passed, called the Morrill tariff, which met the approbation of the country at the time, to which in 1864 a supplement was added, and now we have under consideration the tariff bill of 1866, reported by the Committee of Ways and Means through their honorable chairman, [Mr. MORRILL.] It does not impose as high a duty on many articles as I should desire, yet is far from being a "free-trade bill." I can fully appreciate the arduous duties of that honorable committee in deciding upon the conflicting interests of the various sections of our country. I may say here, Mr. Chairman, that no one member of that committee nor of this House stood up more firmly for the interest of Pennsylvania than my colleague, the honorable gentleman from the Pittsburg district, [Mr. MOORHEAD.] I am in favor of the protection of the interests not only of my own State, but also those of the manufacturers of our New England friends and of all other sections of the country. Sir, the only thing that will make us a great nation is to encourage our own manufacturers. We now pay the skill and sagacity of the manufacturers of Europe nearly one hundred million dollars annually in gold over and above our exchanges, value for value. This might, in a great measure, be saved if we would practice the policy of England, to buy no manufactured articles which we may produce with profit to ourselves, and to encourage no foreign trade that does not pay profit and produce general prosperity. We now produce over $2,500,000,000 of manufactures, which consume about two thousand million dollars of agricultural products in food and raw material, &c., and yet I am sorry to say that there are free traders who would break down this immense interest to foster a petty trade with the manufacturers of Europe, who never took more than $80,000,000 of our agricultural products, exclusive of cotton, any year, and often considerably less.

I was surprised, Mr. Chairman, to hear the learned gentlemen from Iowa [Messrs. WILSON and KASSON] and the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] finding fault with the bill on the ground that it was too protective. It is a delusive idea to suppose that the European manufacturers will purchase the vast agricultural products of our western States. They will buy none except they do not raise sufficient at home, and then no more than they can help. The only way for our western friends to get a fair price for their grain and meat is to encourage the building up of manufacturing which will prevent this constant drain of gold from our country. There is no necessity for Americans purchasing their clothing from foreign countries. I fear, Mr. Chairman, that the abominable free-trade documents, got up by those in the interest of foreigners, which are flooding our country and sent to every member of this House, are calculated to poison the public mind. I trust that the people of this country will see and feel the importance of home protection, and follow the example of that great man, Henry Clay, who was so much revered, and though now dead yet lives in the hearts of his countrymen. I am in hopes, Mr. Chairman, that the day is not far distant when we can have a tariff not only for revenue but for complete protection to American enterprise.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate upon this subject of coal.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT OVER THE FOURTH OF JULY.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday, the 5th of July.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope not. I demand the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELIOT and ANCONA were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas twenty-four, nays not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 47, not voting 50; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. ALLEY, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Buckland, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hayes, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Kelley, Ketcham, Latham, William Lawrence, LeBlond, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McNair, Mercer, Morrill, Myers, Newell, Neill, O'Neill, Patterson, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Ross, Schenck, Shanklin, Smith, Spalding, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Brandegee, Bromwell, Coffroth, Davies, Dawson, Eliot, Garfield, Griswold, Abner C. Randall, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Starr, Stevens, Van Aernam, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, and Wright—50.

So the motion to adjourn over was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. MORRILL said: Believing that there will not be a quorum present to-morrow I vote in the affirmative.

Mr. SCHENCK said: As it would be a shame to vote against adjourning over the 4th of July, I vote "ay."

Mr. HALE said: Wishing to follow the lead of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means I vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. Before moving to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the subject of coal shall close in eleven minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the subject. I desire to give the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LATHAM] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COPFROTH] an opportunity to be heard, and wish a minute or two myself.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to withdraw my amendment which is pending, as I find that it complicates matters somewhat.

Mr. LATHAM. I move to amend the pending clause by striking out the following words beginning on line two hundred and—

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment would not be in order pending the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS.]

Mr. LATHAM. Well, then, I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] Mr. Chairman, with reference to the remark made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] that a duty of $1 50 per ton would afford no protection to the coal interests, I will only reply that that is all we ask. While Massachusetts interests are asking one hundred per cent. protection to many of their interests, we ask only $1 50 per ton, which amounts to twenty-five per cent.

I rise more for the purpose of indicating what I believe should be the financial policy of this country toward foreign nations than of advocating any particular local interest. I have thus far consistently advocated and will continue to advocate the highest import duties proposed upon all articles which are or can be produced in this country; and I do this not with a view primarily to the protection of American enterprise and capital, but with a view to the protection of the national credit, the index to which is the gold value of our currency; and the protection thus given to enterprise and capital is incidental and of secondary consideration. My own convictions are that enterprise and capital will protect themselves the world over when placed everywhere upon an equal footing, and that they will seek the most profitable channels of investment and prosper most when least interfered with by legislation. These being my convictions, I am for free trade and unrestricted competition, for buying what I must buy where I can buy it cheapest, and selling what I have for sale where I can sell it highest, when we can have perfect reciprocity with all nations.

There is, however, sir, no proper or equitable reciprocity in trade between different countries which do not recognize a common currency; and consequently while greenbacks are a legal tender in this country, and are not so in England or other countries, I would protect the public credit by prohibiting importations from foreign countries until those countries are willing to receive our securities at par. There is no legitimate reason for a premium on gold except that there are demands for money, debts to be paid which can be discharged only with gold, and the greater these demands the greater the premium on gold; or, in other words, the depreciation of our currency, which must remain with us a legal tender, and the gold value of which is, as I have before stated, the index to the national credit. In order, then, to sustain the national credit and bring our currency to a specie value we must cut off, as far as possible, all demands for money for which our currency is not a legal tender. The prohibition of importations will strike the evil in its vitals and release the struggling credit of the country from the encircling folds of this anaconda which is crushing out its life.

And, sir, this policy is not for the protection of the manufacturer and capitalist alone, but for the protection and the interest of all, as all alike are interested in the value of our currency; and home competition in the various branches of enterprise will be sufficient to prevent monopolies in any, will purify the channels of trade, and preserve a healthful equilibrium between all the departments of industry. But for the sake of the argument, admit that the prohibition of importations from abroad would raise the price of commodities in this country; it would at the same time, by cutting off the demand for gold, raise the value of our currency in a greater proportion than the price of the article, and would thus enable us to pay more easily for the article at the advanced than we now can at the lower rate. To illustrate: $1 50 in currency is now worth one dollar; the prohibition of importations would raise the price of goods say twenty-five per cent., but the value of our currency fifty per cent. What now at the lower rate is worth one dollar, but costs in our depreciated currency $1 50, would then at the advanced rate be worth $1 25, and would cost no more in our currency than appreciated to gold value, being a clear gain to the consumer of twenty-five cents per in the cost of the article—gold being always the standard of values.

And, sir, we should bear in mind that all, except the drones in society, occupy at the same time the double relation of both producer and consumer. What the farmer produces the manufacturer consumes, and what the manufacturer produces the farmer consumes; and so on through all the departments of industry, through which capital and enterprise ebb and flow to seek a common level as do the waters of the great deep.

Now, sir, just one word with reference to the provisions of this section. My admiration at the ingenuity with which this discrimination is sought to be made in favor of British American coal is equalled only by my humiliation at the thought that American statesmen are capable of making an effort to sacrifice a principle of great national import and application for the pecuniary advantage of a section, and of a few capitalists of that section who have invested their means in these foreign coal-fields, and who will pay by the duty proposed less revenue to the Government by investing their capital out of the country, than the same capital would pay under our internal revenue laws if invested in an enterprise of the same character within the country. This proposition, sir, is not based upon friendship for or a desire for reciprocity in trade with Canada, but upon considerations of a nature purely sectional and selfish. Sir, let us have the principles of political economy of uniform application throughout our entire common country, no invidious discriminations between other nations of the earth, protection to the citizen by protecting the national credit, and reciprocity in trade only where greenbacks are money.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will not undertake to discuss the question of the tariff in the space of three minutes which are allotted to me. I only rise to state that the great coal interests of Pennsylvania and Maryland require that we shall give an adequate protection, and while we grant to other sections of the country that protection which they require, we ask it at the hands of this Congress to give the coal interest of Pennsylvania and Maryland the protection which the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] will afford. If there is anything in the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] it is in favor of the duty proposed to be put upon coal. I say to the House that, in my judgment, his argument is conclusive in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] for raising revenue for the Government. The gentleman goes on to state that coal from Pennsylvania could not be transported to Boston for less than three or four dollars per ton, and that no tariff would protect the interests of the coal regions of the North unless the tariff would be fixed at that rate. I will grant this in order to show the gentleman the necessity of the adoption of the proposed amendment as a revenue measure.

Now, sir, the object of this tariff is revenue. Would not the tariff realize more revenue for the Government if the duty on coal were fixed at $1 50 per ton than if it were fixed at fifty cents? Why, sir, we pay a duty of twenty-five per cent. on coffee, an article largely consumed by the people. Why should not these gentlemen living in New England pay $1 50 per ton on coal, which is not more than fifteen or sixteen per cent. on the value of the article?

Mr. Chairman, as a question of revenue, every member of this House, it seems to me, should stand by the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland. If that amendment be adopted it will realize three times as much revenue from coal alone as will be obtained under the rate of duty fixed in the bill. Besides, sir, we ask the adoption of this amendment to protect the interests of Pennsylvania, so that one prominent branch of industry in our State may not suffer by the importation of coal at a duty of fifty cents per ton, while other sections are enjoying a large percentage on their manufactures and products.

Mr. LATHAM withdrew his amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I move pro forma, as an amendment to the amendment, to fix the duty at one dollar. I desire to present to the Committee of the Whole some statistics with reference to the importation of coal, although nearly the same I presented on a former occasion. The whole quantity imported free under the recipi-city treaty during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, was 283,483 tons, of which 202,899 tons went to New England, while 80,584 tons were carried to New York. The quantity imported and paying duty during the same period was 250,234 tons, of which 212,545 went to New York and 37,609 tons to New England. Thus it will be seen that the larger amount of the coal imported from abroad and paying duty goes to New York, the competing point. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] well said it would be impossible to fix any duty short of four or five dollars per ton that would compel the use of this Pennsylvania and Maryland bituminous coal in New England. I give these facts so that the House may judge for itself as to the merits of the question. I trust that the bill will be allowed to stand as reported, so far as coal is concerned, or at any rate that no material change will be made.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I desire, with the permission of the committee, to make an explanation of the position of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed by order of the House, and an explanation is in the nature of debate.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Well, I will rise to a point of order, and in that way accomplish my purpose. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether, if my amendment be adopted, the bill does not still stand open—

Mr. BOUTWELL. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Well, I will take my seat rather than have any controversy.

Mr. MORRILL. I modify my amendment so as to make the duty seventy-five cents per ton.

The amendment of Mr. MORRILL was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. F. THOMAS.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. If the amendment which I have proposed be adopted, will not the paragraph still be open to amendment, so that the rate of duty may be changed?

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland prevails the paragraph, as amended, will still be open to amendment.

Mr. F. THOMAS. That is all I want to know.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. F. THOMAS.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 48.

Mr. MORRILL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MORRILL and Mr. F. THOMAS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 52.

The CHAIRMAN voted in the affirmative. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Before passing the next section I move to insert after section five the following:

On slates of all kinds except roofing slate, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment until we have got through with the pending section.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out the whole paragraph in reference to coal and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

On candle or cannel coal, and on all bituminous and other coal, $1 25 per ton of twenty-eight bushels, eighty pounds to the bushel.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the existing law.

Mr. PIKE. I move to amend by making it "one dollar."

Mr. STEVENS. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I make the point that it is not in order for the gentleman to withdraw his amendment, there being now an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. No vote has been taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, no action having been taken on the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I renew the amendment.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move to amend by making it two dollars per ton.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to amend by making it one dollar.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 42; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. PIKE and Mr. KELLEY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 51.

So the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to add the following:

On slates of all kinds except roofing slate, sixty per cent. ad valorem; and on slate pencils, eighty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment—

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed on this section, by order of the House.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes thirty-nine, noes not counted.

Mr. JOHNSON demanded tellers; and Mr. HOOPER of Massachusetts, and Mr. JOHNSON, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to add the following:

On roofing slate, three dollars persquare.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it go at forty per cent. ad valorem. It is now thirty-five, and I think the addition of five per cent. is enough.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I do not accept the modification.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I now move the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Vermont, of forty per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say: on wines of all kinds valued at not over twenty-five cents per gallon, cost of cask included, forty cents per gallon; valued at over twenty-five cents and not over one dollar per gallon, seventy-five cents per gallon; valued at over one dollar per gallon, one dollar per gallon, and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. Provided, That all wines in bottles shall be subject, in addition to the foregoing rates, to a duty at the rate of one dollar for each dozen bottles containing not more than one quart for each bottle: And provided further, That upon bottled wines no allowance shall be made for breakage, and the invoice quantity shall not be reduced, but shall be increased if found deficient: And provided further, That no champagne or sparkling wines in bottles shall pay a less duty than six dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing not more than one quart and more than one pint; or six dollars per two dozen bottles, each containing not more than one pint: And provided further, That wines may be imported in bottles the package shall contain not less than one dozen bottles; and any brandies or other spirituous liquors may be imported in casks of any capacity, containing not less than thirty gallons; and any wines, brandies, or other spirituous liquors imported on and after the 1st day of October, 1866, in any less quantities than herein provided for, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the third proviso the following:

Or six dollars per four dozen bottles, each containing not more than one half pint, in which class the additional duty on the bottles shall be twenty-five cents per dozen.

Mr. MORRILL. That is very proper, especially for bachelors.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move to strike out in line ten the words "twenty-five" and insert "seventy-five;" so that it will read, "valued at over one dollar per gallon, one dollar per gallon and seventy-five per cent. ad valorem." I make this motion because wines costing over a dollar a gallon are only required to pay a specific duty of a certain amount and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. Now, I believe that some of these wines cost several dollars a gallon. If so you have made the duty on the costly wines much less in proportion than it is on the cheap wines. The object of my amendment is to make the men who drink those costly wines pay a good revenue to the Government. If there is anything that ought to pay a revenue to the Government it is the luxuries of life; and without knowing anything about it experimentally, I take it to be a self-evident fact that the high-priced wines are considered a luxury in this country. If so, they ought to pay a high rate of duty.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe the rates now in the bill are as high as they have ever been before. The duty proposed is one dollar per gallon or equal to one hundred per cent. on wines valued at over one dollar per gallon, and in addition to that twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. I trust the amendment will not prevail. I think either for revenue or protection the present duty is ample.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. PRICE, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Messrs. PRICE and SMITH.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-two, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out in line six the words "twenty-five" and insert "fifty," so that it will read, "on wines of all kinds valued at not over fifty cents per gallon, cost of cask included, forty cents per gallon." That is the same as the present tariff. As to the price, it will be perceived that upon wine at twenty-five cents a duty of forty cents per gallon is over one hundred and fifty per cent. We thus charge for the cheapest and poorest wine which the poorer people consume a much higher rate than we charge for the more costly wines.

Mr. PRICE. I undertake to say, without the fear of successful contradiction, that the wines that are brought into this country are undervalued nineteen times out of twenty, just to allow the wine drinkers to get their wines in at a certain price; I mean as a general thing. There are exceptions to all general rules. I do not of course mean anybody here. The object is to allow these wines to come in without paying anything. The very thing gentlemen ought to be willing to put a tariff on for revenue to the Government they are exceedingly anxious to have exempted. While the necessities of life, a large majority of them, are taxed almost beyond endurance, these things that men who drink ought to be willing to pay for—and I presume a large majority are willing to pay for—gentlemen are now anxious to evade in some way, so that we shall receive no tariff from them whatever. I hope that the amendment will be voted down. Allow them to bring in wine at fifty cents a gallon and there will not any of it cost by the invoice price more than that, I presume.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to strike out in line nine "seventy-five" and insert "$1 50," so that it will read, "valued at over twenty-five cents and not over one dollar per gallon, $1 50 per gallon." I am perfectly aware that in the frame of mind in which the House is now found it is extremely difficult to carry any amendment against the weight of the Committee of Ways and Means. But I hope the committee will look into this section and see just what this provision is. As the bill stands, it provides that on wines of all kinds valued at over twenty-five cents and not over one dollar per gallon the tariff shall be seventy-five cents per gallon. Now, every man in this committee understands very well that under this provision of the bill there will be no wines imported at thirty, forty, fifty, sixty, or seventy-five cents a gallon, because between twenty-five cents and one dollar a gallon the duty is the same. And the result will be that there will be no wines imported under this clause of the bill, except such wines as are worth a dollar a gallon. They will all be brought up to that standard for importation, and reduced down afterward, so that the importer shall pay the least possible duty upon the wines which he may import. Now, one of the results of this provision, as will be seen by any one who will examine it, will be that wines worth one dollar a gallon will pay a duty of only seventy-five cents per gallon. Now, common whisky pays a tax of two dollars per gallon, and I hope the committee will adopt the amendment I have offered, so that the tariff upon foreign wines imported into this country shall be in some sense equal to the tax which is levied upon common whisky.

Mr. ALLISON. I know very well the difficulty that now exists in regard to importing wines of different values. The Committee of Ways and Means desire to have, as nearly as possible, a uniform duty upon the importation of foreign wines, as they now have a uniform duty upon brandy, charging upon the finest article of brandy the same duty that is charged upon the cheaper article. Sir, the very reverse of the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] is true. Under the existing law we have but three valuations, one under fifty cents per gallon, another over fifty and under one dollar per gallon, and the other over one dollar per gallon. The result is that seven eighths, or perhaps nine tenths of all the wines imported into this country to-day under the existing tariff come in at fifty cents per gallon, invoiced abroad at that price. The Committee of Ways and Means desire, so far as they can, to correct the existing evil of under-invoicing these wines; therefore we made the classification in this bill so as to charge upon wines valued over twenty-five cents per gallon a duty of seventy-five cents per gallon instead of fifty cents as now. And seventy-five cents per gallon is certainly as high a duty as this class of importations will bear; it is in nearly every instance from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty per cent. of the cost value. There are very few wines imported into this country at an invoice price higher than one dollar per gallon. And under the classification proposed in this bill all the wines that come into this country will come in under the second class, and pay a duty of seventy-five cents per gallon instead of fifty cents per gallon as now.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate upon the paragraphs relating to wine, ale, and porter.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 613) to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 683) for the relief of J. Judson Barclay.

HOLDING AN EVENING SESSION.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] if he expects that the House will hold an evening session to-day.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that the House will be willing to have an evening session.

Mr. LE BLOND. If it is contemplated that we shall have an evening session I think we had better take a recess now as it is after four o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. Let us hold on till half past four o'clock.

Mr. LE BLOND. If we are not to have an evening session we can sit awhile longer now.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, in order to determine the question, that the House take a recess to-day from half past four to half past seven o'clock; and that the evening session be devoted exclusively to the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] is not in order.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. MORRILL; and upon a division there were—ayes 49, noes 45.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. ORTH called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ORTH and GARFIELD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 52.

So the motion of Mr. MORRILL was not agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate on the paragraph relating to wine, ale, and porter terminate in one minute and a half.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire merely to say that the lowest rate provided in the bill was intended to include and does include only a small class of imported wines, used mainly for medicinal purposes. I refer to the low-priced claret wines which hardly cost more abroad than the first quality of cider does here. They are often prescribed for persons in a low state of health by our best physicians. I trust that the bill will in this particular be allowed to remain as reported.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope the committee will understand that the remarks of the gentleman do not relate to my amendment at all.

The amendment of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cigars, cigarettes, and cheroots of all kinds, three dollars per pound, and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem; and no tare for the box in which any cigars, cheroots or cigarettes are packed shall be allowed in ascertaining the weight: Provided, That paper cigars and cigarettes, including wrappers, shall be subject to the same duties as are herein imposed upon cigars: And provided further, That on and after the 1st day of August, 1866, no cigars shall be imported unless the same are packed in boxes of not less than five hundred cigars in each box; and no entry of any imported cigars shall be allowed of less quantity than three thousand in a single package; and all cigars on importation shall be placed in public store or bonded warehouse, and shall not be removed therefrom until the same shall have been inspected and a stamp affixed to each box indicating such inspection, with the date thereof. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide the requisite stamps, and to make all necessary regulations for carrying the above provision of law into effect.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by striking out "three," in the first line of the paragraph just read, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two;" so that the clause will read, "on cigars, cigarettes, and cheroots of all kinds, two dollars per pound." By the existing tariff cigars are graded according to their cost per pound. It is now proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means that they shall pay a uniform rate irrespective of their cost. I see no objection to this except that I think two dollars would be nearer an average rate of duty than that named in the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendment will not prevail. If there be anything agreed upon between the rival producers and manufacturers of tobacco in different parts of our country, it is that all of them require protection against importations from abroad. Importation has been so easy, because of the light duty heretofore imposed, that it has been possible to put in competition with the best cigars made in this country, Havana cigars, which have actually been sold in our market at lower rates than cigars even of inferior quality made here. The simple question now submitted to us is whether we shall make the duty heavy enough to protect all the tobacco interests in every part of the country, or whether we shall so legislate that the manufacture of the better classes of cigars shall be liable to be broken down as an interest of the country by this competition from abroad. The very objection which the gentleman makes, that the duty is not one graduated in reference to the quality or value of the cigar, is met by the proposition embraced in the bill. The bill proposes to impose a specific duty of three dollars per pound, "and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem." So that there is a mixed duty, partly specific and partly ad valorem, thus accomplishing the very object which the gentleman complains is not attained by the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. In order to say a few words more on this subject, I move, pro forma, to amend my amendment by striking out "two" and inserting "two and a half." If members will look at page 27 of the existing tariff, they will find how the classification has been made. I have endeavored, in my amendment, to fix an average rate, reducing the rate proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means from three dollars to two dollars. In the existing law, there is but one grade of cigars which pays three dollars per pound and in addition an ad valorem of sixty per cent. Now, my idea is that the argument of the gentleman from Ohio does not present the case as it should. We have taken off the discrimination in favor of the lower grades of imported cigars which were brought into the country in such quantities as to depress the American manufacturer. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to oppose the amendment pro forma. I believe with the gentleman from Ohio, if there is anything that we are agreed upon, it is to levy a heavy tax on imported cigars.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, on the goods, wares, and merchandise enumerated and provided for in this section, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say: on all brown earthenware and common stone-ware, gas retorts, and blacking jars or bottles, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty-five." The manufacture of earthenware is springing up all over the country, and it is necessary to foster it. I think it should be fifty per cent., but I will be content if gentlemen will say thirty-five. It has been twenty-five for a long time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "blackening jars or bottles" and to put them in a separate paragraph at twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. I do not think the gentleman from Ohio will object to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On China, porcelain, and Parian ware, gilded, ornamented, or decorated in any manner, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

On China, porcelain, and Parian ware, plain ware, and not decorated in any manner, sixty per cent. ad valorem; on all other earthen, stone, or crockery ware, white, glazed, edged, printed, painted, dipped, or cream-colored, composed of earthy or mineral substances, and not herein otherwise provided for, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On all plain and mold and press glass, not cut, engraved, or painted, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MYERS. I move to strike that out and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

On all glass vials, jars, bottles, demijohns, carboys, and other vessels except those made of flint glass, and otherwise provided for, a duty of four cents per pound filled or unfilled.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think there will be any serious objection to this amendment. By turning to the next page of the bill it will be found that on similar articles the duty is made specific, and on some is fixed at four cents per pound. I confess that I have a prejudice in favor of specific duties and against ad valorem duties. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know whether the objection will be serious or not, but there is objection to the amendment.

On blown and pressed glass it is proposed to impose a duty of four cents per pound, amounting to at least one hundred per cent. We have increased the duty on account of the exhibition made before the Committee of Ways and Means in this pending item from thirty-five to fifty per cent. ad valorem, and I think the parties should be content with that. I do not object to anything reasonable, but it does seem to me that from thirty-five to fifty is all the increase we should grant. I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MYERS. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word; and I hope I will have the attention of the committee in answer to the chairman who has opposed my amendment, because his argument is fallacious and the facts will show that it is. I will read a short extract from a letter which I have received going to show the effect if the bill be passed as it now stands:

"An eight-ounce (half-pint) bottle can under it be imported at a cost of $4 per gross, which cannot be made here, at present reduced prices, for a less cost than $5.50 to $7.75 per gross. Wine-bottles can be imported at $7 per gross, costing to make here $10.75 to $11 per gross. These are but instances which run all through, and the result of which must inevitably be that the great bulk of the ware now made here will be, to the extent of two thirds or three fourths, transferred to the other countries."

I will add that I have a statement from three of the largest glass manufacturers of my district, that one half of the business of the country will have to be given up to Europe unless they are not more protected by having the duty made specific so as to avoid fraud.

One word more. When the whole trade demands a thing of this kind I believe the committee will pay some attention to it, especially when the facts and figures are given. Now, I have stated the facts to the chairman of the committee and I challenge refutation. This business has had to struggle along since 1861, paying an increased rate of one hundred and fifty per cent. on soda-ash and five hundred on clay, articles which enter into the manufacture, and then six per cent. on their sales, besides having to pay one hundred per cent. more for labor than formerly, and we all know that labor forms a very large portion of the cost. These are facts which the chairman of the committee cannot deny. With all that increase since 1861, they have struggled along, and now it is asked that they shall have the paltry increase of protection proposed by this bill. My amendment proposes not one hundred per cent. increase, but an increase that would amount perhaps to twenty-five per cent. more than that which is proposed by the committee.

We have had here on our desks—and I suppose it has had some effect on our discussion—a protest from the importers of New York. Sir, I am not here to protect the interests of the British or Belgian importers, nor of those of our own country who are engaged in the importation of their goods. This doctrine of protection is not a new one with me. I learned it from the great statesman of Kentucky. I believe in a tariff for protection, with incidental revenue. And I take issue with the chairman of the committee when he claims that the object of this bill is to secure a revenue. I attach little consequence to the remark that he made this morning, that unless we pass this bill we shall lose an immense revenue. What we want is protection. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment, but I hope my original amendment will prevail.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise simply to say pro forma that I oppose the gentleman's amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. MYERS, no quorum voted.

Mr. MORRILL. I am satisfied there is not a quorum present. I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOTFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. HOGAN, (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. EGGLESTON: The resolution passed by the Merchants' Exchange of Cincinnati, Ohio, recommending an appropriation to repair the levees on the Mississippi river.

By Mr. GABRIEL: The petition of Samuel Robinson, and 75 others, citizens of northern Ohio, praying for the passage of House bill No. 304, granting lands to the Iowa and Missouri State Line railroad.

Also, the petition of 375 citizens of Boston, asking Congress to provide free education to all children in the United States.

By Mr. PAINE: The Petition of John Walz, for reward for capture of Booth and Harrod.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 5, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Tuesday last was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of Mrs. N. V. Hewlitt, of Brownstown, Madison county, Alabama, praying that she may be compensated for property taken by the Army of the United States during the late rebellion for subsistence when in her neighborhood; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. SHERMAN presented two petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for an increase of the tariff so as to afford better protection to American industry; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, addressed to him, transmitting a communication from H. R. Helper, United States consul at Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, in reference to the purchase by our Government of a flock of alpacas; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I presented the other day a memorial of Mrs. Amelia Feaster, asking for relief, and, as I understood, I moved to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, but it has gone to the Committee on Claims. I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from its consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to ask the nature of that claim, and why it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs instead of the Committee on Claims. I believe it is a claim; is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not a claim in one sense; it is an application for compensation for services rendered and sacrifices made, and provisions and supplies furnished to our soldiers when prisoners in South Carolina and Georgia. The case is a very peculiar one; and the reason I ask that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs is that I in fact moved that it be referred to that committee originally, and as I understood it was referred to that committee; and some members of that committee have had their attention called to the subject-matter. That is the reason why I desire to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs now.

Mr. BROWN. I doubt very much the propriety of referring claims to different committees when we have got a committee constituted for that especial purpose. This is evidently nothing more than a claim for damages done by our armies.

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. BROWN. It is for compensation; that is the groundwork on which it is predicated; and it ought to be substantiated in the manner required by and to the satisfaction of the committee that have this general subject under their cognizance. Now, I will say for the Committee on Military Affairs that that same subject was up before them at the last meeting, an application of the same kind was there pending, and the committee after canvassing it thought it ought not to go to that committee but should go to the Committee on Claims, and ordered it to be reported back to the Senate that it might take that direction. That was the case of Mrs. Wilson, a very similar case to this.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am told that was done because this particular claim had gone to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BROWN. No, that was done because it was thought that was not the proper place for the claim to be investigated; and I submit that it is improper that these things should be sent to that committee. I, for one, as a member of that committee, protest against it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to urge this motion against the sense of the Senate, and I do it rather at the request of persons interested in this claim. This claim is made by a lady in the southern States, very strongly supported by military officers who are conversant with the facts. I have no particular desire on the subject, although I prefer that it should go where the persons interested desire it to go.

Mr. GRIMES. It occurs to me that that is one of the very reasons why it ought not to go there. If a party owning a claim is to designate the particular committee to whom it is to be sent, we ignore all the rules of the Senate, and we shall abandon to people outside of the Senate the control of our business. I have noticed, with a good deal of dissatisfaction I confess, the gradual change that has been going on in the transaction of business in the Senate. Eight years ago a claim of any description whatever was never referred to any other committee except the Committee on Claims; and that is the rule that we ought to observe now if we want to preserve regularity or consistency in the transaction of the public business. Here is a claim which I understand grew somewhat out of military transactions. It may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and they will decide in a particular way as to the manner in which it ought to be adjudicated and the kind of settlement that ought to be made. Another case comes up which grows out of some transactions connected with naval affairs. That is referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that committee has a different manner of deciding those questions, deciding them upon different principles; and so we go on throughout the entire routine of our committees, each committee deciding for itself and upon its own particular theory of deciding such questions. There ought to be uniformity in our own rules and in our judgment; and in order to secure that I think the experience of the Senate in past years has demonstrated that the proper tribunal to settle these questions is the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio. The motion was not agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE. The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 315) for the relief of the inhabitants of towns and villages in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, have instructed me to report it back and to ask that they be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I presume it was referred by mistake to the Committee on Territories, as it relates to proceedings about the settlement of lands, and properly belongs to the Committee on Public Lands.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 729) to change the port of entry in Puget's sound, reported it without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a communication from the Department of State respecting the establishment of a marine hospital at Yokohama, in Japan, reported a bill (S. No. 408) making an appropriation for the erection of a marine hospital at Yokohama, in Japan, and for other purposes; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 609) to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in Minnesota, ports of delivery, reported it without amendment.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 408) to place the name of Sarah Bacon on the pension-list, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of Edgar T. Harris, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommended a bill (H. R. No. 705) for the relief of George W. Bush, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 739) for the relief of Samantha Rader, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 742) for the relief of the minor children of Salvador Accadi, deceased, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 743) amendatory to an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler," reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 740) for the relief of Matilda J. Monroe, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 741) granting a pension to Jonathan W. Beach, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Daniel McMahon, late a captain in the twentieth regiment New York militia, praying for a pension, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Sabina Himpelman, widow of the late Julius Himpelman, late a private in company H, forty-sixth regiment New York volunteers, praying for a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, as this case, in the opinion of the committee, comes under the general law passed at this session.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Catharine B. Whitall, praying for a pension, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 180) extending the time for the completion of the Agricultural College of the State of Iowa, reported it without amendment.

ST. PAUL AND LAKE SUPERIOR RAILROAD.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 191) to amend an act making a grant of lands to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of the railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior, approved May 5, 1864, reported it without amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. If there be no objection, I ask the Senate to proceed at once to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I presume there is no objection to considering it now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section one of the act entitled "An act making a grant of lands to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of the railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior," approved May 5, 1864, by adding to it the following proviso; provided further: that in case it shall appear, when the line of the Lake Superior and Mississippi railroad is definitely located, that the quantity of land intended to be granted by the said act in aid of the construction of the said road shall be deficient by reason of the line thereof running near the boundary line of the said State of Minnesota, the said company shall be entitled to take from other public lands of the United States within thirty miles of the west line of said road such an amount of lands as shall make up such deficiency; provided, that the same shall be taken in alternate odd sections as provided for in said act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVENING SESSION FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report to the Senate the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That there be an evening session of the Senate on Friday, the 6th instant, commencing at seven o'clock p. m., for the purpose of considering bills and reports from the Committee on Pensions.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CAPTURE AWARDS.

Mr. HOWE. Some time since the Secretary of War made a report, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, communicating the evidence upon which the special bounty or reward was recommended to be distributed for the capture of Jefferson Davis, and those papers were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia. I suppose the Committee on Finance will before the session closes recommend an appropriation to pay that award, and it seems to me proper that that committee should have those papers before them. I therefore submit a motion that the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia be discharged from the further consideration of them and that they be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMERCE ON CHINESE COAST.

Mr. TRUMBULL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, whether any, and if so how many, American vessels have been destroyed by pirates during the last year on the coast of China; and whether additional legislation is necessary for the protection of American commerce on that coast.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 409) to provide for the publication of papers relating to foreign affairs; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 122) to authorize the Secretary of War to make compensation for persons held to service or labor enlisted or drafted into the military service during the war; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a report from the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill, which I should like to have acted upon at the present time.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the second, third, and tenth amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its sixth amendment.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the fifth amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out of said Senate amendment by the House the following words: "and in advertising for Army supplies the quartermaster's department shall require all articles which are to be used in the States and Territories of the Pacific coast to be delivered and inspected at points designated in those States and Territories, and the advertisements for such supplies shall be published in newspapers in the cities of San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in Oregon;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: in line eight of said amendment, after the word "shall," insert the following words: "in time of peace."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy may hereafter be selected, and the officers on duty at that institution detailed, from any arm of the service; and the supervision and charge of the Academy shall be in the War Department, under such officer or officers as the Secretary of War may assign to that duty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out all of said Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That when it is necessary to employ soldiers as artificers or laborers in the construction of permanent military works, public roads, or other constant labor of not less than ten days' duration in any case, they shall receive, in addition to their regular pay, the following additional compensation therefor: enlisted men working as artificers, and non-commissioned officers employed as overseers of such work, not exceeding one overseer for every twenty men, thirty-five cents per day, and enlisted men employed as laborers, twenty cents per day; but such working parties shall only be authorized on the written order of a commanding officer. This allowance of extra pay is not to apply to the troops of the engineer and ordnance departments;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN SHERMAN,

HENRY WILSON,

RICHARD YATES,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

W. E. NIBLACK,

M. RUSSELL THAYER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GRIMES. What changes have been made?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Iowa asks me what changes have been made by the committee of conference. The Senate recede from one amendment in regard to the purchase of land in Nashville. The other amendments of the Senate have been agreed to, somewhat modified. If the Senator will mention any particular amendment upon which he desires information I will answer him. The Senate amendments have been substantially agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. What has been done with the amendment in regard to the Illinois Central railroad?

Mr. SHERMAN. The House recede from that amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. What has been done about the West Point superintendency?

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment in regard to the Superintendent at West Point is left substantially as the Senate made it. The Senate amendment was agreed to by the House committee, with some modifications which change but very little the meaning of it. All the amendments of the Senate, which are mostly of a legislative character, are agreed to—I think every one of them, with some modifications of phraseology.

The report was concurred in.

LAW OF BOUNTY.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the joint resolution of the House of Representatives declaratory of the law of bounty. It is a small matter, and will not take long.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 149) declaratory of the law of bounty. It provides that where any enlisted man has been or may be detailed for duty as a clerk, or for any other duty in any executive bureau, at headquarters or elsewhere, he shall not by such detail be deprived of any rights to bounties now due or hereafter to become due, but shall be as fully entitled thereto as though no such detail had been made.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up Senate resolution No. 121.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the auditing of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is an authorization and request to the President of the United States to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two commissioners who shall examine into the claim and audit the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended for coast defense during the war, and shall make a full and complete report thereon to Congress at its next session.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend the resolution by striking out in the sixth line the words "and audit the accounts;" so as to read, "commissioners who shall examine into the claim of the State of Massachusetts," &c.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like to hear from the Senator from Massachusetts the nature of these defenses, the structures for which he now claims pay from the Government; whether they were made on Government plans, or what was their nature or description. It must not be forgotten that other States may have claims of very considerable magnitude of a similar nature, and I think we ought to be a little cautious how we proceed to recognize such claims at this time. I really am in ignorance of the nature of these claims, and should like therefore to hear the Senator from Massachusetts describe them.

Mr. WILSON. I would commend the Senator from Michigan to the report made by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. SPRAGUE,] from the Military Committee, on this subject, in which the facts are very clearly set forth. It appears that the Secretary of State sent a circular to the Governors of some of the States stating that there was great danger that our harbors would be entered by ships in the interests of the confederacy, and recommending that the States should take action to prepare their cities against such attacks. The Governor of the State of Massachusetts recommended to the Legislature to make an appropriation for that purpose on the strength of the recommendation of the Secretary of State; and the Legislature appropriated $1,000,000 for that purpose. Of that money about four hundred thousand dollars were expended in the purchase of guns and other means of defense. The Senator from Rhode Island made a report from the Committee on Military Affairs in favor of paying that sum of about four hundred thousand dollars; but objection was made to that, and this resolution is now a simple proposition to appoint a commission to examine into and report the facts of the case, so that Congress at the next session may have that report before them. I do not think it binds Congress in any respect whatever. I will say to Senators that the bill will be lessened nearly one half if the Government will consent to it; for I am told that the State of Massachusetts has received an offer for the guns on hand for their cost, and has applied to the Government to be permitted to allow them to be sold.

Mr. HOWARD. Massachusetts still holds the title to all this property, guns, &c.

Mr. WILSON. The resolution reported by the committee before, provided that they should all be turned over to the ordnance department of the Army. This commission will examine the precise condition and facts of the case, on which we can base future action. It does not bind us to anything. I hope there will be no objection to the proposed examination of the facts.

Mr. HOWARD. I did not rise for the purpose of objecting to the passage of the resolution, but merely to obtain information. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts for giving it.

Mr. GRIMES. Whether the resolution will bind us or not to the payment of the claim, I think, depends somewhat on the question whether or not the Senate adopts my amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. If we passed the resolution as it was, it would stand very much in the light of an interlocutory judgment and the appointment of a master to examine as to the amount of damage. With my amendment, I think we shall not run that risk.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not precisely understand how that can be the effect of the amendment. If I understand the amendment it is to strike out the words "and audit the accounts." If a claim is to be examined and reported upon definitely, what is the difference whether it be audited or not? Auditing a claim does not commit us to the payment of it if it is to be reported to Congress for action hereafter. I have no objection to the amendment, but I do not see how it affects the claim.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to striking out the words directing the auditing of the claim if the Senator from Iowa objects to them. All is obtained that I desire to obtain by the passage of the resolution with those words stricken out.

Mr. GRIMES. I will say in reply to the Senator from Kansas that I may not be very well informed as to the proper use of the English language, but I understand that a claim is not audited unless it can be allowed under some law; and when we use the word "audited" we commit ourselves to the validity of the claim, and the only question then is as to the amount which we shall be compelled to pay.

Mr. POMEROY. I cannot see how words providing for the auditing of a claim that is afterward to be investigated by Congress can affect the claim or commit us to its payment. I do not see that those words add to or take anything from it.

Mr. GRIMES. If we used that language we should not have an opportunity to investigate it afterward.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not wish to raise any objection to the passage of this resolution, but it strikes me as a singular species of legislation. There was no law of the land, as I understand, under which the State of Massachusetts undertook to provide protection against an invasion of her harbors. There was no authority of law enabling her to make this expenditure. Certainly the defense of the coast of the country is a matter proper for the General Government. To allow a State to erect whatever fortifications that State may see proper without any authority of law from the General Government, and then to pay the bill, is certainly committing a very large discretion to the States, because there are a great many works of defense and improvement which a particular State and the citizens of that State may desire upon its coast that the General Government might not see proper, even in time of war, to erect. If a State of its own motion may undertake to erect fortifications or works of defense which are agreeable to her own citizens, certainly it is giving that State a very great advantage for the Federal Government to foot the bill. Whatever, according to the judgment of the people of that State, may be desirable, they may go on constructing, notwithstanding the absence of any law or authority on the part of the Federal Government, and then come to Congress and ask that the bill be paid.

The coast of my State was as much exposed according to its size as the State of Massachusetts, and it would have been very desirable during the last war to have fortifications erected at Lewes, on Delaware bay, but I apprehend that it would not have been proper for the Legislature of Delaware without any authority of Federal law to make such improvements and erect such fortifications as might have been convenient to that State and desirable to her people.

It seems to me this is a species of legislation which ought not to be encouraged, and yet we know how very modest Massachusetts is. She never asks for anything but what is right, and therefore I presume she will obtain anything she does desire. At the same time I must say again that I think it is a very dangerous species of legislation. If the precedent is once set, every State hereafter in time of war will go to work, erect fortifications upon her coast, give employment to her people, spend a large sum of money, do everything on the coast that that particular State may desire, when perhaps the Federal Government would not, if it undertook the work, make half the expenditure, and then when the fright is over, when nobody is hurt, when no State has been invaded, present a handsome little bill to Congress to foot. Thus a State may have all the improvements on her coast that she wants, without any authority of law from the General Government, and which have only been pleasing and desirable to her own people, constructed at the cost of the General Government. I think the precedent is a very dangerous one.

Mr. SPRAGUE. There was no law for sending forty or fifty thousand troops to Washington after the firing upon Fort Sumter; but still those troops have been paid by the Federal Government. This is a parallel case. Danger threatened the coast; the Government of the United States warned the Governors of the States that were nearest to the danger, and expenditures were made for ammunition and for ordnance. Three fourths of this claim is for ammunition and ordnance now in the possession of Massachusetts which it is desirable that the Government of the United States should take and pay for in accordance with the terms of the original purchase. The expenditures for this ordnance and this ammunition were made at the desire of the General Government. By letters communicated to the different States and people throughout the country, the officials in each State were constantly warned of threatened danger from foreign invasion and urged to take measures against them.

Sir, this was simply at that time a loan of the money of Massachusetts to the General Government when the money which was wanted could not be obtained or was not in the hands of the General Government, as everybody knows, to pay these claims. Massachusetts at that time could more readily obtain the funds necessary for this expenditure than the General Government, and hence the money was raised by Massachusetts and the expenditures made by her. At every point where expenses were entered into for coast defense, the spot was designated by the General Government and by its officers. Most if not all of these expenditures were made upon works already existing in order to put them in a proper state of defense. They were in a dilapidated condition; there had been little or no money expended by the General Government upon those forts for many years, and a slight force could raid upon them and take them.

It had been seen by the Government how easy it was to obstruct the ports at the South by the sinking of old hulls and in other ways, and the Navy Department requested, solicited the authorities of Massachusetts to set at work its engineers and its men capable of bringing about that state of things to suggest good plans for harbor defense. That was accomplished, and those plans are now in the hands of Massachusetts ready to be turned over to the Government, and will be as available hereafter if the necessity arises as would have been expenditures made by this Government directly for that purpose. Telegraphs were established between the different forts in the harbors of Massachusetts, and they were used by the Government of the United States from the beginning of their establishment until there was no further necessity for the use of these wires.

By paying this claim the Government of the United States will get nearly or quite the whole amount of its expenditure back again in the shape of superior guns and ammunition. Everybody can conceive the embarrassments that a State is under in the possession of ordnance and ammunition at this time. It cannot dispose of them to advantage so as fully to reimburse itself for the expenditure it has made. I think this is a clear case of an absolute loan by Massachusetts to the Government at a time when the Government could not obtain funds for itself.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If this was a loan by the State of Massachusetts to the General Government, the question necessarily arises, who were the high contracting parties? Who had the power, the legal authority, to borrow money of Massachusetts? Was there any act of Congress authorizing the General Government to ask for or accept a loan from Massachusetts? None whatever. You cannot treat this as a loan, because there was no law for it. Who receipted for it? Who received the loan? Now, sir, my own State all along its coast has been exposed—

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the Governor of Delaware had his attention called to this subject by the same circular which called the attention of the Governor of Massachusetts to it. I suppose, therefore, that the Governor or the Legislature of Delaware thought they had no great interest to be protected, or that they were sufficiently protected, for I believe they took no action in regard to the matter; but the Governor of Massachusetts, after receiving the same circular that was addressed to the Governor of Delaware and of all the other States, thought it was necessary to take some action for the protection of the coast of the State.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say in reply to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that this is the first time I ever heard that the attention of the Governor of my State was called to this subject. I was in the State at the time, and certainly if his attention was called to it he never called the attention of the Legislature of the State to it. We had interests to protect. The breakwater near the mouth of the Delaware bay and the shipping there was exposed, and it would have been very desirable indeed to have had fortifications erected there. If we had thought that we could get reimbursed by the General Government for erecting fortifications there we certainly would have erected them. It would have given employment to our people, and would have brought considerable money into the treasury; because, after all, when a bill is made out by a particular State and presented to the General Government it is very apt to be large enough; it is no money-losing business, but rather a money-making business. I apprehend there is hardly a State in the Union but what would have expended, if it had had such an offer, considerable money in erecting fortifications on its own coast.

But it turns out now that a great deal of the amount asked for by this resolution is for guns and ammunition. If Massachusetts has expended money for guns and ammunition and now wishes to get clear of them, let her put them up at public sale and let the Federal Government buy them; or let her representatives bring in a bill authorizing the General Government to purchase of the State of Massachusetts guns and ammunition; but do not put it in the form of reimbursing Massachusetts for money expended in coast defense, for these guns and ammunition which are on hand now certainly do not properly come under that head. It is not money expended for coast defense. It is money expended in buying just as many guns and just as much ammunition as the authorities of Massachusetts deemed proper or necessary; and then if they had any surplus on hand why should they be paid for by the General Government?

I do not object to this measure on account of its coming from Massachusetts. I would have made the same objection if it had come from any other State. The point of my objection is, that if you once set this precedent, and we should ever be in a war again, or threatened with war, every State, of its own motion, will buy guns and ammunition, and erect and complete fortifications, with the expectation that the Federal Government will pay the amount of the expenditure; and having set the precedent in this case, I ask you, sir, how could you reasonably deny such an application? It is admitted here that there was no act of Congress and no authority of law under which this money was expended. It seems simply to have been a notification from the Secretary of State that there was danger of invasion of the harbors of the coast. The Secretary of State is not the General Government. The Secretary of State has no authority to draw money from the public Treasury, or to contract with a State or an individual that money shall be so drawn, or to pledge the faith of the Government that if money is expended it shall be paid. As to this particular case, if it stood alone, if it was not for the precedent that will be set by it, and the dangers you will incur of having large drafts hereafter made upon your Treasury, I would not say a word. With these remarks, having no feeling whatever in the case, I submit the question to the Senate and shall say no more about it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Secretary of State, in his communication, represented the President of the United States, and his communication was made during the recess of Congress, when it was impossible to get any legislation of Congress on the subject.

The resolution was passed, and its title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution providing for an examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense."

RETROCESSION OF ALEXANDRIA.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 280.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 280) to repeal an act entitled "An act to retrocede the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, to the State of Virginia," and for other purposes.

The preamble recites that the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress "shall exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of Government of the United States;" that by an act of Congress approved July 16, 1790, ten miles square of territory was accepted from the States of Maryland and Virginia, as the permanent seat of Government, constituting what was subsequently known as the District of Columbia, that when so accepted and defined, all jurisdiction over it was, by the Constitution, forever vested in Congress, whose duty it was then, and forever after, to preserve it unviolated and free from all control whatsoever save that of Congress; that experience derived from the recent rebellion, has demonstrated the wisdom of preserving such ten miles square under the exclusive control of Congress, both for military and civil purposes, and for the defense of the capital; and that by an act of Congress approved July 9, 1846, that portion of the said ten miles square lying south of the Potomac was ceded back to the State of Virginia, in violation of the intent and meaning of the Constitution of the United States, and to the great peril of the capital as aforesaid. The bill, therefore, proposes to forever repeal and declare null and void the act of Congress approved July 9, 1846, retroceding to the State of Virginia that portion of the district ten miles square, as provided by the Constitution, known as the District of Columbia, and the jurisdiction of Congress, and the laws provided for the District of Columbia are put in force, the same as if that act of retrocession had never been passed.

Private and personal property is not to be affected by this act, so far as the rights of parties are concerned; but all public property of which the United States were possessed at the time of the retrocession of this portion of the District of Columbia to the State of Virginia is, from and after the passage of this act, to be vested in the United States Government, any law, act, or conveyance to the contrary notwithstanding, and the Government, through its proper officials, is authorized to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, any and all further property, real or personal, in this portion of the District of Columbia, as may be deemed necessary for public use.

All suits and actions at law, civil or criminal, are, from and after the passage of this act, to be conducted and determined according to the laws, rules, and regulations enacted and provided by Congress for the District of Columbia, excepting causes wherein final judgment, decree, or sentence shall have been pronounced or passed; in such cases the final satisfaction of such judgments or decrees is to be in accordance with the laws in force in the State of Virginia. But all causes wherein final judgment or decree shall not have been passed or pronounced are to be in future conducted and determined as provided by this act.

All taxes and revenues assessable and collectible on property, real or personal, in the portion of the District of Columbia south of the Potomac, are, from and after the passage of this act, to be rated, collected, and applied according to the existing or future laws of Congress governing the District of Columbia.

All civil offices in the portion of the District of Columbia south of the Potomac, in the city of Alexandria, and what is known as the county of Alexandria, are declared vacant; and the vacancies so created are to be filled by new appointments or elections, to be made and held under the laws, regulations, and qualifications provided by Congress for elections and elections in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WADE. This is a bill of very considerable importance, and I observe that the Senate seem to be taking no note of it whatever, and that but very few are present.

This District was once composed of ten miles square. I suppose every Senator knows the history of the District of Columbia; why it happened to be set off; why it was provided for in the Constitution of the United States; and all the particulars in reference to it. I do not know of anything in our political history up to the time of the recent war that created a greater sensation among the people of the United States than the question of where should be the location of their capital, the ten miles square provided for by the Constitution. A number of places were designated; and Congress was perhaps as much agitated upon that question as upon any other that has ever arisen. It was settled by a great compromise. We are told by Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison that it came very near creating a rupture and perhaps a disunion of the States. Judging from the controversy that then arose, the question was considered by the statesmen of that day as of much greater interest than the importance of the subject would seem to have warranted. The preceding Congress had sat in Philadelphia. About the time that the whisky insurrection arose in the State of Pennsylvania Congress feared that they would be disturbed there. Disturbances did arise that threatened, perhaps, the session of Congress at that place. The Governor of Pennsylvania was applied to; but his answer was not very satisfactory to Congress. Thereupon, their attention being called to the subject, the question became agitated, until finally they fixed, under the Constitution, upon this place, this ten miles square, as the permanent seat of Government. The Constitution provides, in the eighth section of the first article, that Congress shall have power—

"To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district, (not exceeding ten miles square,) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States."

The General Assembly of Maryland, by an act passed December 23, 1788, entitled "An act to cede to Congress a district of ten miles in this State for the seat of Government of the United States," authorized and directed its representatives on behalf of the State to cede any district in the State, not to exceed ten miles, which Congress might fix for a seat of Government. The act of these delegates was afterward affirmed by the General Assembly in an act of ratification passed December 19, 1791. The General Assembly of the State of Virginia in 1789 passed a like act for that portion of it that was finally located in the State of Virginia. All agreed in fixing this as the permanent location of the seat of Government under the constitutional provision authorizing that to be done.

The question arises, when that power became executed by the final and permanent location of the seat of Government here, and the ten miles square were ceded by those States and accepted by Congress under the Constitution, whether it was in the power of Congress afterward to retrocede any portion of it to Virginia or Maryland or any other State. I do not suppose it was any more competent for Congress to cede any portion of this ten miles square that had been thus fixed upon under the Constitution of the United States to the State of Maryland or the State of Virginia, from which it was taken, than it would be to cede it to any other State of the United States. The cession was full, ample, plenary, and exhausted all the power both of the States and of Congress over the subject. Congress were invested with all the legislative power over this District that could be exercised by any Legislature. No power over it was left in those States any more than was left in the other States. The cession was as complete as when one neighbor deeds his farm in fee-simple to another, reserving no right, title, or interest in it whatever. Therefore these States had no more particular claim over it for a retrocession than any other State. The question arises, had Congress the right, had they the power to divide this grant? If they could do so nobody will deny that to-morrow Congress may, if they see fit, cede the other portion of it to Maryland. I believe the ablest jurists in the United States have considered that the act of Congress in 1846 ceding this territory back to Virginia was an unauthorized, unconstitutional act. I have heard no opinion of any lawyer or judge on the subject who believed the act was constitutional. Of course, this original cession was the joint act of the State of Maryland, the State of Virginia, and Congress, all three coöperating and concurring; and it was necessary that that should be done in order to fix the seat of Government here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of Tuesday, which is the bill (S. No. 405) making appropriation for the reconstruction and repair of the levees of the Mississippi river in the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas, and for the improvement of the river.

Mr. WADE. I move that that bill be laid aside informally.

Mr. BROWN. Oh, no, not informally; altogether.

Mr. WADE. I move that it be postponed for the present, in order that we may proceed with this bill in relation to the retrocession of Alexandria.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I was saying that it required the joint action of Maryland, Virginia, and of Congress in order to fix this constitutional right of having a seat of Government ten miles square, according to the provisions and requisitions of the Constitution. Now I ask any lawyer, could any power or authority less than that which coöperated and was necessary to concur in making this location, dissever and convey it away to another? On the general principles of the common law, it could not have been done except by the joint action of all that concurred in the settlement of it. I suppose, therefore, that the act of retrocession was an unconstitutional act; that it had no authority.

There is another reason why I suppose the act was unconstitutional. That act of 1846 provided that this retrocession should depend upon the vote of the county of Alexandria; that the people there should assemble and vote upon the subject, and if they concurred in it then the retrocession should take effect. I do not suppose that it is in the power of Congress to cede away its legislative authority. I do not suppose that it can transfer its legislative power to any county or any other division or part or portion of the country whatever. The sovereign power conferred upon it by the Constitution is, as it were, personal. It is not transferrable at the will of Congress or any other power in this Government; nor can it confer that right upon any county or any other place. I believe that is a question that has been often settled; so much so that it is hardly necessary to turn—

Mr. COWAN. It is like delegating the veto power.

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir, it would be delegating a veto power. The people of the United States who do not consent to your grant are not to be ceded like the inhabitants of Poland to any other jurisdiction. Whenever the jurisdiction over them is fixed by the Constitution and laws of the United States, it is not left to a majority of that municipality to say whether they shall be transferred to a foreign jurisdiction or not. That is incompatible with the rights of an American citizen. There are many rights about which a majority have no power to act and ought never to act. If I own property in Alexandria and have my status, my domicile, fixed there under the laws of Congress can I be transferred to a strange, foreign jurisdiction against my will? Have a majority the right to transfer me over there against my will because they happen to be a majority? I do not believe that can be done.

I will say here in passing that I have looked over the very meager debate that occurred on this question in 1846, at the time this retrocession was made. The subject created but very little debate in Congress. Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, was the mover of it; he was the principal arguer of it. Mr. Webster was not present. I understand from the history of the time that he was opposed to it as an unauthorized and unconstitutional act, but he was not present to argue or to vote upon it, although he was a member of the Senate at the time.

Mr. HARRIS. What were the provisions of the act of retrocession of 1846?

Mr. WADE. I have stated its provisions.

I thought I had that act before me, but I have not. I can get it very easily.

Mr. COWAN. It submitted it to the people; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. WADE. As I have stated, there is no doubt that it was left to the vote of the people of Alexandria. Now, Mr. President, believing the act of retrocession to be entirely unauthorized by the Constitution of the United States; believing, as I do, that it was gotten up for no other purpose than as preparatory to the secession of the States that took place afterward, I desire to repeal the act. We all know that the abstractionists and secessionists, the statesmen representing old Virginia in this Senate, for many years had been hostile to the Union of these States, or, at all events, had contended for doctrines utterly destructive to the permanent Union of the States, claiming the right to annul any law that was unpalatable to a sovereign State of this Union, claiming the right to secede from this Union, peaceably, as they called it, whenever a State should believe that circumstances existed which in its judgment would warrant and authorize such a proceeding. They did not claim the right of revolution, which we all admit, taking the hazard and the consequences of it. When any people are so oppressed by the laws under which they live that they believe the hazard of a violent revolution is justified, I grant you they must be the judges; but these secessionists claimed the peaceable right under the Constitution to secede, not as a revolutionary but as a constitutional right. They had been dreaming over that subject, arguing upon it in Congress, mooted it everywhere, until it became the prevailing doctrine in all the southern States; and it was meditated even at that time that those States were to secede from the Union; and nothing which could have been done to prepare the States for the attempted disunion by violence that took place afterward could have been better calculated to forward the success of such an attempt than first to get back that part of the District of Columbia which came from Virginia. It brought the sovereignty, as they called it, of that State right up under your Capitol, for old Virginia has always claimed the Potomac river up to the Maryland bank, and brought your Capitol right under the guns of the State. You cannot defend your Capitol against the State unless you have the entire territory that you stipulated for under the Constitution and as was provided for in the original act of Congress.

Why did our fathers claim so large a territory as ten miles square for the seat of Government? It was for the reason to which I have already alluded. Previously Congress had been held in a State, subject as it were to State jurisdiction, subject to all the turbulence that might be stirred up by State authorities, who might perhaps in time propose to drive members of Congress from their seats. They saw the propriety of having a territory at least large enough to enable them to defend themselves against the point-blank shot of their enemies if a civil war should arise; and according to modern gunnery it takes fully ten miles square if you desire to put your Capitol effectually beyond the reach of cannon-shot at this day.

Now, sir, what a predicament are we in! When the rebellion broke out, every member of the Senate who was here then remembers how we expected, yea were afraid, that on Arlington heights the rebels would erect fortifications and plant their batteries for the destruction of this city, or this Capitol. And what shall prevent the State of Virginia tomorrow, if she should meditate another attempt to go out of the Union, from erecting fortifications there, placing them on her own soil as she calls it now, within range of your Capitol, compelling us to legislate here under the guns of an enemy?

Mr. President, I have stated some of the reasons which were potential at the time in inducing the requirement of so large a territory for the national capital. Ten miles square is none too large to give us entire independence within the jurisdiction of the United States, subject to no State interference, to no State authority whatever. It is not too large for us to fortify, if we please, against all foreign aggression. And yet this retrocession, as I said before, does away with all this security and places us under the control of a "sovereign State."

But, besides all this, we have a great number of petitions presented here asking for the passage of this bill. When it was first agitated about the time this session commenced there seemed to be very great opposition to the measure. Almost all the original secessionists in Alexandria were entirely opposed to any such thing. They claimed to belong to the State of Virginia, and it was their ardent desire to stay there; they did not like to be under the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States. But I have observed, and the petitions on file show, that as the question has been agitated there among all classes it has become more and more popular, and I believe to-day, and I am informed by some of the best men there, that they have no doubt that a majority of the people of Alexandria themselves wish to come back to the old fold from which they were driven by an act unauthorized by the Constitution of the United States. The taxation of the State is exceedingly grievous to be borne, and they find that by going out from under the jurisdiction of Congress into that of the State of Virginia they have lost immensely in every way, and they wish now to get under the shadow of this great Government, and be governed by its equitable laws, and freed from that onerous burden of debt that would rest upon them as members of the State of Virginia, and I claim that they have a perfect right to prefer this.

Besides, sir, it should be remembered that we have a great cemetery on Arlington heights where lie the bones of many brave and patriotic men who fell in defense of their country, a place held sacred and revered by every patriotic man and woman in the United States. We are bound to protect their remains from that indignity to which they will be subjected if we allow them to be under the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia.

But, Mr. President, it has been said by some with whom I have conversed that this is a constitutional question, that if the act of retrocession was not authorized by the Constitution of the United States those affected can bring a process in the courts of the United States and try the question there. I do not deny that that may be done; but it is a great hardship to put upon the Union people who have ever been loyal, who have ever resisted what almost everybody considered an unauthorized and unconstitutional act, the burden of prosecuting such a suit. We ought to place them back on the same footing that they would have occupied if no such unwarrantable law had been passed. It is their right to claim that; it is their due; and I hope every gentleman here will be willing to award it to them.

Sir the great capital, laid out by the Father of his Country, the territory surveyed, as it were, under his own eye, and most dear to his own patriotic heart, has been mutilated by this act. There ought to be some reverence paid to those who made the compromise under which this District was made the seat of Government—the greatest compromise that ever took place under our Constitution. We ought not thus ruthlessly to tear it up and annul it. How was it brought about? I have alluded to the fact that the question was so important a one that it endangered the Union itself; and how did we get over the difficulty? Every gentleman acquainted with the history of his country knows full well that after we came out of the war of the Revolution, burdened with an enormous debt, there was a great question to be settled, how that debt should be disposed of; one party claiming that the debt should be funded and taken under the protection of the United States Government, and paid by it, and the other claiming that the States should pay the debt, as they had incurred it. The latter proposition was very unjust, in my judgment, because it would have thrown the great burden of the debt of the Revolution upon the northern States, who had furnished infinitely the greatest number of troops, who had been at infinitely the greatest expense during that war; and consequently they declared that the debt ought to be funded and paid by the General Government; and the other party took the opposite ground, and opposed it because, it threw the debt off the shoulders of one section of the country and compelled the other to participate in it according to their ability or according to the equitable rules which prevailed in collecting taxes for the payment of the debts.

Another controversy existing at that time, just about as stubborn, just about as uncontrollable, just about as hopeless to settle, was on the question where the seat of Government should be located. There were three or four places that were contended for. Mr. Madison, as you will see when you come to read his speech on the subject, declared that the Union could not have been formed if it had been believed that the seat of Government was to be located upon the Susquehanna river, which was one of the places proposed, or on the Delaware river, which was another. The place could not be agreed upon. Congress had separated, and the prospect of agreement on these subjects seemed to be entirely hopeless. Finally some of the leading statesmen at the time with great difficulty got some of the members together and agreed that a compromise should be made by fixing the seat of Government here and funding the debt. The North yielded its side of the controversy by bringing the seat of Government down to the Potomac, and the South gave up its opposition to the funding of the debt. The two things were brought together and the controversy was settled in that way; and although we have receded a great while from that period, it seems to me to be a want of good faith now to tear up that agreement. I think it ought to remain as they fixed it in settling the great and dangerous controversy which existed at that time. I feel that this is the right of the Union men in Alexandria and all that part of the District which has been turned over into the State of Virginia, who have been persecuted in person and property by a kind of vindictive process beyond what they would have been if they had never belonged to this District. This is their wish. They look to us as the ark of their safety; as the jurisdiction to which they have always properly belonged; their hearts are with us, and always have been with us. They were turned away by this unauthorized act, that was got up undoubtedly in aid of this great rebellion that it so much favored, bringing the walls of your Capitol under the guns of a hostile State.

Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the argument on this subject. Indeed, I do not know that I could throw any additional light on it if I went into more detail, because all the facts pertaining to the history of the Government in this respect are understood by every Senator present. We are all aware of the policy that dictated this mutilation and division. It was done at a time when the State of old Virginia was most potential in Congress. You cannot find an instance in the history of the Government for twenty years prior to that time where the will of that State had ever failed in either branch of Congress. Whatever she demanded was a law. She demanded this, and the subservient statesmen of that day yielded to her imperious demand without the authority of the Constitution. They ought not to have done it. The people being wronged and outraged and their rights trampled on by means of it, appeal to us now, in better times, to rectify the mistake that was made at that period. I hope we shall do it.

Mr. DAVIS. I happened to be a member of the House of Representatives when Alexandria was retroceded to Virginia, and I voted against the measure. I voted against it because I did not think it was competent for Congress to make the retrocession. I am still of that opinion. I believe that the act of retrocession was outside of the competence and power of Congress, and is void; but whether it is or not, to my mind is a judicial question. I am not now disposed to vote and will not vote for the repeal of that law. If the act had any validity, and one of its effects was to retransfer to the State of Virginia the people of that portion of the District of Columbia, and if I was a citizen of Alexandria, I would want the retrocession to remain perpetual. In God's name I should never want to come under the government of Congress. I would certainly much prefer to be under the government of the State of Virginia if I were a citizen of Alexandria. If I were a citizen of Georgetown, and the retrocession had been of the portion of the State of Maryland that was originally ceded by that State to the General Government, I should desire that that retrocession should be valid and perpetual. As a citizen of Virginia or a citizen of Maryland I never would want to be under the government of the Congress of the United States. That portion of the District that we have not ceded back, that is, the portion which was ceded by Maryland for the purposes of the General Government, it seems to me gives to Congress quite enough trouble. Legislation upon the subject of the people of this District, as it has been mutilated, as I think, by an unconstitutional act, engrosses a large portion of the time of Congress. It is a source of much difficulty and vexation in Congress to legislate properly for it and a very considerable expense to the United States Treasury. It seems to me that if Alexandria was brought back to the District by a repeal of the retrocession law it would only increase proportionately the labors of Congress in legislating for twice as many people in the District of Columbia as they have now to legislate for; and it would have the further effect, which to my mind is much more objectionable, of bringing a large additional population to submit to a state of things where they would have no right of self-government.

About the same time Texas was annexed to the United States by joint resolution. We all know that a treaty had been first formed between Texas and the United States under Mr. Tyler's administration; a treaty, I believe, negotiated by Mr. Calhoun for the cession of Texas as foreign territory to the United States. That treaty was opposed at the time by the Democratic party, and most vehemently and ably and persistently by Senator Benton; and the treaty was rejected. After the treaty was rejected the joint resolution of Congress was introduced for the purpose of admitting Texas as a State into the Union. I then happened to be a member of Congress and I voted against the annexation of Texas in that way, because I then believed and I still believe that foreign territory cannot be annexed to the United States by a joint resolution of Congress. Congress has no powers but legislative powers, and the scope of its powers does include validly, as I conceive, the act of admitting foreign territory, even in the form of a State, into the Union as one of the States of the United States. I thought it was an illegitimate mode of acquiring the annexation of foreign territory to the United States. I am still of that opinion. I believe that the joint resolution was against the Constitution and was void and ineffectual. But that now has become a judicial question; and if there was a proposition offered in Congress to repeal the joint resolution annexing Texas I would not vote for the passage of such a resolution repealing that joint resolution; why? The act has been done by the forms of authority. Whether the act be constitutional and valid or not is now a judicial question. It has passed, as I think, properly from the legislative department to the courts. I think that the question still could be made of the validity of the annexation of Texas to the United States by joint resolution in the courts of the country. So in relation to the retrocession of Alexandria to Virginia. I may be mistaken, but in my own mind I have no doubt that the question of the validity of that retrocession might be made judicially in the courts of the country, and I think it ought to go there.

I will not pretend to say whether the act of retrocession is valid or not; I cannot say so; but I believe that it is invalid. That is the conclusion of my own judgment. It was so at the time the act of retrocession passed, and my opinion has not since undergone any change. I still believe that it was an invalid, unconstitutional act, and beyond the competency of Congress. Whether it be invalid and unconstitutional or not, in my opinion could be tested at any time in the simplest form in our courts of justice, and I think that the question ought to go there.

But, sir, if the act of retrocession was valid, it gave to the State of Virginia rights in that territory retroceded. Whether it could be ceded back again by the State of Virginia under the original provision of the Constitution for getting ten miles square for the seat of the General Government, is another question. It might be done; probably it could be done. But upon the proposition that if the act of retrocession was valid it invests Virginia with the title as a part of the Commonwealth of Virginia to the country so retroceded, I have no doubt. If that be the effect of it, then the act cannot now be repealed so as to divest Virginia of her right to Alexandria and to the portion of the country outside the city of Alexandria that was included in the act of retrocession.

I will put another case. I believed, and I still believe, that the State of West Virginia was organized unconstitutionally, without proper and valid authority, and that legally and constitutionally West Virginia is not now a State of the Union. But whether this be so or not, I hold to be a judicial question, no longer to be submitted to the legislative department of the Government, but to the courts; and if at this session or any future session when I might happen to be a member of Congress, an effort was made to repeal the laws and the action of the two Houses of Congress in relation to the erection of West Virginia into a State of the Union, I would vote against any such legislation, and I would do it upon the same principle that I now stand opposed to the repeal of law retroceding Alexandria to Virginia, because I think the action of Congress upon both subjects has placed the question in the form of a judicial question and beyond the legitimate pale of the legislative action of the Government. My vote will be to leave the question in the present case, and in relation to West Virginia, if it ever should come up, to the courts, to be decided by the courts upon the constitutionality and the validity of the action of Congress in the two cases.

Certainly, sir, if I was a citizen of Alexandria I should never want to be made subject, as a part of the ten miles square, to be brought under the jurisdiction of Congress. If I resided there, I should regard it as one of the greatest individual misfortunes to me and to the particular community in which I lived for this reannexation to take place. I have had from observation a good deal of experience as to the legislation of Congress for this District. I have observed it for eight years in the other House and for now five years in the Senate; and certainly during that whole period, without any exception as to times or parties, among the worst governments I have ever known has been the government by Congress of the District of Columbia. If I were a citizen of Alexandria, I would say "The Lord deliver me from congressional government;" and I have no doubt many of the citizens there will say so.

I do not think it is proper, or just, or within the proper exercise of the powers of Congress, to repeal the bill that retroceded Alexandria to Virginia, and, without consulting the Commonwealth of Virginia, as it at present exists, and the people of Alexandria, to attempt to bring those people into the District of Columbia. For these reasons I shall vote against the measure.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope the honorable

Senator from Ohio who has charge of this bill will let it go over until to-morrow. My attention had not been called to it until on coming to the Capitol this morning, on the avenue, some gentlemen from Virginia spoke to me about it. I did not know it would come up to-day. I should like to examine the record with reference to the retrocession of this portion of the District of Columbia to the State of Virginia, and the votes given on that question. I only ask for one day's delay. There are very grave questions of law arising in the case, and before we dispose of it finally—

Mr. WADE. If the Senator desires a postponement I shall not object. I know the question is one of very great importance, and I do not know how far the attention of Senators has been called to it. I called up the bill at this particular time more to attract the attention of Senators to it than for any other purpose, so that they might be prepared to consider it. I move now that it be postponed until to-morrow, and I give notice that I will call it up at a very early period when gentlemen have prepared themselves upon it, and shall press it to a vote.

Mr. COWAN. I would suggest that I think this question should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions that if they are of opinion that there is any doubt in regard to the nullity of the act of Congress making this cession, they report a bill authorizing the Attorney General to test that question in the courts, because it seems to me it must go there at last in order to determine the validity of that act. If that was a valid act, and within the scope of our power and jurisdiction, I do not see very well how we are to get rid of it by a simple repeal on our part. If it was not valid, and if it had no force to transfer the jurisdiction of that portion of the District to the State of Virginia, then the Supreme Court is the proper tribunal to determine it, and a case might be made by the Attorney General for the purpose of testing that question. It seems to me that that would be the proper disposition of it on the part of Congress.

I am not prepared to say that I do not agree with the honorable Senator from Ohio in thinking that the delegation of legislative power to the people of the District by that act was void, and no matter what their action might have been upon it, it gave no force to that act as a statute. At the same time, however, there is a question behind that, whether we had not the absolute power to legislate without delegating it at all. These are proper questions for the judiciary after the legislative power has exhausted itself upon them. I think that would be the better disposition of it, and if the bill is called up again I shall move to make that disposition of it.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, I rather hope that the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania may be adopted. I concurred fully with the other members of the Committee on the District of Columbia in regard to the inexpediency of the act of Congress retroceding the county of Alexandria to the State of Virginia. I thought that the condition of the District, and especially of that portion of it, for the last three or four years indicated very plainly the rashness of that proceeding and its impropriety, and that by all means if it be competent for us to acquire it again it should be done. I suppose that there would be nothing to-day to prevent Virginia, on some pretext or other, from erecting fortifications commanding this city and planting her cannon there, which would enable her in an issue like that through which we have passed, to destroy the capital of the nation before force could be rallied for its rescue.

But still, while I concurred entirely with the committee in the propriety of again acquiring jurisdiction of the county of Alexandria, I thought there was a very grave question involved, and I believe that it was wholly and exclusively a legal question, a constitutional question. If the act of retrocession in 1846 was a valid and constitutional act, then it occurs to me that the matter is entirely beyond our competency and our jurisdiction. In February, 1846, the Legislature of Virginia passed a law providing for the reception within the jurisdiction of that State of the county of Alexandria, provided Congress should pass an act retroceding it to Virginia, and by an act approved July 9, 1846, the same year, that county was retroceded by Congress, which, in the language of the act itself, forever relinquished the territory and the jurisdiction over it to the State of Virginia. If that was a constitutional act, what can Congress do now? There is a compact between Congress and the State of Virginia; there are vested rights; there is an executed contract; and it seems to me the territory is beyond our reach. If, on the other hand, as I believe myself, the act was unconstitutional, it may be, possibly, that we have a right to repeal the act of retrocession; but it strikes me that we ought to be very certain that the act of retrocession was unconstitutional, and very certain that we have the power to repeal it; because, if we make a mistake in this matter, very disastrous consequences may ensue in regard to the rights of property, in regard to peace between Congress and the State of Virginia, and in regard to very many other material interests.

It seems to me, then, that the Senate should be perfectly clear before it passes any bill of this kind that the act of retrocession in 1846 was without authority of law, was unconstitutional in point of fact. Therefore, sir, while wishing that we could have this territory back within our jurisdiction, believing that it is material in many respects, nevertheless, desiring that the matter may be examined by the committee of the Senate who have such questions more properly within their consideration, the Judiciary Committee, so that we may have a thorough investigation of what it seems to me is the only material question in the premises, I hope the Senator from Ohio will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and allow this bill to go to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions or otherwise, as he may see proper.

Mr. HOWARD. Do I understand the Senator from West Virginia to move the commitment of this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another motion already before the Senate, which is that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow. That is the motion now pending.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, only one word in reply to the honorable Senator from West Virginia and the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania. I am not able to see the necessity of committing the bill to the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of getting their opinion, or for the purpose, rather, of making some provision to make up a case to be submitted to the Supreme Court. That case will present itself in some shape, even if we pass this bill in its present form, or if we do not pass it. The question, as has been very truly said, is a judicial one as to the right of jurisdiction over that territory, and it will at some time present itself and be taken to the courts and there properly decided, whatever we may do here; and I am not able to see how we can expedite the decision of that question by any legislation of our own, or the necessity of our attempting to do so.

My own opinion is, I confess, well made up on the question. I have always regarded the retrocession of the county of Alexandria to Virginia as having been entirely unconstitutional and without legal warrant. The District of Columbia was ceded to the United States by Virginia and Maryland in trust and for a specific purpose, and that purpose was that it should be the seat of Government of the United States, and the people in their Constitution declared that Congress should forever have exclusive jurisdiction over it, not for the general purposes of buying and selling land, such as it possesses in regard to the Territories, but for the purpose of maintaining and keeping in the District the seat of Government, defining the limits of the District, and declaring in terms as plainly as was possible the uses and purposes for which the District was to be devoted. If Congress is competent to retrocede to Virginia one half of the District thus set apart as the seat of Government, it is equally competent to retrocede to Maryland the remaining half, together with all the buildings and other public property erected here by the United States for public purposes as the seat of Government. Certainly, I think no court will ever hold or can hold that under the Constitution of the United States as it now stands and has stood since its adoption, it is competent for Congress to divest themselves of the title to the District within which the seat of Government was to be fixed and where it has been fixed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I ask the honorable Senator from Michigan whether, in his judgment, it is competent for Congress to remove the seat of Government from this District to any other place, and if so, what then might become of this ten miles square? Could Congress do anything with it, or would it revert to the States of Maryland and Virginia?

Mr. HOWARD. When the proper time shall arise for an opinion from me on the subject of the competency of Congress to remove the seat of Government, I think I shall probably have formed an opinion; but I do not see how the inquiry of the honorable Senator from Delaware in any way affects the question of the assumption of jurisdiction over the county of Alexandria. I am not able to see it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the honorable Senator will see the relevancy of my question if he will consider for a moment that if Congress has the power to remove the seat of Government from this District, Congress has the power to part with the jurisdiction over this District or it has not. The question I wished to propound to the honorable Senator was, in case Congress should remove the seat of Government from this District, would it not be competent then for Congress to cede the District to Maryland and Virginia if it saw proper, or must it forever retain these ten miles square subject to the jurisdiction of Congress?

Mr. HOWARD. I regard those questions at the present time as immaterial and not involved in the issue presented by the bill. One thing, however, is quite certain, that the people of the United States, in granting this power of exclusive legislation to Congress over the District, intended to provide for them and their posterity a district wherein was to be the seat of Government of the United States; and I think that when Congress assumes to retrocede the District, either to Virginia or to Maryland, it undertakes to exercise a power which is in violation of the intention of the American people in making the grant, as well as of the terms of the grant themselves. Of course, if the Senator from Ohio desires this bill to go over until to-morrow, I shall make no objection.

Mr. COWAN. The honorable Senator from Michigan is of opinion that the statute making the retrocession was void.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, I think it was.

Mr. COWAN. If that be a correct opinion, then this legislation is wholly superfluous, and, indeed, has no meaning whatever, because if that statute was void it was as nothing; it was the same precisely as though nothing had been done; and to repeal it is the same precisely as to repeal that which never had any existence. If that statute was a nullity, the proper mode by which to determine that question is by a quo warranto issued to the officers who exercise power and authority under it by virtue of the retrocession. That would bring the question up. If, on the other hand, it was not a nullity, if it was a good, valid, and binding statute, for the purpose of transferring the county of Alexandria to the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia, then this act of Congress would be a nullity in attempting to repeal it without the consent of the State of Virginia.

I, for my part, believe that the whole of this territory as well as the various parts of it are within the control of Congress and of the Legislatures of Virginia and Maryland. I have no doubt of that, and that if we should choose to transfer the seat of this Government to some other place, the people of this District would not be left without a government, nor would they be within the jurisdiction of the United States; they would be provided for by transferring them to the States to which they originally belonged. I have very little difficulty on that point. But I think it would be proper for the Judiciary Committee to inquire, and, if necessary, report a resolution instructing the Attorney General to make a case to determine this question. If the people of the county of Alexandria are governed by the State of Virginia against their rights, they should be relieved from that power, and they should be put under that authority to which they justly and properly belong, but that is to be done through the medium of the judiciary, not through our agency.

Mr. WADE. I am perfectly aware that this like every other law is subject to the opinion and action of the courts when it shall be brought before them. I have no doubt, and I presume there is no lawyer in the Senate who has any doubt, that the act of retrocession was an unconstitutional act, and therefore void; but those acts that lawyers and judges believe to be void are exceedingly embarrassing to the people, for their rights will be, for the time being, displaced by laws that are really unconstitutional, and men are frequently subjected to great hardship and great wrong by laws that are really unwarranted and unconstitutional and will finally be declared void. Such, of course, I regard this law to be. You may bring it before the courts and annul it in that way; but the reason why I suppose Congress ought to act upon the subject is that it makes a great difference to the people there whose rights have been displaced and outraged by this unconstitutional legislation, and they have a right to have Congress clear this unconstitutional law out of their way and put them in statu quo ante bellum. If we are clear that the law was unwarranted by the Constitution, that it was got up in troublous times, when men did not consider the full purport of what they were doing, or that it was for the nefarious purpose of obtaining a particular advantage in contemplation of what was subsequently done, in my judgment it is the right of that people, who never consented to the act, to have it wiped out of their way; and then if the other party contend that it was constitutional and that Congress had a right to pass it and no right to repeal it, let them contest it.

We are told that if it shall be determined that the act of retrocession is constitutional, we shall be in a very bad predicament by passing a bill to repeal it. Sir, is it possible that any lawyer will argue here that one Congress may pass a law that another cannot repeal? The act of retrocession, I think, was unconstitutional. Every gentleman that I have heard speak upon the subject believes it to be clearly unconstitutional. It is an incumbrance, however. It is a cloud thrown over the title of every man in that portion of the District who holds his property under the original titles, and who has a right to have them confirmed; and every man who has a right to live under the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States in that portion of the District has had a wrongful doubt or cloud thrown over his possession, and thrown over it, too, by Congress; and Congress ought to wipe it away if they so regard it. We ought not to suffer an unconstitutional law to rest on our statute-books a moment after we come to the conclusion that it is unwarrantable and wrong. It makes a great difference to the people of that portion of the District whether you repeal this law, wipe it out, and leave them as they were before, or whether you hold them to test the validity of a law that everybody supposes to be unconstitutional. I think it is the right of the Union people of Alexandria county to have this law that is supposed to be unconstitutional repealed.

If it is not unconstitutional it ought to be repealed. Undoubtedly if it is a constitutional law it is in our power to repeal it, and there are paramount reasons that should induce us to do so. The great reasons which induced our forefathers to make this District as large as it was originally, and to which I alluded before, are paramount reasons why we should preserve it in that position. Yea, sir, infinitely stronger reasons should move us now than did then. Their foresight was a prudent one. We suffered great inconvenience during the recent war because this jurisdiction was supposed, by this law, to be in old Virginia, which was hostile to and at war with us. I think I know that if it had not been for this unconstitutional legislation the southern States would have been invaded much sooner than they were, and with much greater efficiency. We were put back pondering over the question whether we would invade a sovereign State, and with two hundred thousand men on this side of the Potomac we stood hesitating a long time whether we would march them into a sovereign State. The enemy had possession there in that jurisdiction which belonged to us, and which this unconstitutional law had deprived us of. We gave them the advantage of quartering their troops in Alexandria and other strongholds in the District, where they could assail us.

I say, then, if the law was constitutional it ought to be repealed and the territory reannexed, for public purposes, for purposes of defense. For that matter, I do not care whether you say the act was constitutional or unconstitutional. If it was a constitutional law, the same reasons that induced those who laid out this District to lay it out of its original size, that they might defend themselves against aggression, should be insisted on now by us. If it was not an unconstitutional act, it was an exceedingly improvident act.

Mr. WILLEY. The Senator from Ohio will allow me to propound a question to him. I think I understood him to say that the law of retrocession should be repealed, although it might be constitutional.

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLEY. Does the Senator believe it is competent for Congress, without the consent of the State of Virginia, to repeal the law of retrocession, provided it was constitutional?

Mr. WADE. I do not suppose that it is possible for any one to come to the conclusion that this joint act of three parties, as I said before, could be annulled by any two of them. When Maryland and Virginia made their grants and the General Government accepted them, it was the joint act of all, and cannot be annulled without the consent of all. Even if the act of retrocession was constitutional, I suppose it would be in our power to reacquire the territory, and that, too, against the will of Virginia and her Legislature. So I think. I do not see what right has attached to her. But, however that may be, we ought, in my judgment, to do more than to tell the men whom we have wronged by an act that we believe to be unconstitutional, to work out their own salvation through the courts. I think we ought to undo that which we have wrongfully done. I think it is due to those people whose rights have been infringed upon by our unconstitutional legislation, and it is no more than justice and right that we should wipe out this act, and if any one claims that its repeal is unconstitutional, let those who so believe and who regard the original law as constitutional test the question before the proper tribunal. Every Senator who has yet spoken on the subject seems to intimate no doubt that the act was wrongful and without constitutional authority. Let us give the benefit of that opinion to those Union men whose rights have been infringed upon by it, and let those who believe that it is a constitutional act take the initiative, with the burden on their pockets, of going into court and showing that it is constitutional. But let us legislate upon our convictions, and let us not legislate to the detriment of those who, we believe, have been wronged. I have no doubt that this is a judicial question if we see fit to treat it so, and so are many other questions. Those who passed the original law did not so regard it. It was treated as a legislative question then, and it ought to be so with us.

Now, sir, I hope that the bill will be postponed until gentlemen's minds shall be turned to it more particularly than they are now, and we will take it up at a convenient season and endeavor to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MILITARY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 401, to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, with a view to fixing a time for its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the bill be made the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before the question is taken on that motion, which I do not know that I have any objection to, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to another subject about which I am receiving a great many letters, and that is, when he proposes, or if he proposes at all, to take up the bill from the House of Representatives relating to the equalization of soldiers' bounties. It is a matter that I think the Senate should act upon. The country is looking for action, and I should like to know when the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to bring that subject before the Senate, if at all.

Mr. WILSON. In reply to the Senator, I have simply to say that the Committee on Military Affairs reported a bill on that subject some weeks since, before the bill alluded to passed the House of Representatives. The bill reported by the Military Committee of the Senate is a real equalization bill; the bill of the House of Representatives is not that, but it is something, and we propose to take up in committee to-morrow morning the House bill and the other bill and consider them together and see what we can do, and I think we shall have a report introduced on the subject.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I think it important that the subject should receive attention. I think the country expects it, and I trust we may have a report that will satisfy the country upon that subject, and will in fact equalize the bounties of soldiers.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not rise to discuss the matter, but merely to say that that is a subject which the Committee on Military Affairs have had before them during a very large portion of the session, and to which their most anxious attention has been directed at numerous meetings, and I can assure the Senator from Illinois that the Committee on Military Affairs have been diligent in their attention to the subject, and that I expect before the present session shall close the bill to which he refers will be taken up and passed. I, for one, am strongly in favor of the equalization of bounties among the soldiers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to make the bill (S. No. 401) the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES M. STOUT.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House bill No. 641, for the relief of Charles M. Stout.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 641) for the relief of Charles M. Stout, late a second lieutenant in company E, seventh regiment Pennsylvania Reserve corps, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the War Department to cause to be stated the account of Charles M. Stout, late a second lieutenant of company E, seventh regiment Pennsylvania Reserve corps of volunteers, and to allow him pay and allowances as such officer from the date of his appointment, by general orders of General McClellan, at Harrison's Landing, in Virginia, during the time he served as such officer, from August 1, 1862, to January 30, 1863, inclusive, the time he returned again to the ranks as a private soldier, and to pay the amount due to him or his legal representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not at this early hour; it is not half after two o'clock; and there are some important bills that we want to act upon. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] has a bill which he has been trying every day for a week to get the floor to call up.

Mr. GRIMES. What is that?

Mr. TRUMBULL. A bill in relation to payment for quartermaster's and commissary stores.

Mr. GRIMES. That is a bill which has been contested here day after day, and one which we ought not to proceed to the consideration of when there are not more than ten or twelve Senators here, not more than half a quorum.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Many Senators are about the building who will be here as soon as the yeas and nays are called.

Mr. GRIMES. I am opposed to going on with legislation of such magnitude when there is nobody here to transact the public business.

The question being put, there were, on a division—yeas 12, noes 5; no quorum voting.

Mr. TRUMBULL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to state, as several Senators have come in since the motion was made, that there is important legislative business, and now we are trying to get up a bill that has been considered several times in the Senate and postponed by the expiration of the morning hour—a bill providing for payment for commissary and quartermaster's stores—in my judgment a bill which ought to be passed, which is due to the loyal men who have not received pay. It is extending the law which we now have to other portions of the country. I hope the motion to go into executive session will not carry at this hour.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 12, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Foster, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, and Wilson—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Willey—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Williams, Wright, and Yates—21.

So the motion was not agreed to.

PAYMENT FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

On motion of Mr. POLAND the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 217) to provide for the payment for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. SPRAGUE to strike out, in line eight of section one, "Quartermaster General of the United States," and insert "Secretary of War;" to strike out, in line ten of section one, "Quartermaster General," and insert "Secretary of War;" in section two, line six, strike out "Commissary General of Subsistence" and insert "Secretary of War;" and in lines eight and nine of section two, to strike out "Commissary General of Subsistence" and insert "Secretary of War."

Mr. POLAND. I hope the amendment will not prevail. The provisions of this bill are precisely the same as those of the act of July 4, 1864, providing for payment for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies in the loyal States. This bill merely extends the provisions of that law over the whole country; and the Quartermaster General's office and the subsistence department have had the subject of allowing these claims under the law of 1864 until the present time, and if this amendment should prevail and the matter should be given to the Secretary of War, of course the business must be done in some of the subordinate departments of that office, and I see no reason why it may not as well be left, as it was by the law of 1864, to be determined by these departments, and go from them to the Third Auditor, according to the existing law.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to add the following by way of proviso to the bill:

Provided, That the claimant must in proof of his loyalty establish by evidence that from the time his claim accrued and ever since he has firmly and faithfully maintained his adherence and allegiance to the Government of the United States by defending its cause against the government and forces of the so-called confederate States of America, in all suitable and practicable ways and according to his ability and opportunities.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. I had occasion, sir, the other day when this bill was before the Senate, to make some remarks upon it, and to say that I was opposed to the passage of such an act. It is very true that the amendment which has just been adopted by the Senate in regard to the evidence of loyalty of the claimant relieves it somewhat of the objections I entertained to it; but it does not by any means remove all my objections.

The operation of the bill, if it shall become a law, will not be restrained, as was that of the act of 1864, to the States in rebellion, but will affect every State of the Union, whether loyal or disloyal; and under the bill, every man in a disloyal State whose property has been taken will be enabled to present his claim to the Quartermaster General or Commissary General, as the case may be, for indemnification out of the Treasury of the United States for property thus taken. I do not recognize this as a sound principle of legislation so far as the insurgent States are concerned. It is the theory of our Government that the majority in a State shall rule, and such is the practice. Every one of the insurgent States was carried out of the Union and involved in the rebellion either by the direct vote or by the assent of a majority of its citizens. In 1861, at the breaking out of the war, Congress passed an act by which the President was authorized to declare States and parts of States in insurrection against the Government. In pursuance of that general law, he, from time to time, issued his proclamations informing the world that these States were in insurrection, until eleven States of the Union were involved in that denunciation. As I said on a former occasion, these insurrectionary States and all their population, old and young, male and female, loyal and disloyal, became, in law, and to all practical purposes, the enemies of the United States; and became such under an act of Congress, for the proclamations were all issued in pursuance of that act.

Now, sir, here is a proposition to allow every person throughout the rebel districts whose property may have been taken in the regular and necessary operations and movements of our armies to put down the rebellion, to claim an indemnity for property taken by our Army in the course of those necessary operations. The insurgent States, as political communities, were, in the sense of the laws of war and the laws of nations, the enemies of the United States, and all their property, no matter of what kind or description, was liable to be seized in the course of the operations of the war by the Union armies who entered their territory, and liable in precisely the same sense that the property of alien enemies in a foreign country would be liable to be taken and used by the Army of the United States that should enter its territory in the prosecution of a war.

It was the misfortune of loyal men who happened to be within the insurgent districts that their property was thus taken. It was their misfortune to reside in a community the majority of which became, by their voluntary act, the enemies of the Government; but, sir, I submit it is one of those misfortunes which cannot be guarded against. It is one which befalls every people against whom a war is carried on. It might be claimed of the United States with equal consistency that they should pay persons residing in a foreign country with whom we should be at war a like indemnity simply upon the ground that they were at heart friendly to the United States, although in a hostile country. Such a payment out of the public Treasury would be an anomaly in the history of war. Mr. President, I have as much commiseration for the Union men in the rebel States who have been overborne and oppressed by the majority as any other member of the Senate; but I cannot consent to indemnify them simply because they happen to be thus unfortunate. It is one of the misfortunes which the individual must bear, and does bear in all other cases of war, unless the evil has been removed or alleviated by the treaty of peace, which sometimes takes place.

Now, sir, can the honorable Senator from Vermont, who urges the passage of this bill, inform the Senate what amount of money is likely to be claimed and taken out of the Treasury to furnish the indemnity this bill will require? He informed us the other day that probably it would only call for some few millions. What warrant has he for saying that it will only call for a few millions? Does he not know, do we not all know, that these claims will spring up as thick and as pestilential as the frogs of Egypt, in every nook and corner of the late confederacy? His reply is, that only loyal men will be allowed to prosecute their claims, and that such, and such only, can come into court or go before the Commissary or the Quartermaster General. Sir, the history of this rebellion has developed satisfactorily to my mind a state of morals on the part of the rebels which forbids me to place any confidence in their oaths or assurances. The whole thing from beginning to end, both at home and abroad, has been a continuation of the basest perjury and perfidy that could be committed. Will it be difficult among such persons to find witnesses to come forward and swear that A B, although a blood-stained rebel from the beginning to the end, was nevertheless a good Union man at heart, and that he always spoke in favor of the Union on all proper occasions, as required by the amendment of the Senator from Illinois? Sir, under this bill I can prove by witnesses to be called from the rebel States any claim belonging to any person, not even excepting Davis himself, or Lee; I can multiply witnesses by the score who will swear that the claimants are and ever have been loyal men. It costs them nothing. They have no conscience about it. They would as soon swear that black is white or white black if thereby they can get money out of Uncle Sam's Treasury and put it in the pockets of their friends. I will not open the Treasury to so great a danger, one which in its effects hereafter is so well calculated to impose, and which must indeed inevitably saddle the United States with an enormous amount of unjust debt—a debt which is to be counted by millions upon millions and thousands of millions before these claims will all be settled and adjusted. Sir, I am opposed entirely to the enactment of any law on the subject going beyond the limit fixed in the act of 1864, which allows persons whose property has been taken in the loyal States and receipted for to present their claims.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am not willing to admit that the relation existed between the true men of the country and the Government during this war which the Senator from Michigan says the law of war establishes. I do not believe that a citizen of one of the southern States, if he were true to the Government, became, because of the insurrection, an alien enemy in the sense defined by the laws of war. But suppose the proposition of the Senator to be true; suppose that the law of war does fix their relation as he describes it; and suppose that it be a legal right of the Government to take the property of citizens in the enemy's country for the public use, is he in favor of exerting that right of war against a man in the Southern States that has stood out against the rebellion, that has been true all the while to the country, that was true under circumstances of embarrassment that no man in the North experienced?

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will allow me, I will answer his question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. That is not a question for me to decide. That is a question to be decided by the commander in the field who is leading the army, and who is to be the judge of the necessity of taking the private property of persons, citizens of the community where he is, in the act of prosecuting the war. That is not for me to determine.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think this bill makes the question for the Senator and each Senator to decide. We must decide upon the question of right and conscience, whether we ought to take the property of a true man in the southern States, a man who, against the force of popular opinion, in presence of personal dangers, stood up for his country in the war—whether we shall visit upon him the stern rule which may be enforced against a public enemy. As a matter of conscience and right, merely because there may be a technical right which we can enforce, shall we do it? I think it is not right to do it.

But, sir, this country has not been in the habit of enforcing that right of war to which the Senator from Michigan refers. When our columns invaded Mexico our commanders did not choose to treat even the Mexicans, who were unquestionably foreign enemies, in the sense and manner which the Senator now demands against our own citizens in the southern States, but when our commissary and quartermaster's departments took supplies for the Army from the people of Mexico, they were paid, and paid the full value, so that when our Army passed over a section of country it left friends instead of enemies; and the whole body of our people approved the policy adopted by General Scott and General Taylor in that regard. And now a principle and a policy which we adopted wisely, and which was approved by the country in a war against a foreign Power when our Army invaded that foreign country, is not regarded by the Senator as proper to be extended to the true men of our own country in the late controversy. Mr. President, I cannot understand this at all. I cannot understand why a loyal man in the South shall not be paid for any article that he has supplied to the Army.

My objection to this bill when it was before the Committee on the Judiciary and we were considering it there was, that it did not go far enough; that it did not take away the adjudication from the Quartermaster General who, in regard to these claims, is exceedingly close and hard, while in other respects the money goes by the millions. That is the objection I have to the bill; but I did not suppose any Senator would say that a loyal man in the South who is entitled to peculiar regard should not be paid for his property when that property went to feed the soldiers and horses of our Army, simply on the ground that we may claim a technical rule of war against him. I do not think we have that claim. I do not think such men were foreign enemies. I think they were citizens within the limit of our own country struggling for that country. These are the plain views that will govern my vote upon this question.

Mr. NESMITH. I cannot reconcile the position taken by the Senator from Michigan with my ideas of justice in a case of this kind. However true it may be that one great nation warring against another may have the abstract right of seizing and using private property for public use, it is a right that is very seldom resorted to. The Senator from Indiana very correctly states that in the war with Mexico we refrained from exercising any rights of that kind, and invariably paid for all property taken. No property was confiscated excepting public property. If we were in the habit of exercising that forbearance with a foreign nation, and if that leniency is universally exercised by civilized Governments toward one another, I think it hardly becomes us to adopt a rule at this time that will be so oppressive on the Union men who adhered to the Government in the southern States during our recent rebellion. Why, sir, if the idea had been proclaimed at the commencement of this war that the property of every man in the South would be taken, no matter what his convictions were or how strong a friend he was of this Government, how many friends should we have had there? We should have driven every man from the support of the Union cause. I think the proposition is monstrous, to say that the property of a man who, living in that country and contending against all obstacles, adhered to the Government, should be seized, and that he should receive no compensation for it.

Sir, I do not believe in the theory advanced by the Senator from Michigan, that the fortunes and condition of every citizen of a State follow the condition of a State or follow any theory that the State may adopt. If the majority of a State see proper to go into secession against the wishes of a minority, I think the minority have rights that are entitled to protection. I do not believe that every man becomes a rebel because he happens to live in a rebel State. Why, sir, it was only a few days since that the Senator himself made a speech in favor of paying Mr. Pettigru, of South Carolina, for his library; Mr. Pettigru, who, under the very construction that the Senator places upon this question of national law, must have been a rebel himself. If the condition of Mr. Pettigru, he living in a southern State, necessarily followed the condition of the State, then the Senator from Michigan perpetrated a gross and palpable wrong in voting $5,000 to a man who was a rebel, not personally a rebel, but who became a rebel by virtue of a majority of the people of his State being rebels, although at the same time the Senator admitted that this man was loyal himself. If Mr. Pettigru's library or Mr. Pettigru's property had been taken for the use of the United States, I should think he would have just as much claim for pay for it at the hands of the Government as he had for pay for a library which the United States had never taken from him. I think the position of the Senator upon the pending question and the one which was under consideration the other day is grossly at variance.

Mr. HOWARD. I am not able to see the inconsistency that the honorable Senator from Oregon imputes to me. What was the case of Mr. Pettigru? So far as the precedent cited by the Senator has anything to do with this case, it is this: Mr. Pettigru was a Union man in sentiment, and so remained until the time of his death, which was sometime after the breaking out of the war. He left a large professional library, which his heirs or representatives proposed to sell to the United States. When that proposition was before the Senate, I voted to buy the library, and to give a quid pro quo simply to the heirs of Mr. Pettigru. With that very simple transaction I do not conceive that the laws or usages of war have anything to do, or that they have any sort of application in the remotest degree.

It is very true, probably, that during the invasion of Mexico by General Scott there were occasional payments to the enemy for property furnished by them and sold to the Army and used by the Army; but the Senator from Indiana will not undertake to say, I fancy, nor will the Senator from Oregon, that such a thing as foraging upon the enemy while the Army was in Mexico never took place. According to my recollection, and I was not inattentive to the events which transpired during that war, the system of foraging and seizing private property for the use of the Army without compensation was as general on that occasion as in other modern wars; and certainly the Government of the United States have never been called upon to pay to the friends of the United States residing in Mexico any money or other compensation for the seizure of private property belonging to them during our military operations in that republic.

Mr. NESMITH. I will undertake to correct the Senator there. There have been immense claims preferred to this Government of the very character of seizures that he speaks of, and a great many of them have been paid—claims of citizens of the United States residing in Mexico whose property was seized during the war.

Mr. HOWARD. I am not talking about citizens of the United States; I am talking about Mexicans who were national enemies at that time. I have yet to learn that they have made any such application, much less that the Government of the United States has paid them—Mexican citizens and public enemies—for property taken from them without compensation by the American Army in its operations in Mexico. I fancy the Senator will not be able to produce a single instance of it; and I presume that no Senator can produce a single instance of the kind in the history of all wars, ancient or modern, where the Government has stepped in and paid a public enemy for property taken by its army in the course of its regular operations.

The Senator from Indiana insists that the insurgents are not to be treated or considered in fact or in law as alien enemies. I have not so stated. I have never intimated that they were aliens; but that they were enemies and belligerents for the purposes of carrying on the war is evidenced by the whole course of our proceedings from the beginning to the close of the contest. It is not necessary that a party should be an alien in order to become an enemy. Sir, the very necessity of the case imposed upon us the duty, growing out of motives of humanity and the observance of the laws of war as connected with humanity, to recognize them as belligerents, and of course as enemies for that purpose. We recognized their whole communities as enemies.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I simply wish to refer the honorable Senator to a case. I suppose that if it is proper to pay for the destruction of the property of a Union man in one of the revolted States, it is equally proper to pay for the property which was taken in those States. During this present session of Congress you passed an act giving $10,000 to a gentleman residing in Virginia, and that was one of the States in revolt, on account of damages done to his property; and if you give $10,000 on account of damages done to a Union man's property in Virginia, why should you not give compensation where you take his property and use it?

Mr. HOWARD. I am not aware that any such law has passed Congress.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I allude to the case of Armes.

Mr. HOWARD. That has not passed and is not a law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It passed the Senate.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir.

Several SENATORS. It did pass, but was reconsidered.

Mr. HOWARD. At all events it has not become a law. There may be exceptional cases presenting individual hardships of peculiar character, invoking the humanity and the benevolence of Congress, and invoking relief. We have ground to expect that there are such cases. When such a case shall be presented, I shall be entirely willing to consider it upon its individual merits; but I will never agree—and I do not think the Senate ought to agree—to pay for all the property which may have been taken even from Union men in the rebel States during the prosecution of the war. Sir, it was a misfortune brought upon those men, in common with all other people in the State, by the declaration and prosecution of the re-billion against the United States; and I will never consent to take the money of my constituents, their hard earnings, and hand it over to a quartermaster or a commissary general to be paid to a man who, notwithstanding the witnesses and proofs he may adduce of his loyalty, may have been, and in most cases will turn out to have been, an arrant rebel. I am not to be deceived and trepanned in this way. I will grant as readily as any gentleman relief in individual cases where the proof is clear and undoubted; but I will not put this immense power of granting or withholding this relief into the hands of a subordinate officer of the United States who may proceed to hear the case ex parte, and to make up his mind upon perjured testimony, where it will be impossible for us to hold the officer to anything like a proper accountability. The whole thing, in my judgment, is loose and in the highest degree dangerous to the country, and especially to the Treasury.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out in the sixth and seventh lines of the first section, after the word "same," the words "or which may have been taken by such officer without giving such receipt;" so that it will read:

That all claims of loyal persons, not exceeding $500, for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, may be submitted to the Quartermaster General, &c.

I believe it was the common practice during the war for officers of the United States seizing individual property to give a receipt for that property, when the officer seizing it believed that the individual owning it was loyal to the United States, or well disposed to the United States, and I take it there was very little property taken during the war from persons who had any pretense to be loyal men that was not receipted for by the officer taking that property. If we are to pay for that property for which a receipt was given, we shall know something as to where we are; but if we are to allow the provision to stand that I have moved to strike out, that any person who had property taken, or had not, who can trump up a case may go before the Quartermaster General or Commissary General and prove that he had property taken, I think we shall throw open the Treasury to claims of millions upon millions of dollars all depending upon the oaths of men whose oaths we know never were worth anything whatever, and have been proved so, and are proved so to-day. Why, sir, a year ago all through the country from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, everybody was professing to have done but very little during the war; they were very good friends of the United States; they were forced into doing what little they did; there was a power somewhere that, contrary to their wills, put them into the war. That was the common talk. To-day, from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, there is boasting of what has been done. Everywhere they tell us how much they did, not how little they did; that they went into the rebellion voluntarily; and if we are to believe what we are told now, there was hardly a loyal man during the war in the rebel States, and in many of those States not any. Perhaps if we pass this bill we shall have another pretense of loyalty, and thousands of men who were enemies of the country during the war will trump up evidence and come upon the Treasury of the country, and profess that they were quite loyal during the war, because the Treasury will be open to the oaths that they will present to us.

Now, sir, if this amendment shall be adopted I am willing that the bill shall pass to allow men who hold the receipts of this Government to have their cases examined. Many of those men were not loyal. Our officers were very kindly disposed toward the people of the South. Everybody knows the social influence that was exerted upon them during the war. Everybody knows how many of those officers were persuaded to say things and do things and sign papers that they ought never to have done. But, sir, let us provide that the persons who hold certificates for property taken may come forward and prove their cases, and let us wait awhile at any rate before we open the Treasury of the United States to the innumerable claims that will be made, for I take it that every man that has lost a horse or an ox or a bushel of corn or anything else during the war by our armies or by the rebel armies will try to find his way to the Treasury of the United States to get pay. The rebel treasury is gone; they cannot go there for it; and we shall not only have to pay millions of dollars for what our own armies took, but for what was taken by the rebel armies, if we are to allow those who have not the certificates of an Army officer that they had their property taken at all to make up cases. I take it there is no difficulty in making up a case. We all know the oaths that have been violated during this war. We know the oaths that have been taken since the surrender of Lee's army. We all know that oaths have come to be of very little account when they are in any way directly or indirectly connected with this rebellion, so far as any persons that have opposed the Government are concerned. I hope, sir, that this amendment will be adopted, that we shall deal with the loyal people who have certificates from officers of the United States that their property was taken for the use of our armies, and that persons who have no such certificates will, at any rate, not be provided for at the present time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much surprised at some part of the observations of my friend from Massachusetts, particularly in respect to the state of entire treason which he supposes to have existed at the South, and which seems to be the basis of his opposition, in a degree, at any rate, to the repayment to loyal, patriotic men, if there be any such there, of the cost of supplies which went to furnish our armies. I have always been taught to believe that when this rebellion broke out there were thousands and hundreds of thousands of citizens of the southern States who were just as loyal, in the highest sense of the term, to this Government and to our flag as the Senator from Massachusetts was, or as myself.

Mr. WILSON. I am sorry the Senator is so misinformed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has been contended so by all political parties; it has been assumed to be so by every sane man on this continent down to this day, I believe. What is the evidence of it, if we must go into evidence upon that subject now? Were we not told during the war, and at times by the Senator himself, I think, that a large proportion of the population of the South—I do not mean a majority, but a large proportion—were trying to escape from rebel conscription; that they were seeking every avenue to evade and avoid resisting the laws of the United States; that they were hunted with blood-hounds and with soldiers and with every ingenuity which could be brought to bear to bring them into opposition to the flag? Is all this a delusion? Is all this a dream that we have been dreaming for these years? And are we to take it as true now that there was a universal treason in the South?

Mr. WILSON. I did not say "universal."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Universal in substance and in effect. My friend from Massachusetts says he did not say "universal." No, he did not; but what he said was tantamount to universal; and that is, that the whole body of southern society was rotten with treason. I do not believe it, sir. All the evidence that we had proved directly the contrary. The evidence of the rebel government itself, its official acts from the beginning to the end, prove the contrary, and prove the truth of the fact that all through the South, in the worst and most traitorous districts, there were still apostles and martyrs of liberty every day and every year. It is true, as my friend from Michigan says, that by a fiction of law or some particular legal contrivance that he describes, they became legally enemies, although at heart they were patriots. That is another question.

Now, sir, let us look a little further at this state of southern society. What was the report to us from the armies of the West, who, as they went down the Mississippi and across the country to the ocean, had some opportunity to observe the state of southern society? Have we not been officially told that Sherman's army got thousands of recruits among southern white men, who hailed with joy the opportunity to shed their blood to regain the liberties that treason had deprived them of? Are they traitors? I should be glad to have the Senator from Massachusetts tell me. If they are traitors, they are the kind of traitors that I like.

Look at it in another point of view, supposing it to be true, taking it for granted that there are some really loyal, honest men in the South, men who still have some respect for oaths; and I am bound to say that I differ from the Senator from Massachusetts on this question of oaths in a degree, because it is within our experience in this Senate, at any rate, that cases are arising numerously every day in which we find that even rebels have some respect for oaths, because we are puzzled, the Treasury is puzzled, the internal revenue is puzzled, the Government is puzzled, to find men who are willing to swear that they have not been rebels, to whom offices are to be intrusted. If there was so much of perjury there it would be a very rare thing, indeed, that we should find any difficulty in selecting suitable men, because they would all be willing to commit perjury; but it would seem that there is some respect paid to oaths even by a man who has been a traitor. It does not necessarily follow that the greatest rebel in the world, (and who would have been a patriot if unfortunately he had been successful,) may not, upon occasions, as the English dramatist tells us, tell the truth.

We are desirous of consolidating this Government, of making it again homogeneous and perfect in its relations to all its parts, and the relation of all its parts to the whole. We are to provide not only indemnity for the past, to use an old phrase, but security for the future. We are to provide, as far as human wisdom can, against future rebellions. We are to make treason dishonorable, unprofitable, distasteful. We are to hold out inducements to patriotism, and to hold out the opposite to treason. How are we to do it? We have had the experience of a rebellion; and the moment the rebellion is over and those men who have been true and faithful to us, who have fed our armies as they advanced, come forward and ask for the citizen's compensation, we tell them, in the language of my friend from Michigan, "I am very sorry for you; you are a good man; you are a true patriot at heart, but by some fiction of law which the lawyers have discovered, you became a traitor when you did not know it."

Mr. HOWARD. No fiction; a fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "By some fact of law which the lawyers have discovered, you became a traitor when you did not know it; you went to sleep an honest man and you woke up a traitor; legally you deserve to be hung, and it is only the grace of the sovereign power which saves you, as it does a good many other traitors who are morally more guilty than you are, from that condign punishment. In addition to that, we wish to inform you a little further," in the language of my friend from Massachusetts, "that we have not any faith in you at all. You may run away from the rebels; you may hide in the mountains, and the moment the star-spangled banner appears among you, you may seize a gun and fight it out under Sherman to the sea, to the last, to restore the old authority, and then we will tell you you are nothing but a perjured traitor, and had better be gone about your business." Now, I undertake to say if you use a set of men who are really loyal in that way, the next time a rebellion occurs they ought to be on the rebellious side. I would be if I were in their position; and so would every Senator who hears me, because it outrages that sense of justice which is implanted in every man's bosom.

Now, what is this legal fact or legal fiction that my friend from Michigan advances? That is the Rubicon with him. If he could only pass that he might be disposed to do justice to these men. It is that by force of the acts of secession passed by the States all loyal men in those States became traitors by relation of law—public enemies upon whom the Government had a right, under its war-making power, to levy forage and to make war, and to despoil them at its will.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to correct the honorable Senator from Vermont. I did not say, nor did I intend to say, nor do I believe, that a man became a traitor, as he repeats over and over again ad nauseam, under the act of 1861, declaring certain States to be in insurrection. What I said was, that they became belligerents, became hostile, became enemies of the United States. It does not follow because a person is an enemy of the United States, being an insurgent, or being embraced within an insurgent community, that he is, therefore, a traitor and guilty of treason. That is a fact which remains to be proved against him as an individual growing out of his individual acts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, that is a distinction, if it be one, without a difference. Now, my friend says that these people, although they might not have become traitors, levying, under the Constitution, overt acts of war, to be proved by two witnesses, and therefore punishable, became belligerents; they became enemies; they became hostile to the Government by operation of law. He had just told a Senator on the other side of the Chamber that they were not alien enemies. Then they were citizen enemies, persons owing allegiance and duty to the Government, and being in a condition which is openly hostile to it, belligerents against it, enemies of it. How much that lacks of being a traitor! I should be glad to have the gentleman, at some convenient opportunity, inform me and the other Senators.

But say he is not a traitor; say he is an enemy; I do not know, for one, that any such legal result has been produced by any act or pretended act of secession whatever. I am one of those who have been brought up in the old notion, that this is a Government of the people, and that within the scope of the constitutional powers of this Government it operates upon the people as individuals, and not upon the States as sovereignties. We make no law operating upon States. We never have made a law operating upon States, and we never shall. We have no relations with the States of this Government except those that the Constitution prescribe in respect to organizing a form of government and in respect to the Governors of States appealing to us for protection against domestic violence. If this be within the limits of the Constitution a Government of the people, it operates directly upon the people, upon the individual citizen, whether he be in Maine or in Virginia; and if that individual citizen bands himself together with all the other citizens in the State, save one, in levying war against that Government to whom they owe allegiance and subjection, is that other one therefore an enemy? I should be glad to have the Senator from Michigan tell me if the inhabitants of some county in his State should get up an insurrection against a State tax and levy war against the State, whether those who resisted that war, who were willing to pay the tax, who would not take up arms, became hostile to the State and subject to the pains and penalties which are duly imposed upon enemies of the State.

Mr. HOWARD. I will answer the Senator, if he pleases, now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; that is why I asked the question.

Mr. HOWARD. If the government de facto of the State, in accordance with its constitutional authority, as was the case with Congress, had found it necessary to declare, and had declared, that a certain portion of the State, consisting of counties A, B, C, D, were in insurrection against the rightful authority of the State, the whole population of those counties, in the sense of the laws of war, would become enemies of the State. It would be a case precisely parallel with that which has existed and through which we have just passed. I need hardly inform the Senator from Vermont that the question as to the character of even loyal people residing in the insurrectionary districts has been solemnly argued before the Supreme Court of the United States, who have decided that the whole people within the lines of bayonets were the enemies of the United States. I think that is an answer to his entire interrogation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Michigan in his construction of the decision of the Supreme Court to which he refers, by any means whatever; and I undertake to declare that if it bore that construction, it is not only an outrage upon law, but an outrage upon the good sense of this whole people, and that it will be reversed the first time it is brought in question. But I have yet to learn that any such decision as that which my friend has stated has been announced as the deliberate opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. If so, I fail to put the construction upon it which I ought to have put, in the estimation of the gentleman.

One word more, sir, and I shall have done. My friend says that the Government de facto, that is the Government of the United States, has found it necessary to declare certain districts in insurrection, and therefore that the General Government has undertaken to declare, and has in fact declared, that all the people within those districts were in insurrection. I deny that there is any such declaration on record from the Government of the United States. I undertake to declare that the true construction of these acts of ours has been that within certain districts of territory an insurrection existed, without undertaking to define whether it was the whole people or a part of the people who were engaged in that insurrection; leaving it for the courts of law and the process of time to determine upon whom, and how far, the weight of this legal warfare should operate. That is the construction that I put upon the acts of Congress and the acts of this Government, and, in my judgment, it is the only true construction.

But suppose, for the sake of the argument, that I am mistaken in that; suppose that by the laws of internal warfare, that is, the laws of war operating as between rebels upon one side and a lawful Government upon the other, and in a case where the rebellion is not carried to that crowning point of success which makes it a complete war and a war of independence; I defy the gentleman to produce any authority, from the foundation of the world to this day, which declares that when that rebellion is put down any man who did not personally aid and assist in that rebellion had his legal or civil rights changed a particle. No such authority can be found anywhere. But suppose there could; suppose that by relation and operation of law, against justice and against common sense, innocent and loyal and patriotic persons who were refugees and hunted, and traitors against treason in their own land, had become, by relation, enemies of ours. If that be so, would it not follow as a matter of course that the very moment the armies of the United States repossessed themselves under Federal authority of this territory, the persons who were then within their reach and under their protection became transmuted again, by operation of law, into real patriots and orderly and peace-loving citizens. If they did, if the same acts which, by relation carried them out, again being reversed brought them in again, and they then supplied the armies of their country with provisions, ought they not to be paid for them?

But, Mr. President, I rose only to enter my dissent against this idea of a universal treason by relation, and had not intended to occupy so much time as I have.

Mr. SUMNER. This question has already been opened to debate. Senators, I think, have become aware of its magnitude. I doubt if they are disposed to act upon it definitely. There is some business on the table of the Senate which ought to be disposed of in executive session; and therefore I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CLARK. I hope not. We have had the bill now before the Senate under consideration two or three times before, and it is desirable that it should be disposed of; and now that we have got fairly into the discussion it seems to me it will be more profitable and better advance the public business if we continue it and dispose of it this evening, than to change and take up something else.

Mr. SUMNER. I think that the Senate had better reflect upon it now. The case has been fairly opened to-day, and Senators have become aware of its magnitude. I doubt if they were before.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It has been discussed this much three or four times before.

Mr. CLARK. So far as I am concerned I do not need further time for reflection. I am, of course, very glad to hear and will consider all the arguments made upon the one side and the other; but I have given it a great deal of attention. I have given it attention in committee and in the Senate, and my mind is made up upon it as to what is just for the Government to do, and that is, to protect and pay its citizens wherever it finds them, whether in loyal or disloyal territory, if they have claims against the Government. I cannot now go into this debate, as the motion is to go into executive session, but I propose to do so if the discussion is continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 15, noes 13, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 5, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of Tuesday was read and approved.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a question of privilege. I gave notice some days since that on Tuesday of this week I would call up the contested-election case of Fuller vs. Dawson, from the twenty-first district of Pennsylvania. I was, however, unable to obtain the floor on Tuesday, and I now call up that case for action. It has been suggested by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means and by many other gentlemen that it would be best to postpone the case till after the tariff bill is disposed of by the House and sent to the Senate. This seems to me to be reasonable. At the same time I submit this case to the House under instruction from the committee, and I have no alternative but to insist upon its being taken up for action unless the House sees fit to order otherwise. If the House desires to postpone it until after the tariff bill is disposed of, I have no objection. I think, however, that the parties ought to have an opportunity to be heard even if that motion is made.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to give notice, as I have been inquired of often, that I will call up the question of privilege in the case of the member from Kentucky, [Mr. ROUSSEAU,] and the member from Iowa, [Mr. GRINNELL,] as soon as the tariff bill is acted upon—the first thing after it is disposed of.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman will not call it up before the election case. I insist that that shall be the next thing after the tariff bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that the postponement of the tariff bill for any other question will inevitably prolong the session of the House that much. This contested-election case may be considered after we get through the tariff bill, and will not prolong the session of the House because we will have plenty of time. I therefore move that this question be postponed until we get through the subject of the tariff.

Mr. PAINE. I wish to give notice that I cannot consent that the contested-election case shall be postponed until after the case referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] I desire that the contested-election case shall have precedence of that.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I only wish to say that the contestant in the Pennsylvania contested-election case is not here now, and I suppose cannot be here before Monday. It is probable that the tariff bill will not be disposed of much before the close of the week.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRILL's motion to postpone the contested-election case; and it was agreed to.

PROBATE OF WILLS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PATTERSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for probate of and for the recording of wills of real estate situated in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

ADOPTION OF CHILDREN, ETC.

Mr. PATTERSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for the adoption of children and changes of names in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

GUARDIANS OF LUNATICS.

Mr. PATTERSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to enable guardians and committees of lunatics appointed from the several States to act within the District of Columbia," approved March 8, 1864; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the regular order of business.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD, EASTERN DIVISION.

The SPEAKER announced as the business first in order, its consideration having been postponed until immediately after the reading of the Journal to-day, bill of the House No. 753, explanatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864.

The bill was read. It provides that nothing contained in the act described in its title shall be so construed as to enlarge the grant of land made to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, by the act of July 1, 1862, and the act of July 2, 1864, nor to entitle said company to receive bonds of the United States on a greater number of miles than are embraced in the line of the road of said company between the Missouri river and the one hundredth meridian of west longitude as said line is indicated by the map heretofore filed by said company in the Interior Department, nor in any manner to interfere with the right of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to receive the bonds of the United States provided for in the said acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, to aid in the construction of the road and telegraph line of said last-mentioned company, on its entire line from Omaha to the point where it may meet and join the road of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall interfere with any rights conferred on the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California by the second section of the act of which this act is explanatory.

I desire to say in relation to this amendment that it is feared by some of those who are interested in the construction of the California road that the terms of the bill would interfere with the right of that company to receive bonds on the portion of the line which they might construct east of the line of California. In order to avoid any possible construction which would lead to that result, I offer this amendment by way of protecting the interests of the California company. I ask the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOAN. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will hear the amendment read.

The Clerk read Mr. LOAN's amendment, as follows:

Add the following:
And provided further, That the Union Pacific railroad shall cross the one hundredth meridian of west longitude between the north bank of the Platte river and the south bank of the Republican river, in Nebraska Territory.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not know that I have any objection to that. If I understand the amendment, it is merely to prevent the Union Pacific Railroad Company from running their line either north of the Platte river or south of the Republican fork. That I understand to be the law now. They are confined within those limits for the construction of their road. I know that they are constructing it upon that line. A great deal of the road, some one hundred and twenty or one hundred and thirty miles, has already been constructed, and considerable grading has been done on the remainder of the line east of the one hundredth meridian of longitude. Now, as I do not see that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOAN] changes either the intentions of the company or the provisions of the law, I have no objection to it.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot conceive the necessity for the amendment which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOAN] has offered.

Mr. LOAN. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will yield to me a moment I will explain why I offer this amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will yield.

Mr. LOAN. By the bill of which this is explanatory it is provided, in the second section, that the Omaha branch of the Union Pacific railroad may run its road to any point that it sees proper, without regard to the initial point fixed by the act of July 1, 1862. That gives it the whole range of the territory as far north as it pleases. Now, if that road is to have the benefits conferred upon the Union Pacific railroad, I think it ought to be confined within the limits prescribed by the charter. Now that this change has been made, I think it is necessary to have this amendment to confine them within proper limits.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now call the previous question upon the pending amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The amendments which have been proposed and adopted do not in any manner interfere with the proposition which I submitted to the House when the bill passed of which this is explanatory. And I have endeavored to preserve in this bill the understanding had between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and the House on that day, in relation to the subjects embraced in the amendment which I desired to offer at that time, but was prevented from offering by the previous question being called by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] except in the first part of this bill.

The bill now reads, "that nothing contained in the act described in the title to this act shall be so construed as to enlarge the grant of land made to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, by the act of July 1, 1862, and the act of July 2, 1864." While that is a change from the phraseology of the amendment which I desired to propose the other day, yet it is not a departure from the statement made to the House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and others who advocated the passage of that bill. It was asserted that that bill was not intended to enlarge the land grant made to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division. I have here the Daily Globe which contains the debate of that day upon that bill. I find that the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] put the following question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS:]

"I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] if the first section of this bill contemplates anything more than an extension of the time within which the maps of these roads are to be filed."

Mr. STEVENS. That is everything it does."

Now, sir, upon that statement being made to the House, as well as other statements to which I might refer, I concluded that the friends of the measure really meant what they said on that occasion they did mean; that the terms of that bill should not enlarge the land grant made to the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division. Therefore, when I put into this bill the language which I have read, that that act should not be so construed as to enlarge the land grant to that company, I supposed, as I yet suppose, that I was putting in it precisely what they designed should be in it.

As to the other provisions of this bill, they are just what my amendment proposed. The bill provides that nothing in the act which we have passed shall be so construed as to entitle the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, "to receive bonds of the United States on a greater number of miles than are embraced in the line of the road of said company between the Missouri river and the one hundredth meridian of west longitude as said line is indicated by the map heretofore filed by said company in the Interior Department." That is the precise provision that was embodied in the amendment which I desired to offer on that occasion to the bill which passed.

The next provision of this bill is, that nothing in that act contained shall be so construed as "in any manner to interfere with the right of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to receive the bonds of the United States provided for in the said acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, to aid in the construction of the road and telegraph line of said last-mentioned company, on its entire line from Omaha to the point where it may meet and join the road of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California."

That, sir, is the precise provision which my amendment contained, and therefore there is no departure whatever from the understanding had with the House on that occasion. And in order that it may appear that I am not mistaken about this matter, I will read to the House the amendment which I proposed on that day. It is as follows:

And provided further, That no mineral lands shall be included in the grant hereby made, but the same shall be reserved to the United States; that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect the right of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to receive the bonds provided for in the act of July 1, 1862, and of July 2, 1864, to aid in the construction of the Union Pacific road on its entire line from Omaha to the point of its connection with the road of the Central Pacific railroad of California, and that bonds shall not be issued to the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, on a greater number of miles than are embraced in the line of said road between the Missouri river and the one hundredth meridian, as indicated in the map heretofore filed by said company in the Interior Department.

Thus it will be seen that this bill, except in the first clause, corresponds precisely with that which it was agreed by the friends of the bill passed the other day should pass this House, if that bill were passed without any amendment, thereby preventing its being sent back to the Senate, occasioning delay, and perhaps the defeat of the measure. There can be no doubt, sir, as to the understanding which the House had on that occasion. I notice that in two or three places in the debate of that day it was stated directly that this measure should pass and receive the support of the friends of that bill. I submitted three propositions, one of which I asked might be accepted—

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg leave, as one of the supporters of that bill, to say to the gentleman that I never gave my assent, either expressly or impliedly, to the idea which the gentleman suggests here this morning, that this House should attempt, by any sort of amendment to the bill which we passed a few days ago, to put a legal construction upon the acts of 1862 and 1864. And I ask the gentleman to be good enough to say now, as he has the floor, what objection there is to striking out from the ninth line, inclusive, down to and including the word "department," in the thirteenth line, and inserting in lieu thereof these words:

To a greater amount than said company would have been entitled to if the act of which this is explanatory had not been passed.

The words which I propose to strike out are these:

On a greater number of miles than are embraced in the line of the road of said company between the Missouri river and the one hundredth meridian of west longitude as said line is indicated by the map heretofore filed by said company in the Interior Department.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will state to the gentleman the reasons why I am unwilling that the bill shall be amended in that way.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to hear the reasons.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In the first place, I felt bound to prepare this bill in accordance with what I understood to be the agreement on that day.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. There was no agreement. I proffered a proposition to the gentleman, and said that if he would withdraw his opposition I would do a certain thing. He refused to accept the proposition; he made an earnest fight against the bill. He never accepted the proposition; and does he hold that we are bound by it now?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will read to the House what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said on that occasion. I submitted, as I have stated, three propositions. The gentleman from Pennsylvania then said:

"I will make a proposition, and I hope the gentleman will agree to it. I remember to have read of the Trojan horse, and I do not care to be caught by any such contrivance at this time. I propose that the gentleman shall draw up an explanatory act in the very language that he has suggested here, and that when we have passed this bill he shall forthwith introduce that act explaining what this bill means, and I for one will vote for it."

That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman now whether he did not repudiate that proposition.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Why, Mr. Speaker, I could not prepare a bill at that time; it required some thought. I have given to the House the gentleman's own language. I do not hold him responsible for anything else than just what he said on that occasion.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not hold myself responsible for that, because you did not accept it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There was no understanding that we should withhold our opposition. What was desired was that that bill should go through without amendment, in order that it might not run the hazard of delay or defeat in the Senate by being sent back there. It was not insisted that we should vote for that bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania gave me no opportunity to have a vote on that amendment. He demanded the previous question and cut off that opportunity.

And he did not insist on that occasion I should either vote for the bill or withdraw my proposition. His proposition was, if that bill should be permitted to pass without amendment I should introduce this bill and it would receive his support.

Mr. STEVENS. Let me correct the gentleman. I stated explicitly if he would withdraw his proposition and let the bill pass without opposition our friends would go for the amendment, but the gentleman declined, and we were compelled to pass the bill in spite of him.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not depend on my recollection for this matter at all. I have quoted the gentleman's language as it appears in the Globe. I do not add anything to it, or take anything from it.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will pardon me for one moment. I wish to say for myself that in giving to that bill my support it was not intended by me, whatever may have been said in the debate by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, nor did I understand it was expected by the gentleman from Iowa that at any time or in any place the act which we were then passing should thereafter be in any manner, by explanatory act, so limited or enlarged in its operation as to take from said Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, any benefit of the previous acts of Congress. On the contrary, as I understood the gentleman himself on that day when he spoke, he desired that this company should not acquire any new rights by means of the amendment save the privilege of locating and constructing their road on the new route as therein provided.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no issue with the gentleman from Ohio. I do not mean to say every person who voted for that bill was obliged by any remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to vote for this one; but I do say that the member who was in charge of that bill did make that statement. And I have reason to believe some members voted to sustain the call for the previous question on that day because of that understanding.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania further remarked, after the floor had been occupied by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVES] for a short time:

"Let me appeal to the House. Is there anything unreasonable in the proposition I have offered that if this bill shall pass then the gentleman from Iowa shall introduce and pass his amendment in the shape of an explanatory joint resolution?"

In answer to that I said:

"The gentleman makes that suggestion to me. I will say in reply, if, as the gentleman says, we should adopt this amendment it would defeat the bill in the Senate, why would not the amendment be also defeated in the Senate if sent to them in the shape of an explanatory joint resolution?"

The gentleman then said:

"I do not say it would be defeated if sent to the Senate as an independent measure."

To this I replied:

"If this will be defeated with the same thing in it, I would like to know whether the Senate would not be likely to defeat an independent bill."

What was the gentleman's response?

"I will just go so far as to pledge that the friends of the bill shall vote for it."

Now, sir, I have prepared this bill in accordance with that understanding; and I hope the House will pass it. I am not endeavoring to give any construction to the act of 1864 other than that given to that act by the persons who voted on the passage of that bill. I do not seek to take any advantage of the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, nor of the Central Pacific railroad of California; nor do I wish to take any advantage of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. I only ask that this matter shall be carried out as was suggested at that time. If that bill means what it was alleged to on that day, then this explanatory act will not interfere one iota with that act. If it means something more than was claimed on that occasion, then this explanatory act should pass, that the intention of the House in passing that bill should be placed upon the statute.

Now, that is all there is in this case. I am not seeking, as I have said, to take advantage of any one of these roads. I have to preserve faith with the people who have been looking to our legislation with a view to settlement and investment; that is all I desire. I may remark that the bill does not give any construction to the second section of the bill which passed the other day, being the only section in which the California company is interested. I demand the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I want to offer an amendment, and I hope the House will not second the previous question until I have an opportunity of offering it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will hear what the gentleman's amendment is.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask no favor of that kind. I want to offer it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I asked the same thing when the original bill was up—the privilege of merely having an amendment presented; that was all. I could not tell whether the House would adopt my amendment or not. I wanted the subject considered, but I was refused the privilege. Now, in accordance with the understanding on that occasion, I presented this bill, and if the gentleman will not go so far as even to let me know what his amendment is, I must demand the previous question, and I will leave it to the House, of course, to say whether that understanding shall be carried out.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to letting the gentleman know what the amendment is, but I hope the House will give me an opportunity of offering it and explaining it. I offer, then, as a substitute for the bill the following.

Mr. WILSON. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out the entire bill and insert the following: Whereas the following Senate bill (No. 317) of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, has passed the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, to wit: "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862,' approved July 2, 1863,"

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, is hereby authorized to designate the general route of their said road, and to file a map thereof, as now required by law, at any time before the 1st day of December, 1866; and upon the filing of the said map, showing the general route of said road, the lands along the entire line thereof, so far as the same may be designated, shall be reserved from sale by order of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That said company shall be entitled to only the same amount of the bonds of the United States to aid in the construction of their line of railroad and telegraph as they would have been entitled to if they had connected their said line with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude, as now required by law: And provided further, That said company shall connect their line of railroad and telegraph with the Union Pacific railroad, but not at a point more than fifty miles westward from the meridian of Denver, in Colorado.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby authorized to locate, construct, and continue their road from Omaha, in Nebraska Territory, westward, according to the best and most practicable route, and without reference to the initial point on the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, as now provided by law, in a continuous completed line, until they shall meet and connect with the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California; and the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby authorized to locate, construct, and continue their road eastward, in a continuous completed line, until they shall meet and connect with the Union Pacific railroad: Provided, That each of the above-named companies shall have the right, when the nature of the work to be done, by reason of deep cuts and tunnels, shall, for the expeditious construction of the Pacific railroad require it, to work for an extent of not to exceed three hundred miles in advance of their continuous completed lines." Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That nothing contained in the foregoing bill shall be so construed as to grant any mineral land to the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, nor to entitle said company to receive bonds of the United States for any greater number of miles than the said company would have been entitled to had the bill above recited not been passed, nor shall it be construed to prevent the Union Pacific Railroad Company from receiving the full amount of United States bonds and land to which it would be entitled according to the number of miles of road which it may actually build.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to allow that amendment to be offered?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir, I will allow a vote to be taken on the amendment; and if the gentleman desires to explain it I will yield a portion of my time for that purpose.

Mr. STEVENS. I certainly desire to explain it. I am hardly able to make myself heard this morning, and I must therefore be indulged in speaking very low.

By the act of 1864 the southern division of the Pacific railroad had a right to unite with the main branch anywhere beyond the one hundredth parallel, provided it received only the amount of bonds which it would have been entitled to up to the one hundredth meridian. It was entitled also to the odd sections of land. There is a difference of opinion as to whether the act of 1864 confined the odd sections of land to the original grant, or gave them the whole amount. My construction is that it gave them the whole amount. But the land beyond the one hundredth parallel is of little importance anyhow. When the bill was before the House the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] objected to that part only because he feared that it conveyed mineral lands. My amendment provides "that nothing contained in the foregoing bill shall be so construed as to grant any mineral lands to the Union Pacific Railroad Company." I have, therefore, obviated that objection. I have said nothing about the land which they would have been entitled to, because, according to my construction, they would be entitled to it under the old law. But the land beyond the one hundredth meridian, I think, is not worth quarreling about. If it is considered an original grant there is scarcely a member of the House who would not vote to give the alternate sections beyond the one hundredth meridian to the company. I do not think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] himself would object to it as an original grant.

By the act of 1864 the southern division had liberty, if it reached the one hundredth degree, or the place of meeting, before the Union Pacific road reached there, and if the latter had ceased to operate and to fairly carry on the road, to go on and meet the western Pacific railroad. Now, the explanatory bill of the gentleman from Iowa takes away that right to go on and build that road, for it gives to the Union Pacific railroad under all circumstances the right to go on with its entire line from Omaha to the point where it shall meet the Central Pacific railroad.

Now, that is a very important provision. It takes away entirely one privilege from the Southern Pacific railroad and bestows it nowhere else, namely, the right to unite and go on with the line. The gentleman also proposes to confine the land and bonds according to a map which is already filed, as he says, to the initial point. Now, there never was such a map filed. A survey was made to Fort Riley, and a map or profile was filed to that point. A conjectural line was marked on some of the maps in the office to a supposed initial point upon the one hundredth degree, but that initial was never fixed and is not fixed to this day. The line from Fort Riley to that initial point was to be fixed by the President. It never has been fixed to this day. There was, therefore, no such quantity of land or bonds provided for. But the bill, as passed, only gives them the same amount of land that they would have if they had had time to file their map and had filed it to the initial point, which they never have had time to do; and the main object of that bill was to extend the time from the summer to next December.

Now, sir, that is all that is done with regard to the Southern Pacific railroad. With regard to the main line, it is a thing with which the Southern Pacific railroad had nothing to do. It is a thing which was fixed according to the desire of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. An alteration was surreptitiously obtained in the law, stopping it on the California side at one hundred and fifty miles this side of the California line.

Now, what does the amendment that I propose say in regard to that?

That nothing contained in the foregoing bill shall be so construed as to grant any mineral land to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, nor to entitle said company to receive bonds of the United States for any greater number of miles than the said company would have been entitled to had the bill above recited not been passed.

Is there anything more honest and fair than that? What objection can any honest man have to it?

Nor shall it be construed to prevent the Union Pacific Railroad Company from receiving the full amount of United States bonds and land to which it would be entitled according to the number of miles of road which it may build.

Now, what objection can there be to this explanatory act? It declares that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company shall have no more than the original law provides. It declares that the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall be deprived of no right in consequence of the passage of this law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if anything more than that is wanted, or if anything more than that is contained in the bill of the gentleman from Iowa, then it seems to me to be unjust. There is more contained in his bill, as I perceive very well. It is very cunningly devised. It takes away two very important privileges granted by the law of 1862 and 1864. It takes away the right to go where they please, only receiving bonds up to the one hundredth meridian. It takes away the right to unite and carry on the road in case the other company should fail. And, according to my construction of the gentleman's bill and amendment, it takes away the right of the western road to come on and meet the other. Now, I wish to have two sections of the former law read to show that they contain all that I have now stated except the right to file the maps.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I read that the other day.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not wish to take up any of the gentleman's time unnecessarily.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand the point the gentleman makes—that under the act of 1864 the Kansas company would have the right, if it reaches the one hundredth meridian first, to go on and construct the Pacific railroad.

Mr. STEVENS. Only if it reaches it and the other is not progressing.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has said, during the discussion on the original bill and during the discussion to-day on this bill, a great deal about no honest man possibly understanding this matter differently from what he does. Now, sir, I do not propose to refer to those remarks of a personal character.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] misunderstood me. I said that I thought no honest man would require more than what I stated was in the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to show what there is in this bill, and I affirm, as I did when the original bill was under consideration, that there is a great deal more in it than this House understands. It was told this House, when the original bill was under consideration, that the bill created no new land grant whatever. It was so stated in the debates and insisted upon by all except my colleague, [Mr. KASSON,] who is not now in his seat. He did state in effect that the bill which we have passed creates an additional land grant. He uses this language:

"And I have only to say that if for this same grant, without one additional dollar of United States bonds, and with nothing additional but the grant of land, there is any man or set of men who are willing to take that land and build that road in preference to going up the Republican and crossing over the divide between the Republican and Platte to the Omaha route, near the one hundredth parallel, I say it is a duty we owe to the people of this country to allow it to be done."

To what land grant did he refer? The land grant contained in the bill which we passed the other day. And what kind of a grant is that? "That the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, is hereby authorized to designate the general route of their said road, and to file a map thereof, as now required by law, at any time before the first day of October, 1866, and upon the filing of the said map, showing the general route of said road, the lands along the entire line thereof, so far as the same may be designated, shall be reserved from sale by order of the Secretary of the Interior." What kind of a land grant is that? We were told there were none in the bill. And yet you have heard the provision which withdraws all the land, odd sections, even sections, mineral land and all, without any limit as to the width of the grant, for the benefit of this Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division. And I may state here that I was told by a member of the other House, who took part in drafting this bill, that he was astonished that any person in this House should insist that it did not contain an additional land grant.

Now, if it contains an additional land grant, I want to know if it is not just of the character I have stated, without limitation as to width, without limitation as to odd or even sections, and without limitation as to the mineral lands of the Government. That is the character of the land grant contained in that bill.

Now, as to another point raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] concerning the bonds of the Government. He says there are no bonds in that bill more than are contained in the original act of 1864. He provides essentially in his amendment to my bill, that nothing contained in it shall interfere with the right of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to receive lands and bonds for every mile of road that company may build. There is no doubt, then, that his amendment is for the purpose of securing to the Union Pacific Railroad Company lands and bonds for every mile of road which that company may build.

What more? I say that the same bill secures to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the road on the Smoky Hill route, precisely the same amount of bonds that is secured to the other road; or at least gives them the opportunity to demand and receive from the Government the same number of bonds. Now, how is that? Under the ninth section of the act to which the gentleman referred, the act of 1864, it is provided that if the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, shall reach the one hundredth meridian before the other road reaches there, or if the other road shall not be progressing in good faith in the construction of its road through the Territory, then this Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, running on the Smoky Hill route, shall go on and construct the Union Pacific railroad. Now, suppose it should do that, what right does it acquire by the construction of the Union Pacific railroad? The same rights, the same privileges, the same benefits, and the same subsidies that are provided for in the act of 1864 for the construction of the Union Pacific railroad.

Now, sir, as I was remarking, if the Kansas company, or the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, shall, under the terms of the act of 1864, as construed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, construct the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, it, by that construction, secures all the bonds provided for in the act of 1864 for the construction of the Union Pacific railroad. Now, what does the gentleman's amendment propose? After the provision that the bonds originally intended for the Union Pacific railroad line may go to aid in the construction of the Smoky Hill line, what does the gentleman's amendment propose to do for the Union Pacific Railroad Company in that regard? It provides that the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall nevertheless receive the lands and bonds to the full amount provided for in the act of 1864 through the entire line of their road, or so much of it as they may construct, thereby duplicating the amount of such aid. This is the construction that will be put upon the provision by every person interested in the road.

Now, all that I ask of this House is to let this legislation rest where the country has had reason to believe it would rest—upon the action of Congress in 1864—except so far as may be necessary to allow the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, to file a map of a new line, if the company should desire, to build a road on that new line. This was stated, as I have proved from the Globe, to be the only thing contained in the bill which we passed the other day. I am willing they shall have this privilege. I have no objection to it whatever. In addition to this, the second section allows the California company to build their road eastward till it shall meet the line of the Union Pacific railroad. I am willing they shall have this privilege. It is proper and right that they should have it; for the country desires that this road shall be built at the earliest possible moment. When the company have secured those two things, I affirm all has been secured which this House was willing to believe was contemplated by the bill which we passed the other day, and to which the bill I present this morning is designed as an amendment by way of explanation.

Now, sir, I have prepared my bill, as I stated at the opening of my remarks, in strict accordance with the understanding had here the other day. I have embodied in it precisely what I said I was willing to grant to the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, and to the California company. I do not propose to interfere with them at all; but I do propose to ask that this House shall carry out the understanding which we then had, and pass the measure which I then desired to offer as an amendment, and which it was asserted should pass as an independent bill without objection.

Mr. HIGBY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will.

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman has referred to a question which I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania the other day in reference to the map filed by this company. I now desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, filed in time in the Interior Department a map under which they could go to work and build their road.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, did file a map of a line from the Missouri river to the one hundredth meridian on the Republican fork. More than that, I understand that even though it be true, as contended by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that that was intended only as a temporary line, still it is a line; and giving the company bonds upon the entire number of miles embraced in that line will give them bonds upon more miles than are embraced between the Missouri river and the point at which they now intend to cross the one hundredth meridian. So that it does not take from them a single dollar of subsidy provided for by the laws of the United States.

Now, sir, I ask this House to carry out that understanding. I have been more liberal than the gentleman from Pennsylvania was the other day. He refused to give me a hearing at all on my amendment. I have given him an opportunity to offer his substitute, in the terms of which, I affirm, will be found a duplication of the bonds of the United States to these railroad companies. And I ask this House now whether it is proper to vote to these railroad companies an amount of bonds double that provided by the act of 1864.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the gentleman from Iowa whether my understanding of the effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is correct. I have examined the amendment and the laws of 1862 and 1864, and it seems to me the necessary legal effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to make a new grant of lands from the hundredth meridian west to the point where this Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, connects with the other; and not only a grant of land, but a new subsidy of money. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether that is not the effect.

Mr. STEVENS. There is not one word that would countenance such a construction.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannot come to any other conclusion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no doubt, as I have already said, that the construction placed on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by the gentleman from Massachusetts is the true one; that it does make a new grant of lands without limitation except as to mineral lands, and that it does make a second issue of bonds on the entire line of the road. That is the effect of the provisions of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I ask that the original understanding may be carried out, and that is the purpose of the bill I have presented. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have not time.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman could not hear my suggestion this morning on account of the noise.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope it will not be seconded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 42.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

The question recurred on Mr. STEVENS's substitute.

Mr. STEVENS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 71, nays 67, not voting 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Coffroth, Cullom, Dawson, Delano, Eckley, Eggleston, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Grider, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Johnson, Kelley, Kerr, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Marvin, McKee, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Niblack, Noell, O'Neill, Phelps, Plants, Samuel J. So the substitute was agreed to.

During the vote, Mr. TROWBRIDGE stated that his colleague, Mr. BEAMAN, was detained from the House by illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved that the bill be laid upon the table.

Mr. ALLISON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 123, nays 11, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Lathin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McKee, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Niblack, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—123.

NAYS—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Benjamin, Bromwell, Buckland, Eckley, Eggleston, Higby, James L. Hubbell, Morrill, Patterson, and Pomeroy—11.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Broomall, Chandler, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Defrees, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Earnsworth, Garfield, Goodyear, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Lynch, Marshall, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, Newell, Nicholson, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, and Wright—48.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

During the vote,

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania, said: My colleague, Mr. BROOMALL, is detained at home by sickness, and telegraphed me that he desired me to make this statement to the House.

Mr. DAVIS said: My colleague, Mr. CONKLING, is absent from the city in consequence of the sickness of a member of his family, and will be absent for some time.

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of their Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defenses, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to present a report from the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill. I ask that the report be read, and then I will briefly state the points of difference and what has been agreed to.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the second, third, and tenth amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its sixth amendment. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the fifth amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out of said Senate amendment by the House the following words: "and in advertising for Army supplies the quartermaster's department shall require all articles which are to be used in the States and Territories of the Pacific coast to be delivered and inspected at points designated in those States and Territories, and the advertisements for such supplies shall be published in newspapers in the cities of San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in Oregon;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: in line eight of said amendment, after the word "shall," insert the following words: "in time of peace."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "SEC.—And be it further enacted, That the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy may hereafter be selected, and the officers on duty at that institution detailed, from any arm of the service; and the supervision and charge of the Academy shall be in the War Department, under such officer or officers as the Secretary of War may assign to that duty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out all of said Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "SEC.—And be it further enacted, That when it is necessary to employ soldiers as artificers or laborers in the construction of permanent military works, public roads, or other constant labor of not less than ten days' duration in any case, they shall receive, in addition to their regular pay, the following additional compensation therefor: enlisted men working as artificers, and non-commissioned officers employed as overseers of such work, not exceeding one overseer for every twenty men, thirty-five cents per day, and enlisted men employed as laborers twenty cents per day; but such working parties shall only be authorized on the written order of a commanding officer. This allowance of extra pay is not to apply to the troops of the engineer and ordnance departments;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN SHERMAN.

HENRY WILSON.

RICHARD YATES.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

W. E. NIBLACK.

M. RUSSELL THAYER.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I will, as I promised, very briefly explain the result of this conference to the House. It will be observed that the House recedes, through its conferees, from the second, third, and tenth amendments.

The second amendment is that which proposed as an addition to the Army appropriation bill a provision that suits shall be brought against the Illinois Central Railroad Company to recover back what sums may have been paid for the transportation of troops and munitions of war.

Sir, the House is familiar with this question. After full conference, the managers upon the part of the House became thoroughly satisfied that no appropriation bill with a provision of this kind in it could possibly pass the Senate, and that, instead of receding in any degree from the position which has for the last year or more been taken by the Senate, they have only been confirmed in it by arguments drawn by the character of the appropriation of lands made for canal purposes to the State of Illinois, finding that the bill granting lands to the Illinois Central railroad is but a transcript of the provisions of that canal bill. I will not, however, go into any argument upon the subject. As I said before, it has been fully discussed in this House and has been a point of controversy for a long time between the Senate and the House, and the managers on the part of the House were satisfied that if that provision is ever to prevail and become a law, it must be as a separate enactment and not as part of an appropriation bill. They therefore recommend the House not to keep the question open upon an appropriation bill, but to recede from the amendment in the form in which it is presented as attached to an appropriation bill. The third amendment from which the House recedes is an appropriation introduced by the Senate for the construction of fire-proof store-houses at the arsenal at Philadelphia. This had not been agreed to by the Committee on Appropriations of the House, nor by the House, as the conferees were satisfied, for the want of that full information of the necessity of such an appropriation which had been laid before the Senate committee, and the managers on the part of the Senate recommended that we should recede from that amendment.

They also recede from the amendment which increases the mileage to officers of the Army to ten cents per mile instead of six cents. This they might very safely do, because the House has already twice passed upon that subject—in the bill recently passed for the reorganization of the Army, and in the bill establishing the pay of the Army. In those two acts the House affirms the very proposition which the Senate makes. The disagreement was pro forma, and not because of any difference between the House and the Senate.

The Senate recedes from its amendment by which an appropriation was made for the purchase of land near Nashville, Tennessee. It was believed that the appropriation was unnecessary at this time, and the Senate agreed to abandon the amendment which they had introduced making the appropriation.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the fourth amendment of the Senate. That amendment was an addition to the appropriations for the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, providing for the cost of telegraphing. The Senate agrees to accept the House amendment to its amendment upon that subject.

It will be remembered that the House struck out from the fifth amendment of the Senate a provision in regard to giving the preference to manufactures of the States on the Pacific coast when Army supplies are advertised for. The conferees have agreed, while the Senate accepts that amendment of the House, that there shall be inserted as a substitute for the part stricken out what I will read to the House, and which conveys its own explanation. After providing, as the Senate amendment does, that preference shall be given always to American manufactures, when Army supplies are to be obtained through the quartermaster's department, it is agreed these words shall be inserted in lieu of the part stricken out:

And in advertising for Army supplies the quartermaster's department shall require all articles which are to be used in the States and Territories on the Pacific coast to be delivered and inspected at the points designated in those States and Territories, and the advertisements for such supplies shall be published in the newspapers of San Francisco and Portland.

The next amendment is one which relates to the throwing open the appointment of the superintendency of the Military Academy to all branches of the Army. The House has passed upon that subject also, and the Senate has agreed to accept what the House has done, using the language of the House as inserted in the bill for the reorganization of the Army instead of the language of the Senate's amendment. The language of the House in the clause which was adopted is a little fuller and more precise than that of the Senate, and was preferred by the conferees both of the House and of the Senate, the two Houses being agreed upon the main proposition. In like manner both the House and the Senate were agreed upon the propriety of restoring the extra pay to soldiers employed outside of their regular line of duty. The Senate agreed that the language which was used for expressing this purpose in the House Army bill was better than the language which had been used in the Senate's amendment. Retaining the principle they adopt the language of the House. This covers all the amendments and the whole action of the conferees. I now move the previous question upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the report was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by WILLIAM J. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill of the House (No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th of June, 1867, with sundry amendments, in which he was directed to request the concurrence of the House.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 191) to amend an act making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of a railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior, approved May 5, 1864; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 149) declaratory of the law of bounty.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill of the House (No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th of June, 1867.

LAND TITLES IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced. The first business in order is the consideration of the bill of the Senate (No. 343) to quiet land titles in California, reported from the Committee on Public Lands. The pending question is upon the amendments reported from the Committee on Public Lands, upon which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. JULIAN] is quite willing to yield the morning hour of to-day, and take another morning hour after we get through with the tariff bill. I therefore ask that the House proceed at once to the consideration of the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent.

Mr. BIDWELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. On this bill the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BIDWELL. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to allow me about five minutes' time to make an explanation in reference to this bill, which I think will obviate the necessity of a long discussion.

Mr. JULIAN. I will yield to the gentleman all the time he desires at the end of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I ask a vote upon the last amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands. There is no controversy about this proposition, and its adoption will leave only one amendment pending.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add to section nine:

Provided, however, That from decrees of the district courts, as aforesaid, made after July 1, 1865, and prior to the passage of this act, an appeal may be taken to the United States circuit court for the State of California within the year from the approval of this act: Provided, That in any such case in which an appeal may be taken under the provisions of this section, the said circuit court shall not be precluded by the terms of the decree of confirmation, or by reason of any clerical mistake therein, from determining the boundaries of the land claimed, in accordance with the original grant and the real justice and merits of the case.

Mr. JULIAN. I demand the previous question on that amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JULIAN. I now ask for the reading of the amendment offered as a proviso to the eighth section, which is the only remaining amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section eight:

Provided, however, That the act of Congress entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the Socol ranch, in California," approved March 3, 1863, shall not be so construed as to interfere with the claims of bona fide settlers on the said lands who had settled thereon and were claiming preemptions, in accordance with the laws of the United States, prior to the time of the passage of the said act.

Mr. BIDWELL. I desire the gentleman from Indiana to agree to have the vote taken during this morning hour.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire no unnecessary delay.

Having a number of points to discuss it is impossible for me to say whether I shall occupy half an hour, three quarters of an hour, or an hour. I will get through what I have to say without any unnecessary delay.

Mr. McRUER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. McRUER. My point is that the amendment which has just been read is not germane to this bill for the reason that it refers to an act to which this bill does not refer; that it seeks to qualify or repeal an act of Congress with which this bill has nothing to do; that the bill is a bill to quiet land titles, while this amendment seeks to disturb land titles.

The SPEAKER. That may be a proper argument to be addressed to the consideration of the House with reference to the adoption of the amendment; but it is not a point of order. The bill is in regard to quieting land titles in California, while the amendment relates to the claims of settlers upon lands in California. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to occupy the time of the House at this late hour of the session in the discussion of this bill, and nothing could induce me to do so but a sense of duty. I believe, and feel very sure in the opinion, (without imputing any improper motives to anybody,) that an effort is being made here to overturn the entire land policy of the United States respecting the rights of pre-emptors and homestead claimants upon the public lands. I deem it incumbent upon me, therefore, to discuss with some care the question involved in the amendment submitted by the committee affecting the title to this well-known ranch in California, and affecting also the proper interpretation of the act of Congress of March 3, 1863. The facts of this case, which it is necessary to understand, are about these: this Socol ranch in the State of California is a large tract of about ninety thousand acres, alleged to have been granted by the Mexican or Spanish Government to one General Vallejo. The title was for a long time in dispute and litigation, and the case finally found its way on to the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States; and that court, after a full hearing of the whole case on the points of law and of fact involved, decided that the alleged title of Vallejo was void. It was not pronounced void on technical ground, as gentlemen may perhaps argue on the other side, for Justice Nelson of the Supreme Court declares, in so many words, that "in every view we have been able to take of the case we are satisfied the grant is one which should not be confirmed."

This decision was given in December, 1861, and so soon as the judgment of the court was certified to the court below in California, which was in March following, this whole claim of ninety thousand acres became a part of the unappropriated public lands of the Government, open from that moment to preemption and purchase as other public lands. Accordingly, as soon as that decision was thus certified and made known, scores of persons entered upon this Socol ranch as preemption settlers, built their cabins, put up fences, cultivated the land, in some instances planted orchards, and asserted the rights generally of pre-emptors under the laws of the United States. The Vallejo purchasers under the void Spanish title were confused as to what course of action to pursue. Many of them had bought in good faith and made their improvements. Conflicts arose between the pre-emptors and the Vallejo claimants, and they were of such a character as to induce the latter to come to Washington and ask Congress to pass an act which would recognize their equities and enable them to purchase their land at $1 25 per acre. The Committee on Public Lands in the Senate and in the House heard the application of these claimants, and on the representation that the lands claimed under the Spanish grant were in the possession of numerous small holders, who had purchased them in good faith, the following law was enacted. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Special "Socol" Law, March 3, 1863.

Bill S. No. 537, to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the "Socol ranch," in the State of California.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it may and shall be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause the lines of the public surveys to be extended over the tract of country known as the "Socol ranch," in California, the claim to which by Don Mariano Guadalupe Vallejo has been adjudged invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States, and to have approved plats thereof duly returned to the proper district land office: Provided, That the actual cost of such survey and platting shall first be paid into the surveying fund by settlers, according to the requirements of the tenth section of the act of Congress approved 30th of May, 1862, "to reduce the expenses of the survey and sale of the public lands in the United States."

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That after the return of such approved plats to the district office, it may and shall be lawful for individuals, bona fide purchasers from said Vallejo, or his assigns, to enter, according to the lines of public surveys, at $1 25 per acre, the land so purchased, to the extent to which the same had been reduced to possession at the time of said adjudication of said Supreme Court, joint entries being admissible by contemorous proprietors to such an extent as will enable them to adjust their respective boundaries.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That municipal claims within the limits of the said "Socol ranch," may be entered under the terms, limitations, and conditions of the town-site act of 23d of May, 1844.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all claims within the purview of this act shall be presented to the register and receiver within twelve months after the return of such surveys to the district land office, accompanied by proof of bona fide purchase under Vallejo, of settlement, and the extent to which the tracts claimed had been reduced into possession at the time of said adjudication; and thereupon each case shall be adjudged by the register and receiver under such instructions as shall be given by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and no adjudication shall be final until confirmed by the said Commissioner.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That any claim not brought before the register and receiver within twelve months, as aforesaid, shall be barred, and the lands covered thereby, with any other tract within the limits of said "Socol ranch," the titles to which are not established under this act, shall be dealt with as other public lands: Provided, That no entry shall be made of lands reserved and occupied for military, naval, or other public uses, or which may be designated for such purposes by the President, nor shall any claim under this act extend to mineral lands.

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, it will be perceived from the reading of that act of March 3, 1863, that it recognizes the equities of these Vallejo claimants to the extent that they have reduced their claims to possession. It allows them to purchase the same at the rate of $1 25 per acre under certain restrictions. That act was demanded by these claimants and was enacted by Congress at that time on the representation that the claimants, as shown by the report accompanying the bill, were a numerous body of small land-holders settled on the ranch, who only asked the right to enter their lands at $1 25 an acre to the extent of their occupancy and possession. I speak what I remember and know, because I was a member of the Committee on Public Lands at the time. To show that I am right I ask the Clerk to read the extracts I have marked from the report of the committee, and I am willing that the entire report shall be printed in the Globe.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The facts upon which the Committee on Public Lands base a favorable report upon the above-named bill are as follows:

"The Socol ranch is settled upon and occupied by an enterprising body of agriculturists, men who have spent their means liberally in making improvements, claiming their lands under the Socol grant of M. G. Vallejo. In 1847 the town of Benicia was laid out, its projectors and settlers relying on the Vallejo title. It has grown to be a town of several thousand inhabitants, and is among the more important of the interior villages of California. The town of Vallejo is upon the same ranch, was laid out in 1850, and is also of considerable importance, the lands therein being held under the same title.

"The entire ranch has passed out of the hands of the original grantee into the possession of a multitude of small holders, and is covered by numerous small farms and orchards, each inclosed by substantial fences, highly cultivated, and dotted all over with comfortable farm-houses and other buildings. All these settlers upon the ranch hold by purchase of M. G. Vallejo, having paid for their lands in good faith and in the firm belief, supported by the best legal advice attainable, that the title of Vallejo was valid.

"Several million dollars have been expended in improvements upon the ranch, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are secured by mortgage upon the farms into which the ranch has been divided. It is obvious that great confusion and distress must arise in a community of this character, with proper interests so extensive, when it is suddenly discovered that their title was invalid, and the wealth they had supposed their own is suddenly taken away and all the accumulations of years swept from them.

"There are many circumstances which tended to give to the settlers upon the Socol ranch confidence in the title which they purchased. M. G. Vallejo, the grantee from the Mexican Government, belonged to one of the most influential families of California. In 1827 he was a member of the departmental legislature. He afterward held a high official position under Governor Figueroa, and still later, in 1839, was commissioned by the supreme Government as military commandant of Alta California. At various times during the troubles in Mexico, and its consequent pecuniary straits, he furnished the Government large sums of money and other supplies; and, in consideration of these favors to the Government, Micheltorena, then governor of California, and invested with extraordinary powers by the home Government, granted to Vallejo the Socol ranch in 1843, several years before the conquest of the State by the United States. From that time Vallejo had the exclusive and undisputed use and possession of the rancho having upon it his residence, several thousand head of horses and cattle, numerous dependents and retainers, and exercised over it all acts of ownership. Thus matters stood when California became a part of the Union by a treaty guarantying, on the part of the American Government, protection to the property of Mexican citizens. Complying with the law of Congress requiring Mexican citizens to prove their ownership of grants, Vallejo presented to the board of land commissioners his claim to the land he had held and owned for years before. That board was satisfied as to the meritorious character of this grant, for after a thorough investigation of the documentary evidence in the case, and an elaborate examination of witnesses, the case was confirmed by said board on the 22d May, 1855. This decision of the board of land commissioners was subsequently confirmed by the higher tribunal of the United States district court for the northern district of California.

"After this grant had passed the ordeal of two courts of the United States, and had been indorsed by them as genuine, the owner would naturally feel warranted in selling portions of the same to third parties, and those desiring to purchase would not be apt to doubt the validity of the title against the decision of two courts of the United States. In addition to this, it should be stated that the Government desiring a location for a military establishment near Benicia, caused an investigation to be made into the bona fides of this title, under the supervision of the Attorney General, and that officer reporting that the title was valid, the Government purchased a portion of the land, and now holds it under the Vallejo title.

"After these various decisions the validity of the title was taken for granted until the decision of the United States Supreme Court. That decision was not made upon any alleged fraud, but upon a technical question as to the powers and duties of Micheltorena in making the grant, and this question was raised for the first time in that court.

"Justice Grier, who, with Justice Wayne, dissented from the majority of the Supreme Court in rejecting the grant on technical grounds, said:

"If this treaty is to be executed in good faith by this Government, why should we forfeit property, for which a large price has been paid to the Mexican Government, on the assumption that the Mexican Government would not have confirmed it, but would have repudiated it for want of formal authority? Vallejo was an officer in the army, high in the confidence of the Government. His salary as an officer had been in arrear. In a time of difficulty he furnishes provisions and money to the government of the territory. How do we know that Mexico would have repudiated a sale of eighty thousand acres as a robbery of its territory, when any two decent colonists, having a few horses and cows, could have one hundred thousand for nothing?

"I believe the Mexican Government would have acted honestly and honorably with their valued servant, and that the same obligation rests on us by force of the treaty.

"Now that the land under our Government has become of value, these grants may appear enormous; but the court has a duty to perform under the treaty, which gives us no authority to forfeit a bona fide grant because it may not suit our notions of prudence or propriety.

"We are not, for that reason, to be astute in searching for reasons to confiscate a man's property because he has too much. Believing, therefore, that in the case before us the claimant has presented a genuine grant for a consideration paid, which the Mexican Government would never have disturbed for any of the reasons now offered for confiscating it, I must express, most respectfully, my dissent from the opinion of the majority of the court, with the hope that Congress will not suffer the very numerous purchasers to forfeit the millions expended on the faith of treaty obligations."

"The bill reported by this committee respects the occupancy of the numerous holders under this title, recognizing it as a preemption, and authorizing a sale to them for the minimum price of public lands, they paying the cost of surveys and all other expenses.

"It has been the uniform practice of Congress to respect and protect the improvements of settlers. By the decision we have referred to, a considerable quantity of land covered with settler's improvements has suddenly become the property of the United States. To send out a commission to California to appraise those improvements would absorb all the Government could realize from the sale of the lands. Yet, to treat the settlers as intruders upon the public domain, and deprive them of the fruits of their labor and investments, would be a gross departure from the practice of the Government, and a great injustice to the settlers. As the bill proposes to sell them their lands at the Government price, they to be at all the expense necessary for surveys, litigating conflicting interests, &c., the Government will probably realize more from the lands than it can from any other mode of treatment, while it will do justice to its citizens whose interests are so deeply involved in the premises.

"The legislation proposed in the bill is consistent with the precedents of congressional legislation in land cases. By act of Congress approved June 27, 1851, the right of preemption was granted to certain settlers on the Maison Rouge grant, in Louisiana. The Congress passed the act to take effect 'in the event of the final adjudication of the title in favor of the United States.' (9 Statutes-at-Large, page 565.) The final decision is reported in 11 Howard, 663, and the act was passed while the case was pending.

"Another act, entitled an act for the settlement of certain classes of private land claims within the limits of the Baron de Bastrop grant, and for allowing preemption to certain actual settlers in the event of the final adjudication of the title of said de Bastrop in favor of the United States, was approved March 3, 1851. (9 Statutes-at-Large, page 597.) The case is found in 11 Howard, page 609.

"The settlers on the above-named grants were comparatively few in number, and the grants eleven times as large as the Socol grant, while on the latter some three thousand families are settled, and several thousand others, all holding under the Socol title.

"Up to the time of the rejection of the Socol grant during the present Congress, the settlers were undisturbed by any outside parties; but difficulties have since arisen from the entrance of parties upon the grant on the claim that it is public land, leading to collisions, which must increase if Congress does not intervene. The parties so claiming have entered within the inclosures of settlers, and scenes of violence have hence resulted.

"In view of all the facts in the case, the fact that so large a population of industrious agriculturists have settled upon and improved the grant; that they have bought their lands in good faith; the precedents cited, and the consistent policy of the Government toward settlers, with the bona fides of the grant itself, the committee report back the bill, and recommend its passage."

During the reading of the report,

Mr. HIGBY said: Does the gentleman desire to have that report read only partially or in full?

Mr. JULIAN. I am willing it should all go into the Globe. I do not wish to consume my hour in reading it in full.

Mr. HIGBY. There may be a vote taken before members can see it in the Globe.

Mr. JULIAN. If it does not come out of my time I have no objection to having the whole of it read.

Mr. BIDWELL. I do appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to permit a vote to be taken on the amendments in the morning hour.

Mr. JULIAN. I shall make my argument just as full and as thorough as I deem it my duty. The question involved is an important one.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the whole of it read or only the part marked?

Mr. JULIAN. Only the part marked. The remainder I will insert in the Globe.

It will be seen by the facts stated in that report that the act of Congress of March 3, 1863, was obtained by false and fraudulent representations of fact, as I shall proceed more fully to show. But first I will ask to have read the rules of decision which were adopted by the Land Office in the settlement of these difficulties.

The Clerk read as follows:

"1. The land included in these cases was, for a considerable period, regarded by many as a ranch, and designated 'the Socol ranch.' As such it was claimed by Don Mariano Guadalupe Vallejo, under an alleged grant from the Mexican Government.

"On the other hand there were those who contended that the claim of Vallejo was fraudulent, and that the land was part of the public domain of the United States.

"2. The contest at length passed into the Supreme Court of the United States, and at the December term, 1851, its decision was rendered adverse to Vallejo, and judgment entered on the 24th of March in favor of the United States.

"3. The immediate effect of this decision was to remove or destroy the claim of Vallejo and those holding under him. It in fact declared that all along the land belonged to the United States, and as such had been, and must continue to be, open to preemption under the general acts of Congress, as any other part of the public land.

"4. It therefore follows that any person having the requisite qualifications, who settled as a preëmptor on this land prior to the adjudication of the Supreme Court or subsequent thereto, and prior to the special act of 3d of March, 1863, and who has properly kept up his inaugurated claim, possesses a vested right of which he cannot be deprived by any legislation of Congress. It is indeed not to be presumed that Congress designed to disturb such rights by the special act.

"5. This special act is in the nature of an enabling or remunerative act, and appears to be intended to compensate, as far as was proper, the claimants under Vallejo for the loss sustained by them as purchasers from him, in consequence of the decision of the Supreme Court.

"6. It therefore requires that, in order to establish a claim under the act, it must first of all appear affirmatively that they are bona fide purchasers from Vallejo or his assigns.

"This implies two things, a valuable consideration and the absence of notice of a valid adverse preemption claim.

"7. Such purchasers, in the absence of valid adverse claims, may be allowed the land originally claimed by them to the extent to which they show that they have reduced it to possession, upon producing evidence of compliance with the other provisions of the law. This may include the whole of the original purchase, or only the part actually occupied or possessed.

"8. This occupancy or possession relates back to the 24th of March, 1862, that being the period of adjudication by the Supreme Court or the date of the entry of the decree.

"The possession must then have existed; subsequent reduction to possession cannot be considered.

"The fact itself may be established by proof of actual occupancy or use of the land at that date, or the existence of dwellings, improvements, of inclosures within marked trees, stakes, stones, fences, or other visible lines or indications of claims to special tracts.

"9. In addition to proof of bona fide purchase and of reduction to possession, there must be proof of settlement.

"By settlement is meant a residence within the exterior limits of the ranch or original Vallejo claim.

"This settlement must necessarily be on a particular tract, and must be continued until the presentation of the claim at the local office, or until proven up.

"Abandonment of a tract after the adjudication of the Supreme Court, or before proving up, would be a forfeiture of a claim.

"The claim of a non-resident cannot be approved.

"The fact of residence on one tract would, however, give conditional validity to a claim for other tracts. Hence, a claimant establishing a right to a single tract may be allowed additional tracts if it appears he purchased them in good faith from Vallejo or his assigns, and without notice of an adverse valid claim, and that by employees or tenants he had reduced them to possession at the date of the adjudication of the Supreme Court.

"10. Conterminous claims may be allowed. These must come, in all other respects, within the requirements of the act of March 3, 1863.

"11. The first section of the special act rendered it lawful for me to cause the Socol ranch to be surveyed and have the plats returned to the local office upon the payment of the expenses thereof by the settlers, according to the provisions of the tenth section of the act of Congress of 30th of May, 1862, to reduce the expenses of the survey and sale of public lands in the United States.

"The required payment was commenced 9th October, 1863, ($100), and completed November 23, 1863, and the plats returned to the local office in September, October, and December, 1863.

"12. It must appear that the claims under the special act were presented to the local office within twelve months after the return of the plats thereto, which took place as follows, namely:

Mr. JULIAN. The following letter will also be found pertinent to the subject:

PHILADELPHIA, May 30, 1866.

I have carefully examined the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the 13th January last, in the Socol case; also the above argument of Hon. F. P. Stanton and others, in the same case. I fully and clearly concur in all the views set forth in said decision and argument. The general preemption law of 1841 was drawn by me as a Senator of the United States and member of the Committee on Public Lands and of the Judiciary Committee. I was a member of the Committee on Public Lands of the United States Senate for nearly ten years; and as Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, on appeal or reference from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as well as under special acts of Congress, decided several thousand preemption cases, not one of which decisions has ever been overruled by the Supreme Court of the United States. I have also argued a great many land-grant and preemption cases in the courts of Louisiana and Mississippi, and also in the Supreme Court of the United States.

R. J. WALKER.

Mr. McRUER. Is that intended as an advertisement?

Mr. JULIAN. If the gentleman has not comprehension enough to know what it was intended for, I am quite sure I cannot enlighten him.

Mr. Speaker, under these rules of the land office, as indorsed by Hon. Robert J. Walker, several of these cases have been decided, and decided, thus far, in favor of the preemptions.

Mr. BIDWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JULIAN. Only for a question.

Mr. BIDWELL. Is not Robert J. Walker a partner of F. P. Stanton, one of the lawyers in interest on the other side?

Mr. JULIAN. I do not know.*

Mr. BIDWELL. I know he is.

Mr. JULIAN. I do not know whether he is or not, and do not care. As I have already observed, this act of Congress was passed upon the statement that the claimants were a numerous body of land-holders, several thousand in all, occupying small tracts, and only asking the right to purchase to the extent of their actual possession; but the fact turns out to be that after being allowed all the time that the act of 1863 provides for the assertion and proof of their claims, only one hundred and fifty-seven claimants all told have made proof under the law as to their rights of ownership in that ranch. Let me give the House a sample of these "small" land-holders.

John B. Frisbie, one of the grantees under the Vallejo title, claims four thousand acres. He did not reside and never has resided on the premises, as I understand. His residence is in the city of Vallejo. Is he a "small holder" and a "settler" on the ranch?

D. H. Hastings claims nearly five thousand acres. He resides in the town of Benicia, and not on the land. Has he any rights under the act of 1863 for the preemption and purchase of this tract?

C. A. Eastman claims twenty-five hundred acres, and resides in San Francisco. Is he, too, a "small holder" with the right of preemption of this entire tract?

J. M. Neville claims six hundred and forty acres, and is a non-resident, his home also being in San Francisco.

Thomas S. Paige claims twenty-seven hundred acres, and resides in Chili, South America, and has resided there for many years. Is he, too, a "small holder," entitled to preempt his little possessions? Is it the policy of this Government to encourage foreigners to become large land-owners among us, who reside abroad and do nothing for the country, but hinder American citizens from preemitting the public domain in small homesteads?

J. Lankershin claims four hundred and sixty-six acres, and resides in San Francisco; and the seven claimants I have named assert the right to fifteen thousand seven hundred and six acres under the act of 1863, giving them the right to preempt at $1 25 per acre to the extent of their actual possession.

Mr. Speaker, is it the policy of the Government to encourage this large land-holding by foreigners and non-residents in contravention of the well-settled policy of the United States? Would the Congress of 1863 ever have enacted this law if it had understood the character of these claimants? Is it not perfectly clear that Congress was imposed upon in the passage of that act, and that no construction of it should be tolerated which will favor these monopolists at the expense of preemptions and homestead claimants?

Let me recite some kindred facts. One Singleton Vaughan claims two hundred and sixty acres; Charles Ramsey seventeen hundred and sixty; John W. Bartlett and John Baker three thousand; Joseph and John Wilson sixteen hundred; John Goodyear two thousand; Andrew and James Hunter sixteen hundred; J. Hill thirteen hundred; John Torney about seven hundred and sixty-six; and Peter Fagan eight hundred and sixty-six. This makes a total of thirteen thousand one hundred and fifty-two acres owned by ten men; so that with the seven beforenamed here are seventeen land-holders claiming twenty-eight thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight acres of this land, seven of them non-residents of the ranch, one of them a non-resident of the country, claiming titles under the law of 1863, which was procured, as I have shown, by false and fraudulent representations to both the committees of Congress at that time.

* I have since learned that Mr. Walker has no interest whatever in the law business of Mr. Stanton.

Let me state some other facts bearing upon this case; and what I have said and shall say on these matters of fact I get from the records of the Land Office, to which I refer gentlemen who may see fit to controvert any statements that I may submit.

Jacob Anderson, father of A. J. Anderson, a preemption claimant, settled on the Sheehy tract in 1855. The first purchase of Sheehy, the Vallejo claimant, was in August, 1856, and the second in 1858; so that here is one claim of a preëmptor prior in date to the claims set up under the Vallejo grant. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. BIDWELL] pretend that the preëmptor should be ousted? Berry Shouse bought of Frisbie, in October, 1856, the land claimed by Nesbitt as a preëmptor, who proves settlement in April, 1853. He built a house, stables, sheds, &c., and remained on the land from that date to 1858, fenced in a garden, planted an orchard, &c. In 1856 the sheriff put him off at the instance of Frisbie, under the Vallejo title. Is this the treatment of preëmptors which California land speculators ask us to sanction?

The records of the Land Office show, too, that some of the Vallejo claimants purchased of Frisbie, who is the son-in-law of Vallejo, after the act of March, 1863, was passed, and some of them after the rejection of the grant by the Supreme Court. Have they any rights under the act of 1863?

Granting, in other respects, the justice of the claim of these men, certainly none of them can assert any right on the ranch subsequent to the date of the decision of the Supreme Court, or subsequent to the passage of the act of 1863; for the effect of the decision was to make it unappropriated public lands, and the effect of the act of 1863 was to restrict all parties to the provisions of that act. Clearly, then, the Land Office was right in deciding as it did in favor of the preëmptors in these cases in opposition to this void claim set up against it; and I am very sorry to find the gentlemen representing California so strenuously at work to defeat the just rights asserted by that decision.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to the questions of law applicable to these facts. The act which I have referred to and which has been read to the House is an act entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the Socol ranch in the State of California." Its title shows that it was itself an act providing for the preemption of the land specified.

The term "preemption" implies settlement in person on the land. Congress undoubtedly so understood it. In proof of this, I remind the House of the language of the report of the Land Committee in 1863, on which the act was thought to be justified. I quote the following:

"The Socol ranch is settled upon and occupied by an enterprising body of agriculturists, 'claiming their lands under the Socol grant.'"

"The entire ranch has passed out of the hands of the original grantee, into the possession of a multitude of small holders." &c. "All these settlers upon the ranch hold by a purchase of M. G. Vallejo."

"There are many circumstances which tended to give to the settlers upon the Socol ranch confidence in the title which they purchased." &c. "The bill reported by this committee respects the occupancy of the numerous holders under this title, recognizing it as a preemption."

"It has been the uniform practice of Congress to respect and protect the improvements of settlers." &c.

It is thus quite evident that Congress understood these Vallejo claimants to be settlers on the land. What is a settler? I refer to the authorities on the subject:

"Bouvier's Law Dictionary, vol. 2, p. 519, gives it as 'the right which a person has of being considered as resident of a particular place.' It is synonymous with domicile, or 'the place where a person has fixed his ordinary dwelling with a present intention of remaining.' Id. vol. 1, p. 342. The word comes into the English language from the Latin 'sedes' or 'sedeo,' and means not only a personal residence, but a permanent personal residence. In England, as far back as Elizabeth, a person must personally reside in a parish forty days with the intention of making it his permanent home, before he could gain a 'settlement' in such parish. Webster gives the definition of the word to 'settle' as to 'fix one's habitation or residence.' Burrill's Law Lexicon defines 'settlement' to be 'a settled place of abode.' There are other meanings of the word, 'as to settle accounts,' &c.; but when the term refers to settlement in a parish, in a country, or in fact a settlement on land in any manner, it then means a permanent, personal residence, and nothing less. It had this meaning in its original form in the Latin vernacular. It had the same definition when incorporated into the English language, and has retained it to this day. It had this meaning in the civil law; it had it in the common law, and has it in all statute laws. A man is settled, wherever he locates his residence.

"But the special bill of March 3, 1863, attaches a peculiar significance to the requirement of 'settlement.' Although strictly speaking, the title is no part of an act, yet the rule is well established, that the title, when taken in connection with other facts may assist in removing ambiguities, where the intent is not plain." United States vs. Fisher, 2 Cranch 336. 1 Kent's Comm. 516.

These are the definitions of the law books applying to this act which uses the word "settlement," and the words "occupancy" and "preemption," and provides for purchase to the extent of actual possession.

Now, I submit it as a clear proposition, that a gentleman claiming lands on this grant and residing in South America, was not precisely a "settler" on the Soscol ranch. I take it that the six or seven other large claimants on this ranch already mentioned were not "settlers" on it, inasmuch as they did not reside on it. I submit that a settlement on it through their tenants or agents was not such a settlement as the act, on its face, providing for the preemption of the land, would be satisfied with, and that personal occupation of or residence upon the soil was necessary. On that point, I think there can be no difference of opinion.

I will now refer, Mr. Speaker, to some of the general principles which apply to the interpretation of statutes, and will read from authorities as I have collated them:

"The most general proposition is that 'the law does not favor repeal by implication, and though two acts are seemingly repugnant, they shall, if possible, have such construction that the latter may not repeal the former by implication.'"—Dicaris on Statutes, page 530.

"Subordinate to this, we submit two other propositions: 'If the law admits of two interpretations that is to be adopted which is agreeable to the fundamental or primary law.'"—Professor Lieber, quoted in Sedgwick's Treatise, page 238.

Now, among the "fundamental and primary laws" of the United States respecting the public lands may be classed the law of preemption; a law whose beginning dates back nearly fifty years, recognizing the policy of encouraging settlers to go on the public domain, establish their homes, mark their improvements, and assert their titles, and thus pioneer and people and civilize the vacant lands of the nation. This is the settled policy of the United States, our American policy, in the light of which this special act must be interpreted, and not in contravention of it.

Attorney General Legare says, page 71, volume four, Opinions of July 11, 1842, "Statutes must be construed so as to avoid the divesting of any rights of third parties." Here, as I have shown, were rights of preemptions, valid, undeniably valid, because they date prior to the time of the decision of the court and the enactment of this act of 1863. Now, those rights of preemptions cannot be divested by the mere interpretation of a special act made for the benefit of special claimants. Any rule allowing this would be manifestly unjust and unreasonable.

Mr. Cushing (volume six, page 700) said:

"We are not bound to suppose that Congress intended a violent invasion of a private right and interest in any portion of the land described, and lawfully acquired under previous laws, for such act would be in apparent disregard of the Constitution of the United States."

I take it to be good law that if Congress in express terms had enacted that these invested rights of preemptions should be divested, the law would have been void under the Constitution. The law inviting a preemption, when accepted by the settler, becomes a contract with the Government, and Congress could not impair it. It has no power to make such a law, nor can the courts, by interpretation, give any retroactive effect to the act of 1863. I here cite the following authorities:

"Taylor's Elements of Civil Law; Braeton, 1, 4 fo.,

228; 6 Brac. Abr. 370; 2 Inst., 292; 2 Jones, 108; 4 Burr. 24, 60.

And under the more stringent limitations upon legislative powers which prevail in this country, it is well settled that a retrospective statute, affecting and changing vested rights, is founded on unconstitutional principles, and consequently inoperative and void.

"Johnson's Rep., 477; Tennessee Bill of Rights, art. 23; Ogden vs. Blackledge, 2 Cranch, 262; Society for Propagating the Gospel vs. New Haven, 8 Wheaton, 498; Wilkinson vs. Leland, 2 Peters, 657-658; Wilkinson vs. Fields, 2 Sandford's Chancery Reports, 534; Osborne vs. Huger, 1 Bay, 179; Bedford vs. Shilling, 4 Serg. and Rawle, 401; Merrill vs. Shurburne, 1 New Hamp. Rep., 199; Ward vs. Barnard, 1 Aiken, 121.

"The doctrine expounded in these authorities rests upon the principles of natural justice and general jurisprudence, which underlie the Constitution of the United States. It is simply a recognition of inalienable rights, of which men are not divested by the artificial relations of municipal law. In fact the legislation of every civilized nation, and even the Roman civil law has adopted Papinian's maxim, 'Nemo potest mutare consuetudinem in alterius injuriam.'"

"Nor is this doctrine without the express sanction of the Constitution. The Constitution provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; and also that 'no ex post facto law shall be passed' by Congress. (United States Constitution, art. 1, sec. 9; and amendments to Constitution, art. 5.)

"And although, in strict construction, the terms 'ex post facto laws' apply to criminal rather than civil matters, yet, in a comprehensive sense, they embrace all retrospective laws or laws governing or controlling past transactions, whether of a civil or criminal nature. (Satterlee vs. Matthewson, 2 Peters, 416; 4 Wheaton, 578; Ogden vs. Sanders, 12 Wheaton, 286; Sedgwick on Statutory and Constitutional Law, 681; 14 Peters's United States Reports, p. 361.)"

Again, the Soscol act of 3d of March, 1863, grants a special privilege to certain persons, and it is a principle of law that privileges or favors are to be so construed as not to injure the non-privileged or unfavored. Attorney General Black said with great force and common sense, when interpreting an act under which a claim to land was set up, (Opinion of November 22, 1858,) that—

"In every doubtful case, we know very well what we ought to do as soon as we ascertain which party is entitled to the benefit of the doubt."

"It is well settled that all public grants of property, money, or privileges, are to be construed most strictly against the grantee."

I ask the gentlemen from California to apply that legal principle to this case. Every jot and tittle of that special act is to be construed most strongly in favor of the United States, in favor of the preemptions of the Government, and against the peculiar rights specially given in the act. "Whatever is not given expressly," says the same authority, "or not clearly implied from the words of the grant, is withheld." And he goes on to say:

"We all know the fact, and are not bound to seem ignorant of it, that gifts like this are often caused by private solicitation and personal influence. The bills, almost universally, are drawn up by their special friends, and may be made ambiguous on purpose to disarm their opponents or put suspicion asleep. If you let the grantees have the advantage of the ambiguity which they themselves put into their own laws, many of them will get a meaning which Congress never thought of. Acts which were supposed to have but little in them when they passed, will expand to very large dimensions afterward. An ingenious construction will make that mischievous which was intended to be harmless."

I have shown the House what "private solicitations" and "personal influences" were employed in misleading the Committee on Public Lands. The basest and most unconscionable fabrications were concocted in that case in order to get the committee to report the bill desired. Every gentleman on this floor knows how these things are managed here, and certainly I need not attempt to enlighten California gentlemen on the subject.

Mr. BIDWELL. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] if there was not this session before the Committee on Public Lands a bill proposing the repeal of the act of March 3, 1863. And if that act was procured by fraud why did not the Committee on Public Lands report in favor of repealing it?

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, there was a bill for the repeal of the act of 1863 referred to the Committee on Public Lands during this session.

Mr. BIDWELL. If the act of 1863 was passed under fraudulent representations, why did not the committee report favorably upon the bill for the repeal of that act?

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer the gentleman with the greatest pleasure. We did not report in favor of repealing the law of 1863 because rights had intervened and vested; and we believed that the repeal of the law might do more harm than good, inasmuch as the Land Office was at that time deciding in favor of the preemptions. But since that date the decision of the Land Office, on appeal to the Attorney General, has been reversed in the interest of the California land speculators, who in some way procured an opinion to that effect. I may add that in June, 1864, the House Committee on Public Lands did report a bill for the repeal of the act of 1863, which passed the House near the close of the session, but was not acted on in the Senate.

Mr. BIDWELL. Then why does the committee of which the gentleman is chairman attempt to nullify and repeal that law by this amendment?

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer that question, too. I make no such attempt. What we ask is, that the law of 1863 shall be interpreted in the light of the intention of the Legislature, and that the Attorney General, of whose opinion I shall presently speak, shall not pervert that law from its legitimate purpose by glosses which no lawyer will for a moment defend.

Mr. Speaker, the questions of the gentleman from California [Mr. BIDWELL] have drawn me aside from the legal considerations to which I was referring. I have no time now to pursue them further. I have referred to some rules of interpretation for the purpose of inviting the attention of the House to the unwarranted use that is sought to be made of the act of Congress of 1863, in furtherance of the most iniquitous purposes.

But we are told, Mr. Speaker, about the equities of these claimants. I must say a word in this connection on that subject; and in approaching it I want to read an extract from the opinion of the Supreme Court in deciding this case, showing how much equity in the beginning was in the grantee under this Spanish title. The court say:

"The evidence of possession and cultivation is slight. Indeed, considering the magnitude of the tract granted, it is entitled to very little weight. As the grants were dated 1843 and 1844, and the country taken possession of by this Government in 1846, there could be but two or three years' possession or occupation under them at the time of our taking possession. The evidence that Vallesjo occupied and cultivated the tract previous to the grants, which, of itself, is slight and unsatisfactory, is still further weakened by the fact, which is shown, that the ranch had been occupied by the claimant, as a military commandant, with soldiers and Government property."

The witnesses, who speak of the possession as early as 1841, might very readily have confounded this possession for the uses of the Government with a possession for Vallesjo himself. We can give very little weight to a possession so limited as to duration and in extent, when offered in support of a grant of ninety or one hundred thousand acres of land. If the grant cannot be maintained by its own force and effect, this possession will scarcely uphold it."

So much for the possession in the early history of this grant.

Now, sir, in noticing further the pretended equity of these claims, let me refer to some additional facts. Let me first mention that General Frisbie, who holds under General Vallejo, bought the whole of these ninety thousand acres at rates varying from thirty-three to sixty-six cents per acre, on an average, as the records of the Land Office show—land that was worth, I suppose, at the least calculation, ten times the amount. General Frisbie bought it for a comparative song, and when he got possession of it, knowing, as he evidently did, that the title was invalid, and not being willing to risk it, he proceeds to make sales of the ranch. These sales have no explanation except in the fact that he felt, himself, that the title was invalid or exceedingly doubtful. I give some facts taken from the records of the Land Office as samples:

In November, 1855, one Harbin bought two hundred and ninety acres, for fifty dollars, giving his note for $1,103 75 on confirmation of the title. This was ten days before Frisbie professed to have bought it.

In December, 1855, John Torney, Peter

Fagan, and J. Lankorshin bought twenty-six hundred acres for $19,800, being about seven dollars per acre. These lands lie in two townships. They claim land in twelve sections, and as will be noticed, by the way, could not be "settlers" on all the land.

In August, 1856, one Sheehy bought fourteen hundred acres for $2,842, being about two dollars per acre. He claims land in two townships and various sections.

All these lands when sold were worth from forty to fifty dollars per acre, as I am informed by intelligent gentlemen from California. The rents which they bring, as I learn, will make their value more than stated. These purchasers bought an uncertainty, and knew they were so buying, and paid a trifling price accordingly.

So much for the equities of these Valjejo claimants. They bought at a price probably more than ten fold less than they could have purchased if the title had been good, and they knew it. They held it for years and years, building exterior lines of fences around it, plowing and cultivating it, and reaping the fruits of their toil. They had all the benefits of it without owning an acre of the land or having any legal rights on it. Sir, I think they ought to be satisfied in not being called to account for their unlawful use and occupation of the land for successive years. And yet these men, purchasing land for a trifle of a man who had no title, and receiving its unlawful fruits freely for years, come to Washington in 1863 with their bastard equity and besiege Congress by misrepresentation and lies to enact a law for their benefit; and not content still, they procure from the Attorney General an opinion which cheats the preëmptors of the United States for the benefit of these land-jobbing adventurers.

But it is argued that the right of preëmption does not apply to this Spanish grant. That it does apply, I prove by citing—

"The act of March 3, 1851, (Statutes-at-Large, vol. 9, p. 633,) entitled 'An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California,' the thirteenth section of which reads in part as follows: 'That all lands, the claims to which have been finally rejected by the commissioners in manner herein provided, or which shall be finally decided to be invalid by the district or Supreme Court' * * * shall be deemed, held, and considered as part of the public domain of the United States.'

"And again the act of March 3, 1853, (Statutes, vol. 10, p. 244,) entitled 'An act to extend preëmption rights to certain lands therein mentioned,' reads in part as follows: 'That any settler who has settled or may hereafter settle on lands heretofore reserved on account of claims under French, Spanish, or other grants, which have been or shall be hereafter declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be invalid, shall be entitled to all the rights of preëmption granted by this act and the act of 4th September, 1841, entitled 'An act to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands and to grant preëmption rights' after the lands shall have been released from reservation, in the same manner as if no reservation existed."

Even if Congress, as contended by Montgomery Blair and others, had exempted Spanish grants from the claim of preëmption, the exemption could not apply to void grants like the present, which of course is no grant at all. I marvel that so obvious a consideration never seems to have occurred to the learned counsel for the speculators. I respectfully refer them to the case of Clements vs. Warner, (24 Howard, page 397.) "The only lands excepted from the operation of the preëmption laws, on account of occupation, are: 1. Parcels and lots of land occupied for trade and not agriculture. 2. Lands in the occupation of any Indian tribe in California. Latter clause of section six, act of Congress, entitled 'An act to provide for the survey of the public lands in California,' &c., passed March 3, 1853. (Lester, page 207.) 3. Lands in actual occupation of half breeds or mixed bloods. Section two of act of Congress of May 19, 1853, entitled 'An act concerning lands belonging to said half breeds,' &c. (Lester, page 293. Section ten, act of September 4, 1841. Lester, page 62.")

But it is said the right of preëmption cannot attach to lands inclosed by a third party, whose title rests upon occupancy. This doctrine is in direct antagonism to every land law of the United States since the act of Congress of 1807, which is still in force, entitled "An act to prevent settlements being made on lands ceded to the United States until authorized by law." I need not waste time in refuting a proposition the bare statement of which refutes itself. If the law were as stated, any man, by inclosing the Soscol ranch, after the decision of the Supreme Court, could have excluded every man claiming the right of preëmption or homestead in any portion of this immense domain. The principle would make good law of the opinion of a California judge, who decided, as I have heard, that a fence around the entire State would exclude all pestilent preëmptors from all quarters. Certainly I need not dwell on this point.

But I come now, passing over many things I desired to say, to a question on which I hope we shall have an intelligent vote in this House. The Land Office has decided every one of these cases, so far as it has decided at all, in favor of the rights of the preëmptors on this ranch. Gentlemen from California—I of course do not speak of members of this House—gentlemen interested largely in lands in that State who have been belaboring members here for some time past with great industry, have procured an appeal from the Interior Department to the Attorney General of the United States, and that officer has given an opinion which I think one of the most extraordinary legal performances of this generation. I ask the Clerk to read the passages which I have marked. They are so interesting that I ask the House to listen to them.

The Clerk read as follows:

"It is not to be doubted that settlement on public lands of the United States, no matter how long continued, confers no right against the Government. It only gives the settler under the preëmption laws a right to enter the land occupied and improved when it is open to sale, and when he has complied with the conditions as to proof of settlement and improvement and payment of the consideration prescribed by the statutes. It is in compliance with those conditions that alone rests an interest in the land.

"The land continues subject to the absolute disposing power of Congress until the settler has made the required proofs of settlement and improvement, and has paid the requisite purchase money. Before those steps are taken for the designation and assertion of his claim, Congress may at any time intervene, and either exempt the land from entry, location, or appropriation, or dispose of it by grant to other parties. Before proof and payment are made, the only right which the settler has is an inchoate right of entry. When proof and payment are duly made, his right of entry becomes choate and he acquires (perhaps even before entry) a vested interest in the land. The question may be a delicate one, whether Congress can impair a vested right of entry; but there is no doubt that before the settler has taken the steps necessary to convert the privilege of preëmption into a vested right of entry, by establishing the fact of his settlement and paying the purchase money in the manner prescribed by law, Congress has absolute power to place the land beyond the operation of the statutes under which the settlement was made."

"It is not necessary to determine whether, immediately on the decision of the Supreme Court, or at any time after, the lands in question, by operation of any statutes, became subject to preëmption; whether, in other words, there was any law under which persons not claiming under grants from Valjejo or his assigns could have acquired by settlement proof thereof, and payment of purchase money, a right to enter the lands at the land office, if such right had not been defeated by the statute of 1863.

"I assume that the lands embraced by the Valjejo claim fell, upon the adjudication of the Supreme Court, under the operation of the general preëmption laws, as other public lands, or were subject to the operation of special laws of that denomination, applicable to public lands in California. But under those laws settlers could acquire, as I have already stated, no interest, which it was not competent for Congress to direct, until they had taken all the steps necessary to perfect their right to make entries of the lands settled and improved."

"I have already said that a settler under the preëmption laws acquires and can acquire no vested interest in the land he occupies by virtue simply of settlement; and that no vested interest is obtained until the settler has taken all the legal steps necessary to perfect an entry in the land office. Before such steps are taken he has nothing but a contingent personal privilege to become, without competition, the first purchaser of the property, which he may never exercise, or which he may waive or abandon."

Mr. JULIAN. The Attorney General states as law that a preëmptor under the laws of the United States has no right until he has completed his purchase, and no interest which the United States cannot divest; no vested right.

Now, sir, I have heard it said there is nothing new under the sun, but I must question the truth of this after reading this opinion. He makes no issue of fact as to the character of the preëmption claimants as such. He admits this to be such, and says the fact is not material, since preëmptors may be driven out at any time before the completion of their purchase. His opinion is a plea in confession and avoidance, and the sole dispute is narrowed down to one of law. Affirming that the preëmptor has no rights under the laws of Congress, he rests the whole case of these Valjejo claimants upon this position. If that be so it applies to homestead claimants in like manner, and every such claimant and preëmptor in the United States, by this ruling of the Attorney General, strangely acquiesced in by the Interior Department, is at the mercy of the Government of the United States, which may violate its plighted faith at pleasure. Why, sir, the decisions are uniform, that the settler under the preëmption laws has a vested inchoate right which no power can take away so long as he remains on the land in the execution of the acts which the law imposes upon him as the conditions of title. While he performs his part of the contract no power can disturb him. You cannot divest him of his right, and if Congress should attempt to do it it would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States, as I have already shown. On this point I cite the following authorities, which I would be very glad to have the Attorney General and Montgomery Blair examine at their leisure:

"United States vs. Fitzgerald, 15 Peters, 419; Cunningham vs. Ashley, 14 Howard, 377; Bernard's heirs vs. Ashley's heirs, 18 Howard, 43; Garland vs. Wynn, 20 Howard, 3; Clements vs. Warner, 24 Howard, 397; Lindsey et al. vs. Hawes et al., 2 Black; McAfee vs. Kim, 7 S. and M., Missis. Rep. 780; Finley vs. Williams, 9 Cranch, 164; Isaacs vs. Steele, 3 Scammon, 97; Bruner vs. Manlove, 3 Scammon, 339; Brown vs. Griswold, 11 Illinois, 520; Polk's Lessee vs. Wendall, 9 Cranch, 87; McArthur vs. Crowder, 4 Wheaton, 448.

"Attorney General Mason, 25th April, 1846, expounding the right under the act of 4th September, 1841, pronounced an opinion which has ever since been followed by the land department, and said:

"The settler is entitled to protection against the claims or entries of others. From the moment, therefore, that he enters in person on land open to such claim, with the animus manendi, or rather with the intention of availing himself of the provisions of the act referred to, and does any act in execution of that intention, he is a settler. He must afterward give his notice of intention, inhabit, improve, build his house, and make his proof and payment within the time stipulated to perfect his right. But in every stage he is protected until he fails on his part to comply with the conditions of the law."

"Where the contest was between preëmptors and a railroad company, claiming under the State of Iowa, Attorney General Cushing said, (Opinions, volume 8, page 394): 'The preëmptor acquires inchoate or incipient title by entering on the land, and there performing certain acts, by means of which the land is appropriated to his individual use and thus segregated, in fact, from the public domain. If in addition to these acts done on the land, the preëmptor afterward performs certain acts of notice and proof in the local land office, then his previous equitable right is converted into a legal one.'

"In the case of Lytle et al. vs. The State of Arkansas, (9 How., 333,) the Supreme Court held as follows:

"The claim of preëmption is not that shadowy right which by some it is considered to be. Until sanctioned by law, it has no existence as a substantive right; but when covered by the law it becomes a legal right, subject to be defeated only by a failure to perform the conditions annexed to it. It is founded in an enlightened public policy, rendered necessary by the enterprise of our citizens."

"In the case of the United States vs. Fitzgerald, the Supreme Court held 'that no reservation or appropriation of a tract of land can be made after a citizen has acquired a right to it under a preëmption law.'

"The Secretary of the Interior says, December 20, 1851: 'Subsequent entries, however, which have been made by preëmption, in virtue of settlements made prior to the grants, will be valid, because in those cases the right of preëmption attached from the date of settlement, and became a vested right, which can be divested only by abandonment or a failure in the performance of its condition.'—Lester's Land Laws, p. 550.

"In Lytle's case we declared that the occupant was wrongfully deprived of his lawful right of entry under the preëmption laws, and the title set up under the selection of the Governor of Arkansas was decreed to Cloyes, the claimant, this court holding his claim to the land to have been a legal right, by virtue of the occupancy and cultivation, subject to be defeated only by a failure to perform the conditions of making proper tender of the purchase money."—Barnaud's Heirs vs. Ashley's Heirs, et al.

Mr. Speaker, these citations could readily be extended, but I deem it unnecessary. The opinion of the Attorney General is not law; and in making this declaration I throw down the glove to all comers, from Montgomery Blair down or up, as the case may be, through the entire list of pensioned employes of speculators in the work of overturning the land policy of the United States and defrauding preëmtors of their rights. I am sorry the Attorney General allowed his name to be signed to such a document, and I regret still more that the Secretary of the Interior so far forgot the great interests at stake as to accept that opinion as the guide of his Department against what must have been his own decided judgment. If carried out, no preëmtor or homestead claimant is safe. It mocks justice, sets common sense at defiance, and insults judicial decency; and the men who procured it in behalf of speculators were engaged in a very unworthy and unmanly service. I trust their labors will fail.

In Lytle et al. vs. The State of Arkansas, (9 Howard's Reports), the court say, "the adventurous pioneer who is found in advance of our settlements, encounters many hardships, and not unfrequently dangers from savage incursions. He is generally poor, and it is fit that his enterprise should be rewarded by the privilege of purchasing the favorite spot selected by him, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres. That this is the national policy is shown by the course of legislation for many years." It is in behalf of the great army of men of this class now hovering over the public domain and hereafter to find their homes upon it that I speak; and the attempt to wrong them by a pretended legal opinion, which is clearly against law, and industriously used on this floor and in the lobby to defeat a just and necessary amendment to the bill now pending, is about as despicable an enterprise as the public has been invited to consider in our latter-day legislative experience.

Mr. McRUER obtained the floor.

The morning hour having expired, the further consideration of the bill was postponed until the next morning hour for general business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 127) granting aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California.

GENERAL BURNHAM.

Mr. PERHAM asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of the application of General Burnham for a pension, copies of the same being left.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SMITH, one of its Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill of the House (No. 641), for the relief of Charles M. Stout, late second lieutenant of company E, seventh regiment Pennsylvania Reserve corps.

REFUNDING OF TAXES.

Mr. BLOW, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to authorize the refunding of certain taxes; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

OFFICIAL HISTORY OF THE REBELLION.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, Senate joint resolution No. 86, to provide for the publication of the official history of the rebellion, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHARLES M. BLAKE.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, Senate joint resolution No. 117, for the relief of Charles M. Blake, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent for an evening session this evening at half past seven o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. It can be ordered by a majority.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, then, that an evening session be held this evening for the exclusive consideration of the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to—ayes seventy-three, noes not counted.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOTFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The paragraph under consideration was on page 28, as follows:

On all plain and mold and press glass, not cut, engraved, or painted, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. MYERS to strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On all glass vials, jars, bottles, demijohns, carboys, and other vessels, except those made of flint-glass, and otherwise provided for, a duty of four cents per pound, filled or unfilled.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MORRILL. I move pro forma to strike out "fifty" in the original clause and insert "forty-five." In order to refresh the minds of members of the committee as to the merits of this matter, I shall have to restate some facts which I stated just before the adjournment on Tuesday. These articles in the present tariff are subject to a duty of thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. They are the cheapest and plainest articles of glass manufacture—plain, mold, and pressed glass. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] proposes a duty of four cents per pound, which would be a higher duty than that levied on cut glass or ornamented Bohemian glass. If we are to have this extraordinary rate upon these plain articles, it would be manifestly proper that we should raise the duty on other articles upon which a vastly greater amount of labor is expended and a much higher rate than exists in the present bill. I think it will be conceded by fair minds in the House, in view of the fact that we have reduced the amount of the internal revenue tax on these articles from six to five per cent., that an increase of fifteen per cent. ad valorem—that is to say, from thirty-five to fifty per cent.—which we have made in the Committee of Ways and Means, when there was no special reason, but on account of the exhibition of the depressed condition of the trade made before the committee, is enough. It is even a very large increase. I trust the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MYERS. As the chairman has refreshed the memory of members of the House in regard to this question, I will say a word or two in reply. It is a pity that upon reflection he has been able to find no better argument than he has now given. It seems he has taken little notice of the figures which I gave to the committee when they were last in session. He has just now stated that there was no special reason for this increase. It becomes proper, then, that I should repeat the reason for the increase of duty. But first let me state what I had forgotten to mention the other day, and what probably is known to every member of this House, that this manufacture is almost exclusively done by hand labor, so that the money made in it goes mainly to the American operatives. There is scarcely any labor-saving machinery employed, and we have to compete not only with the English labor, but chiefly with the Belgian, the cheapest in the world.

But the reasons which I stated the other day were these: there is not as much protection now proposed by this bill to this manufacture as was given under what was called the free-trade tariff of 1846. Under that tariff, when the duty on glass was thirty per cent., soda-ash, which enters largely into this manufacture, paid a duty of ten per cent. ad valorem, which amounted to only two mills per pound; and German clay, another ingredient, paid a duty of fifty cents per ton. Under the act of 1861, since which this manufacture has languished, the duty on soda-ash has been increased to one half a cent per pound, or one hundred and fifty per cent., and German clay to three dollars per ton, an increase of more than five hundred per cent.; and I believe now it is proposed to make it seven dollars.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman is mistaken in regard to the tariff of 1861; under that tariff soda-ash was free; the half cent per pound duty was put on in the tariff of 1864.

Mr. MYERS. I believe it was the tariff of 1864. Now, sir, I have stated to the committee the reasons why we ought to make this increase. Those reasons are, in the first place, that the articles entering into the manufacture of glassware have had to pay an increased duty of from one hundred and fifty to five hundred per cent., and that besides all this the manufacturers have had to pay six per cent. on their sales and double the former rate for labor. Another reason is that I, for one, am in favor of a specific duty.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment.

The question being put on the amendment offered by Mr. MYERS,

Mr. MYERS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. MYERS, and Mr. HOOPER of Massachusetts.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 50.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move the following amendment:

Strike out the twentieth and twenty-first lines and insert in lieu thereof the words, "on all glass vials, jars, bottles, demijohns, carboys, and other vessels, except those made of flint-glass, and otherwise provided for, a duty of three and a half cents per pound, filled or unfilled."

I do not desire to occupy the attention of the committee upon this subject, save to say that I have reduced the duty I proposed in my former amendment one half a cent per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman were to reduce it a cent and a half more I should be opposed to it, because it is too much at this late period of the session to ask Congress to go into the subject of levying a specific duty, with any degree of fairness or appropriateness, on the subject of glass. I know something about it, for in years past I have undertaken to do it. I know it is impossible to levy any specific duty with any degree of fairness without investigating the subject for weeks and weeks. And now for the gentleman to come in here and propose a rate of duty upon the most inferior, the black and the green glass, which would be ample upon almost any quality of glass, I consider trespassing upon the good nature of the House. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MYERS. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word of my amendment, simply for the purpose of saying that the gentleman's bill furnishes the best reply to his argument, for in numerous parts of that bill he has proposed specific duties.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I always prefer specific duties to ad valorem duties, and I think the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. MYERS] is a change in the right direction. I have looked a great deal into this question, and I believe a duty of three and a half cents per pound would increase the duty from fifty per cent., as reported by the bill, to sixty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no doubt the gentleman has investigated the subject thoroughly. What will the duty amount to upon a dozen common plain glass tumblers?

Mr. MOORHEAD. About sixty-five per cent. ad valorem. [Laughter.] I know the difficulty the gentleman has in his head; it is the common black bottles. Now, I would prefer making a scale of duties; have it three cents per pound on common articles, three and a half cents per pound on others, and four cents on others. I think three and a half cents per pound is about the right average, and I think we better adopt the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. MYERS, and upon a division there were—ayes 42, noes 58.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. MYERS called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was accordingly rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

On glass crystals for watches, forty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On lenses for spectacles, whether of glass or pebbles, and with or without frames, two dollars per gross pairs, and, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem.

On all other lenses for optical purposes, whether in frames or otherwise, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On all articles of glass, cut, engraved, painted, colored, printed, stained, silvered, or gilded, not including plate-glass silvered, or looking-glass plates, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting after the words "looking-glass plates" the words "two cents per pound and." That duty is not anything like what the men who manufacture fine flint-glass ask us to impose. They want five, ten, or fifteen cents per pound, in addition to the present duty, which is thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. But seeing that the disposition of the House is to increase the duty but slightly, I have named two cents per pound, and hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MORRILL. It is only half as objectionable as the other, but I hope it will be voted down by an equal majority.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window glass, not exceeding ten by fifteen inches square, two cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding sixteen by twenty-four inches square, two and a half cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, three and a half cents per pound; all above that, four cents per pound.

Mr. DAWES. I have an amendment which I desire to propose to this paragraph, and which I think will not encounter the opposition of the learned chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL.] I move to insert after the word "two," in the second line of this paragraph, the words "and one quarter;" so that it will read "two and one quarter cents per pound." If that amendment should be adopted, I propose to offer corresponding amendments to other portions of this paragraph. My object is to raise slightly the duty upon window-glass. If there is anything the manufacture of which it is desirable to cultivate in this country it is common window-glass.

We have every facility in this country for manufacturing window-glass. We have all the raw material except the soda-ash and a few other things. But for years the manufacture of window-glass has been struggling against the adverse influences of foreign competition.

Why? Because labor enters so largely into the manufacture; and abroad, in Belgium, labor can be obtained for one franc a day, while in this country two and three dollars per day must be paid. Hence, with sand and other materials, the best in the world for making window-glass, this manufacture here at home has been for years struggling, meeting with but little success, because the arrangement of our duties has been such as to give employment to the workshops and laborers on the other side of the water rather than here. I desire, sir, that the manufacture of window-glass shall be carried on here with our own material, relieving us from our dependence in this respect upon the foreign manufacture. If there is any article in the world in reference to which it is desirable that our country should be emancipated from dependence on foreign labor it is cheap window-glass. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will not oppose this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. The learned gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has decorated me with such flattering terms that I shall make only a very weak opposition to his amendment. I believe it is more meritorious than the proposition which was made in reference to mold and press glass. But I will say to the gentleman, that since I agreed not to offer any opposition to an increase of duty upon window-glass I have acquired a little additional learning; and that is that the parties who make the mold and press glass say that those who manufacture window-glass do not need any more protection than we have already given them, while the parties who make window-glass say that those who manufacture the mold and press glass do not need any more protection.

Mr. DAWES. I move, pro forma, to amend my amendment by striking out "one quarter" and inserting in lieu thereof "one half." I do this simply to say that the gentleman from Vermont is mistaken, and that if those who have given him his information have attempted to advance their interests by any such statements they are not borne out by the facts. The manufacturers of window-glass are and have been for years struggling to succeed in their business. They have not for years made an annual profit of six per cent. upon their capital, and it is impossible for them to do so under the present tariff. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move further to amend by striking out in the thirty-fifth line the words "one half" and inserting in lieu thereof "three quarters," so that window-glass above ten by fifteen inches square and not exceeding sixteen by twenty-four inches, shall pay a duty of two and three quarter cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move further to amend by striking out in the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh lines the words "three and a half" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "four," so that the duty on window-glass above sixteen by twenty-four inches square, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches, shall be four cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move further to amend by inserting after the word "four," in the thirty-seventh line, the words "and one half," so that window-glass exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square shall pay a duty of four and a half cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend by inserting after the pending paragraph the following:

On all glass vials, jars, bottles, demijohns, carboys, and other vessels under one half pint, except those of flint-glass and otherwise provided for, three and three quarter cents per pound; where over one half pint and under one pint and a half, three and a half cents per pound; and all over a pint and a half, three cents, filled or unfilled.

Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment believing the House will adopt it. It follows the suggestion of my colleague, [Mr.

MOORHEAD,] a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, to make a graduation of duty. I think it about fits the case. It does not come up by any means to the wishes of the glass manufacturers, who say they are not sufficiently protected; and I ask for it the serious consideration of this committee. I have not put these amendments forward in any other than a spirit of good faith. I did not think they would be opposed, much less that the House would refuse tellers after they had been fully discussed. I believe this manufacture is languishing. I have made the amendment to tally, not only with the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but with others acquainted with this manufacture. I hope the House will seriously consider it, and then put it in.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no disposition on the part of the Committee of Ways and Means or myself to consider this question with any disrespect. I thought the gentleman would have ascertained it was not only the opinion of the Committee of Ways and Means but of this House that we have granted all that we ought to grant under this bill. But I admire the persistence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not know anything equal to it unless it be that of the renowned preacher who "played on the harp of a thousand strings, demijohns and spirits of just men made perfect." [Laughter.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 40.

Mr. MYERS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. O'NEILL were appointed.

Mr. MYERS. The joke of the gentleman from Vermont was so good and so new, and the majority against me seems to be so great, that I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cylinder and crown glass, polished, not exceeding ten by fifteen inches square, three and a half cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding sixteen by twenty-four inches square, five and a half cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, eight cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, eight cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, eight cents per square foot; all above that, fifty cents per square foot.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On fluted, rolled, or rough plate-glass, not including crown, cylinder, or common window glass, not exceeding ten by fifteen inches square, $1 25 per hundred square feet; above that, and not exceeding sixteen by twenty-four inches square, one and a half cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, two cents per square foot; all above that, two and a half cents per square foot; Provided, That all fluted, rolled, or rough plate-glass, weighing over one hundred pounds per one hundred square feet, shall pay an additional duty on the excess at the same rates herein imposed.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On all cast polished plate-glass, unsilvered, not exceeding ten by fifteen inches square, four cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding sixteen by twenty-four inches square, six cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, ten cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, thirty cents per square foot; all above that, fifty cents per square foot.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On all cast polished plate-glass, silvered, or looking-glass plates not exceeding ten by fifteen inches square, five cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding sixteen by twenty-four inches square, seven and a half cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, twelve cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, forty cents per square foot; Provided, That no looking-glass plates or plate-glass, silvered, when framed, shall pay a less rate of duty than that imposed upon similar glass of like description not framed, but shall be liable to pay, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem upon such frames.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On porcelain and Bohemian glass, paintings on glass or glasses, and all manufactures of glass, or of which glass shall be a component material of chief value, not otherwise provided for, and all glass bottles or jars filled with sweetmeats or preserves, not otherwise provided for, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on clay, unwrought or ground or prepared, seven dollars per ton.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I move to insert "on firebricks, thirty per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. MORRILL. I do not object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On books and engravings, being editions printed not less than thirty years prior to the date of importation, and on books wholly in foreign languages, printed not less than fifteen years prior to the date of importation, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to add the following:

Provided, If the same shall be imported in quantities of more than five copies in any one invoice they shall, if written wholly or partly in the English language, be liable to a duty of thirty cents per pound weight, and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On all stereotyped or electrotyped plates of books and casts of wood-cuts, a duty of twenty cents per pound weight, and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he modify his amendment by striking out the word "thirty" where it first occurs, and inserting "twenty;" so as to make the duty twenty cents per pound weight.

Mr. KELLEY. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. KELLEY'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to strike out from line six to line ten inclusive, namely, "on books and engravings, being editions printed not less than thirty years prior to the date of importation, and on books wholly in foreign languages, printed not less than fifteen years prior to the date of importation, twenty per cent. ad valorem;" including also what has just been adopted on motion of the member from Pennsylvania, and to insert in lieu thereof "on books wholly in foreign languages, and on agricultural and scientific reports and periodicals, not being American reprints, ten per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. Chairman, the books referred to here in the first part of this paragraph are old books, the classics, English and others, which are used mainly by the scholars of the country. They are not very generally used, but are used simply by those who devote themselves exclusively to the study of such works; and there seems to be no good reason why these rare old books should have a high tax laid upon them, for the individuals who desire them and do use them are generally too poor to pay the high price which will be required if this paragraph should go into operation as a law.

The second clause referring to books printed wholly in foreign languages relates mainly to German, Italian, and French books. Nine tenths of all these books are used in our academies and colleges by poor boys who are struggling against poverty to get an education. There is no reason why this class of our population should be oppressed by this heavy tax. Moreover, if the object of the bill is to secure revenue, you will secure a much larger amount of revenue by putting the tax at ten per cent. than by putting it at twenty per cent. If your object is to protect American publishers, those publishers will not publish a large class of the books referred to in this paragraph if you protect them, because they are used only by a few scholars, and there would not be a sufficient number sold in the country to make it profitable to republish them, even with the protection of twenty per cent.

Sir, this class of publishers do not need this protection. They have never, at any past period in our country's history, made as much as they have made during the year ending January 1, 1866. They do not, therefore, need protection, and as a matter of revenue, as I said before, it would be far better to levy a tax of ten per cent. than of twenty per cent.

What reason is there for shutting out this class of books—rare books, that contain the skill, the learning, and the ripest results of the thoughts of the scholars of Europe, who have been laboring for a lifetime to put those thoughts and facts into circulation throughout the world? What we want in this country is to avail ourselves of the learning and skill of Europe, and make them practical by applying them to the business affairs of life. During the last two or three years, or during the war, the prices of good old books have been so high that the scholars of the country have not been able to avail themselves of the advantage they formerly derived by procuring these European books. If this tariff as it now stands goes into operation it will deprive them of that privilege of which they were deprived during the war. I can see no reason why the rate should not be reduced to ten per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire will not be adopted. The gentleman is slightly mistaken in relation to this matter. The fact is that our publishers can now send abroad and have their books printed and brought back, paying the existing duties, cheaper than they can print them here at home. Sir, I do not, for one, desire to reach the object which the gentleman seems to have in view. I do not desire that the students and scholars of this country should have for their text-books those which are printed abroad. Let them be both edited and printed here. Let such authors as Professor Crosby and Professor Anthon get up their classical text-books and find a sale for them here. Our authors need to be taken care of quite as much as our publishers. The duty we propose to put upon these books in foreign languages is merely nominal, twenty per cent. on the valuation—not half what we place on other books. The cost of paper abroad is less than one half what it is here; the cost of setting type is very much less there than here. If the gentleman desires to reach his object, and will move to reduce the number of years that these books shall have been printed, in order to admit them at lower rates, I would offer no objection. But if we should adopt this amendment we could never expect hereafter that these books would be printed at all by American publishers. Why, sir, I have seen copies of even so insignificant a publication as the common Webster Spelling-Book which had been printed abroad with an American publisher's name upon them; and they are brought over here by millions and offered for sale. The gentleman does not sweeten it at all by putting in some reference to agriculture. I think the House are not going to have our distinguished and learned Commissioner of Agriculture dwarfed by the introduction of European agricultural publications. [Great laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word. I should be very sorry indeed to deprive the distinguished friend of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, the Commissioner of Agriculture, of any of his special privileges; and it is for that very reason, among others, that I have offered this amendment, that that distinguished and learned man may avail himself of European productions in agriculture in developing those of his own country. And I will say, furthermore, that such scholars as Professor Crosby, to whom the gentleman has referred, are the very men who desire an amendment of this kind. For those scholars who publish classical works in this country need and must have these works that come from Europe for investigation and for reference, and then they can reproduce those works in a different form in this country. But I would say to the gentleman from Vermont that many works will never be republished in this country under any circumstances, not even under this bill. They are not published here and will not be, because the number sold in this country would be so small that it would not pay any publishing house here to print them. So that if obtained here at all they must be obtained from abroad. If this be so, why should we require the scholar, who is almost always a poor man, to pay these enormous prices for these books?

Sir, it seems to me that our first and true policy is to protect the intelligence of the people rather than a few fat book publishers in Boston and New York. They are already enriched, and are daily becoming more so, by their publications, under the tariff as it already exists. Why should we give them superior advantages? We had better protect the boys of the country, who are to be the practical men hereafter, the boys who are to be the future lawyers and legislators of the country, now when they are seeking to fit themselves for those duties. This seems to me to be our true policy rather than to protect a few publishing houses in Boston and New York which are sufficiently protected already.

Mr. KELLEY. I want to say to the gentleman from New Hampshire that the book publishers of Boston and New York are not making fortunes at this time, and I want to add to that that those who are making money are doing it by printing in England and in Belgium, from the stereotyped plates made in this country and from which they used to print American editions, English and Belgian editions. The publishing houses of all our cities have had to remove their stereotype plates to England and to the Continent, by reason of the difference in cost between English and Belgian and American paper, and also by reason of the difference in the cost of the material used in book-binding. If the gentleman wishes to declare that no book of value shall be published in America, I advise him to open these little doors, through which a great storm may blow. The very object of the amendment which I proposed to this section and which was adopted, while it allowed old editions to come in for scholars, was to prohibit the opening of a door through which foreign publishers could antedate a book on its title-page, and introduce it at a low rate of duty. It gives scholars the opportunity of importing five copies of a book at a merely nominal duty, not equal to eight per cent. upon American prices.

Now, if you want to open the door so that immense editions from your own American stereotype plates will be forced to be printed with false dates upon them, then adopt such a provision as the gentleman proposes to accommodate college professors and the future lawyers of the country. You will then have, not only your Blackstones printed abroad, but also your Kents, your Chittys, and your current Decisions of the Supreme Court, for we will be unable to print any such book in America.

Mr. PATTERSON. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I listened with much attention to the argument of the learned gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. PATTERSON.] But I think he was mistaken in the point to which he was directing his remarks, if by the alteration which he proposes in this paragraph he seeks to benefit the poor boys and poor men in our schools. Perhaps, if he wishes to accomplish that object, it will be necessary for him to exempt from the rate of duty which he proposes those books in foreign languages which have been reprinted in this country, which have been familiarized to us, upon which American scholars have expended their time and attention, in the production of which American capitalists have expended their money, and which are already widely diffused throughout the length and breadth of the country in our educational institutions.

It seems to me that the argument which he makes in favor of the general importation at a low rate of duty of books printed wholly in foreign tongues falls to the ground when I remind him of what he himself very well knows, that of most of the editions of classics used in our academies and colleges, there are American reprints which, to say the least, are fully equal to those published abroad. The gentleman shakes his head in answer to that statement. Well, sir, he is a classical scholar; he is a professor, I believe, in one of our most celbrated colleges, and I little supposed that from that source would come a contradiction which involves so grave a reflection upon the scholarship of our American authors as his suggestion presupposes. I supposed there was no gentleman in this House who would for a moment hold out the idea or the plea that with the labors of the English scholars to base their operations upon, our American scholars would take their books and in revising them make them poorer than they were before they touched them. And yet I do not see but that is the inevitable conclusion to which we must arrive, if the suggestion of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. PATTERSON] be true.

Now, in regard to other classes of books printed wholly in foreign languages, I want to say, in reply to the earnest and pathetic appeal of the learned gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. PATTERSON] in behalf of poor scholars, that they are not the class of men who import these expensive editions of foreign classics. Those books are as much articles of luxury as jewelry, plate, or pictures, or anything else that is an acknowledged article of luxury. You do not find those books in the libraries of poor scholars. Scholars seeking access to those books generally find them in libraries attached to the schools and the institutions with which they are connected, or in neighboring colleges. You do not and you cannot find those books in the libraries of poor scholars. I can tell you where you will find them. You will find them in the libraries of wealthy people, people who adorn their libraries with these costly and expensive and luxurious editions, and who adorn their parlors with works of art, with paintings and statuary. I do not know, sir, of any articles upon which a duty can be more appropriately levied than these articles of luxury; and if I were speaking in behalf of poor scholars or poor men generally, I would say, "Put the duty upon these articles of luxury and taste, in order that we may lighten the burden upon articles which are necessary to the poorer classes." I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew the amendment in order that I may say a few words. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the provisions of the bill as amended on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] It is proposed to treat these publications with favor. It is not proposed to impose upon them anything more than a small ad valorem duty. The only amendment to which I should be willing to consent is to reduce the time from fifteen years to about ten years.

I may remark, Mr. Chairman, that I have seen magazines which have been printed abroad expressly for American circulation. They are gotten up and sent here at one dollar per copy per annum, while they could not be printed and published in this country at less than two or three dollars per copy. Besides that, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the amendment, even if it should be adopted, is wholly impracticable. How can you define the line which shall distinguish scientific publications from those which are not scientific? I affirm that in many cases it will be impossible to draw the line of distinction. The London Times, for instance, may announce itself as a periodical "devoted to literature, science, and politics." A book of travels may have a chapter on the geology of the country—will not that be a scientific work? Nearly all the foreign reviews, as well as the London Punch, are devoted to literature, politics, arts, and science. Yet these are not such publications as the gentleman designs to cover by his amendment. I trust that we shall allow the provisions of the bill to stand in its present form. For the purpose of closing debate, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate in relation to books terminate in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 191) to amend an act making a grant of lands to the State of Minnesota, to aid in the construction of the railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior, approved May 5, 1864; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 149) declaratory of the law of bounty.

RECESS.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If the House should adjourn now it would have the effect to dispense with the evening session.

Mr. THAYER. Then I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The House can, by unanimous consent, take a recess now till this evening.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move, then, that by unanimous consent the House now take a recess. Only five minutes of the afternoon session remain.

There being no objection, the motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to; and the House (at twenty-five minutes after four o'clock p. m.) took a recess till half past seven.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. PATTERSON.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not propose to say much upon this subject. I have here a letter which I shall presently ask to have read. But before doing so I wish to refer to a single remark made this afternoon by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The gentleman says certain books have been taken from America to be published in England and brought back for a dollar which cost three dollars here. I am glad to hear that, sir. It is only decreasing the cost of literature in this country of general intelligence. It seems to me it should be our policy to make these books as free as possible, so that every child in the land may have access to them, whereby to fit it for usefulness in the future. We want skilled labor. We want that ingenuity which only comes by mental discipline. We want that comprehension of mind which can only come by having, with skilled intelligence, the discoveries brought out in Europe and published in books which come from there. It seems to me, while we should look to the great industrial interests of the country, we should especially look to the intelligence of the country. I am told by a friend it will throw many females out of employment if we do not protect the publishing interest in this country. It will throw a great many children out of the schools if we do not protect them in cheap books, if we do not furnish them with books which they cannot obtain in any publishing house here. I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send up, as it states the case clearly.

The Clerk read as follows:

I want to present to you a few considerations regarding the proposed tariff on books.

The house of which I am a member holds the American agency for the Tauchnitz collection of British authors, and does a general importing business in the class of books used by scholars in special subjects, and not generally found in the American market. While gold averaged about two hundred these branches of business stopped. The importation of all articles of necessity and of those articles of luxury which appealed to people's vanities and physical appetites went on as vigorously as ever. This proves that, partly from the proverbial poverty of scholars and partly from the subordinate interest bestowed upon books by those who are not scholars, books cannot be imported at the same cost that most other articles can. Even with the present premium on gold and the present tariff, we are constantly receiving letters from eminent men—the fountains of the country's knowledge—saying, "We want to do so and so when gold comes down or when the tariff is removed." If the proposed tariff goes into effect it will produce the same results regarding books as the very high premiums on gold did during the war. The people who now use them cannot or will not afford to buy foreign books; that source of knowledge will be shut off, and the Government will be deprived of what revenue it now has from it.

To this objection, say, the tariff is intended to protect our own book-makers, and we can supply the demand at home. To this there are three answers: 1. Our book-makers do not need protection. 2. They would have no right to this kind of protection if they did. 3. If they were to get it they could not supply the demand.

1. Our book-makers do not need protection. My business is about equally divided between publishing and importing, therefore I know what I speak of when I say that the book-makers of the United States never had another year so prosperous as the one closing January 1, 1866. Printing offices and binderies were so crowded that it was almost impossible to get work done, and the rates charged were enormous. Of course these rates were profitable, for the demand was so great that almost any price could be commanded. In my whole acquaintance, I have never heard it alleged that book-making here is not justly profitable. It is said that foreign houses can compete, and therefore this tariff is sought by men who, not claiming that their gains are too small, yet wish to increase them by shutting off competition. Now, on examining the nature of this competition, I think you will recognize the truth of my second assertion, that

2. The American book-makers would have no right to the kind of protection they seek, even if they needed it. You know that it is one of our national disgraces that we have never followed the example of other civilized nations and made an international copyright law. This disgrace rests upon us because of the wealth and influence of certain reprinters of foreign books. With the American books thus printed, foreign books come into competition, and with them alone, as our own copyright law protects all others against the importation of rival editions. Now it is, from the nature of the case, only against the original edition of books reprinted here that our publishers can want protection. In other words, some of the publishers have to this day succeeded in making our law say to them, "You may steal as you will without being interfered with," and now they want through this tariff to make the law say, "Moreover I will secure for your stolen goods the monopoly of the market."

3. If the American publishers were to succeed in shutting out foreign books, as this tariff would, they would be unable to supply the demand by home manufactures. The demand is so small for many foreign books, and those many of the most important, that it would never pay to issue a special edition here. As you are aware, the main expense of book-making is in setting up the type and cutting the illustrations. After this is done copies can be produced cheaply. Now, for the most important scientific works in all departments, the demand is generally great enough throughout the whole world to pay this original expense once. In the United States the demand is in proportion to our youth, and we use rather less than our share according to numerical standards of population. That these books should be reproduced here is simply out of the question. Our house is agent for Trübner of London, and we are constantly importing books, from one to a dozen copies of each, for men who really shape the thought of the country. When gold was about twenty-five, the scholars who had been so long deprived of these books began to make a rush for them. Now with gold at fifty they resign themselves to wait. If the proposed tariff passes, they will have to wait for wiser legislation. As a publisher, I would think it a better business speculation to throw money away than to attempt to reproduce these books, for in the latter case I would have labor added to loss. It is not for scientific and rare books alone, however, that the tariff is to be avoided. You know the publications of Bohn, of London, which are really the basis of most of the good private libraries of the country. I select them as an example. Do you realize that the proposed tariff will increase the price of those books to the retail buyer, about sixty cents in gold? The same can be said of the ordinary library editions of French and German literature. The idea of producing Bohn's series, or anything like it, here, is as chimerical as the idea of reproducing the books in foreign languages.

Very respectfully, yours,

HENRY HOLT.

Hon. WILLIAM E. DODGE.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] will reply to the gentleman.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make an amendment to the section proposed to be stricken out. I move to strike out these words, "printed not less than fifteen years prior to the date of importation;" so it will read:

On books and engravings, being editions printed not less than thirty years prior to the date of importation, and on books wholly in foreign languages, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

I mean, by striking out those words, to limit the operation of the paragraph so that we can buy books in foreign languages, no matter whether they have been published fifteen years or one year. The chairman has already indicated a willingness to have the period fifteen years reduced to five, but I am unable to see the necessity or justice of making a restriction of that sort at all. I am willing to agree with my associates on the committee, that we ought to protect our book publishers from having our own books taken abroad and shipped back into the country at cheaper rates to come into competition with our own publishers who have invested money in the business. But I do not see the justice of forbidding the importation of books in foreign languages when we will have to buy them anyway, and pay a heavy duty on them just as much after fifteen years as before. Every day important books come out in German, French, and Italian, which every college in this country wants to get as soon as possible, and they must pay enormous prices for them until they are fifteen years old; while a very large number of that class of books—I might say almost all—are never reprinted in this country in the language in which they are originally printed; only here and there a book like Napoleon's Cæsar and some of Victor Hugo's works. It is very rare, indeed, that a book published in a foreign language is republished in the same language in this country. Now, let us allow these books, coming out from year to year, that are of importance to us, to come into this country on the terms mentioned here, namely, twenty per cent. ad valorem. I would say, further, that the feature of charging by the pound on books has been commented on rather severely, and I think rather unjustly. I received a very able letter a few days since from Dr. Lieber, which I will append to my remarks. He puts the question why we should charge books by the pound, and says we may as well base representation upon the weight of voters. It seems to me, however, that the objection is not good in this respect: in books there is an element that is purely a matter of business; namely, the paper. Paper is valued by its weight, and it seems to me entirely proper that we should charge the paper part of books a duty by the pound, but when we come to charge on the book itself as a book then it seems to me the ad valorem principle should come in. There are so many valuable suggestions in this letter of Dr. Lieber, especially bearing upon the amendment I have offered, I shall ask to have it go into the Globe and not trouble the House by having it read. Let it go as a part of my remarks. I hope the amendment I have offered will be consented to by the chairman of the committee.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2, 1866.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been drawn, only today, to the passage in the new tariff bill which relates to the importation of books, and as it contains, in my opinion, grave inconsistencies, you will excuse me if I hasten to point them out to you when there may yet be time to propose some changes.

The passage I have alluded to is on pages 11 and 12 of the printed bill, and reads thus:

"On books and engravings, being editions printed not less than thirty years prior to the date of importation, and on books wholly in foreign languages, printed not less than fifteen years prior to the date of importation, twenty per cent. ad valorem; on all books reprinted from books first printed in the United States, thirty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem; on all books not herein provided for, and on pamphlets, magazines, illustrated newspapers, periodicals, and printed papers, bound or unbound, twenty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, that nothing herein shall be held to include newspapers or other printed matter lawfully transmitted by mail."

The law as it now stands imposes twenty-five per cent. ad valorem on all imported books, a duty which, with freight, exchange, and the high price of gold, makes it nearly impossible for all those persons who stand in real need of foreign books, as well as of American productions, to obtain them for their libraries. American publishers urge that books can now be produced so much cheaper in England than in America, that they stand in need of protection. But is not the advantage which they derive from reprinting English books without paying anything for the copyright very great? So much seems certain, that if Congress adopts this provision of the bill, very few English books will be imported except as an article of luxury for those who possess more wealth than scholars usually do, and who want books chiefly for elegantly carved shelves.

So this as it may, why is it proposed in the second paragraph to add to the ad valorem duty another and very heavy one on the weight of foreign books? In what relation does the weight of a book stand to its value? To charge duty according to the weight of books seems to me very much like making the average weight of voters the basis of representation. At a round calculation the two duties together would amount to something like eighty-five per cent., which, with the additional expenses already mentioned, would effect very nearly practical exclusion. As to "books in foreign languages," the proposed tariff would work positive exclusion for all the real laborers in the vineyard of knowledge. Even as the tariff stands now, with the adventitious circumstances of the price of gold and high exchange, the whole country must in a great many cases forego the advantage of having presented to it the results of the laborious and life-long study of foreign scholars, because we cannot afford paying for their treasure-books. I do not exaggerate; I am speaking plain and painful truth. The bill has the heading, "A bill to provide increased revenue from imports," but if Congress adopts the provision regarding books, the revenue will be decreased, and materially decreased, so far as books are concerned.

The proposed tariff proposes to impose twenty per cent. ad valorem and twenty-five per cent. by weight on all books in foreign languages printed within fifteen years. Books "printed in foreign languages" means, practically, French, German, and Italian books; but why should Congress furnish the chance of reprinting them in America for fifteen years? With the rare exception of a novel, no one thinks of reprinting in America a German, French, or Italian book, and for this useless chance you are going to exclude the importation of these books for those who need them. Are men of knowledge, the servants of the public, not to be protected in their turn also?

The object of our laws cannot be the Chinese exclusion. Civilization is a church universal; like our religion it is for all; and civilization advances only in that degree in which one generation or one country seizes upon the stock of skill or knowledge acquired by another and infuses it into its own life. All give and all take; and above all other things, books are the bridges over which civilization travels from one country or region to another, and from one generation to another. Whatever is done to impede free exchange of books materially impedes the progress of our kind.

It seems to me that "all books in foreign languages" should be left saddled with twenty per cent., or if needs you must add something, with twenty-five per cent. ad valorem, whether printed within fifteen years or not, and no duty of any kind ought to be added. It is useless and injurious. I have never been able to see why our Legislature should levy any duty at all on old books; say books printed fifty years or more previous to the day of importation. The more books which have stood the test of time we transfer from Europe to America, the better for us, and Congress ought to facilitate the transfer as much as possible. The duty collected on these books is not worth mentioning.

The second paragraph has apparently slipped in by mistake. The importation of reprints of original American books is totally prohibited; no duty, therefore, can be levied on them.

You will kindly excuse, sir, anything in this letter which may be owing to the great haste with which I have been obliged to write it.

With the highest regard, dear sir, your obedient,

FRANCIS LIEBER.

General JAMES A. GARFIELD, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed on the subject of books.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. GARFIELD.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting "five years" in lieu of "fifteen years," so that it will read, "printed not less than five years prior to the date of importation."

Mr. GARFIELD. I accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to amend by striking out "thirty years" and inserting "fifteen years;" so that it will read, "on books and engravings, being editions printed not less than fifteen years prior to the date of importation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to strike out "twenty per cent." and insert "ten per cent." Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will not be adopted.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. PATTERSON to strike out the whole paragraph and insert as follows:

On books wholly in foreign languages, and on agricultural and scientific reports and periodicals, not being American reprints, ten per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all books reprinted from books first printed in the United States, thirty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On all other books not herein provided for, and on pamphlets, magazines, illustrated newspapers, periodicals, and printed papers, bound or unbound, twenty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That nothing herein shall be held to include newspapers or other printed matter lawfully transmitted by mail.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On maps and charts, not otherwise herein provided for, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I move to insert after the word "maps" the words "excepting military maps and charts." That will exclude military charts and plans of battles which will be probably now of immense interest to our people.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On paper-hangings and paper for screens and fire-boards, four cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out that clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

On paper-hangings valued at not over twenty cents per roll, four cents per pound and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. On all other paper-hangings, borders, and papers for fire-screens and fire-boards, four cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment merely makes a discrimination, imposing a higher rate on the more costly paper-hangings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On papers, fancy colored, colored for labels and wrappers, marbled, stained, glazed, or enameled, and card paper, six cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend that clause by inserting after the word "wrappers" the words "for pins and needles."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend the clause by inserting after the word "enameled" the words "Bristol boards."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On salt in sacks, barrels, and other packages, forty-two cents per one hundred pounds; on salt in bulk, thirty cents per one hundred pounds.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to strike out "forty-two," in line six, and to insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four;" and to strike out "thirty," in line seven, and insert "eighteen" in lieu thereof.

Mr. Chairman, as will be readily observed by the committee, this amendment places salt where it was before, and when we consider the importance of this article and its universal use, when we consider the vast demand for it by the pork-packing and beef-packing interests of the West and by the manufacturing interests of New England, where, in consequence of recent discoveries, it enters very largely into these interests, it seems to me that it is a most extraordinary proposition that we should undertake to increase the price of salt in the manner in which the bill, as reported, will do it. In looking at the remarks made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means when the revenue bill was presented, I find this language used by him:

"The bill proposes to wholly exempt from taxation many articles, and to largely reduce it upon others, and among these will be found slaughtered animals, salt, sugar, starch, coal, soap, vinegar, saleratus, clothing, and boots and shoes."

And now here is what he says in this connection:

"These exemptions and reductions will lessen family expenditures and be a relief to all classes of the community."

Now, Mr. Chairman, put these two bills together, and it is a most extraordinary "relief to all classes of the community." Instead of leaving salt where it was, the two bills increase the expense of every barrel of salt to the amount of sixty-six cents per barrel. I am decidedly opposed to helping all the families of the country and the whole community by any such operation as this.

Mr. Chairman, there is another consideration which, it seems to me, must have escaped the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means when he prepared this bill, and increased the present rates of duty upon salt from twenty-four cents to forty-two cents, and from eighteen cents to thirty cents. By the revenue bill, upon which I understand both Houses have now agreed, there has been a reduction of four cents and two mills on each one hundred pounds; more than half the internal tax has been taken off. Now, when you increase the tariff, the consequence is simply this, to enable these parties who are engaged in the manufacture of salt to put into their pockets a large sum of money which is taken from the labor and industry of the country. Every rich man and every poor man when he sits down to a repast uses this article, and I submit that the language of the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, which I have quoted, is exceedingly pertinent in the consideration of this question.

He says "these exemptions and reductions will lessen family expenditures, and be a relief to all classes of the community." Now, I have made a little estimate of the revenue which this bill, in connection with the internal revenue bill, will take from the revenues of the Government. It is estimated that there are five million barrels of salt used in this country in each year, two million four hundred thousand barrels of which is domestic salt. Now, the difference between seven cents and two mills and three cents upon a hundred pounds under the internal revenue bill will make upon that amount the sum of $1,320,000 which the Government will lose, which is taken right away from the Government. Now, I desire to call attention to the salt interest in the State of New York.

Mr. HART. I rise to oppose the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] I am surprised that he should stand here upon this floor and speak against an interest of his own State in which so large an amount of capital is invested. He has made some very extraordinary statements. He says that we propose to increase the tariff on salt to the extent of sixty-six cents per barrel. Even if we should take the figures which he has presented here, it would show an increase of only about fifty cents per barrel. Now the real fact is, that about seventy per cent. of all the salt imported is imported in bulk, while the remaining thirty per cent. is imported in bags. The increase is, therefore, really only about thirty-eight cents per barrel on the average. And there is a great deal of such ad captandum argument here, a great deal of talk about salt being a great necessity of life, that it was wanted by the poor man, and that it enters into the consumption of all classes, and therefore it should be furnished as cheaply as possible.

Now, I do not know any reason why our manufactures of cotton, of woolen fabrics, or any other articles of similar character, should be protected more than the manufacture of salt. The fact is that it is estimated that the per capita consumption of salt in the United States is, estimated to be about forty-two pounds a year. And the increased cost to each individual of the proposed increase of duty would be the petty-sum of six cents; that is all that it will amount to. In the present condition of the salt manufacture in the United States it is absolutely impossible to produce salt at a profit at present prices. Formerly we could get labor at ten shillings per day; now we have to pay $2 50 per day. Wood we used to get at ten and fourteen shillings and two dollars per cord, and now it is $3 50 per cord. We could formerly purchase barrels at from eighteen to twenty cents each; now they cost from forty to forty-five cents each.

Salt is now manufactured at a cost of $2 10 a barrel in the city of Syracuse. It was sold last year in Chicago at $2 25 per barrel, leaving but about fifteen cents to pay expense of transportation, &c. Now, it is impossible for our salt manufacturers to compete with the salt manufacturers of Great Britain. There they have labor far cheaper than we have; they have coal at one dollar a ton, while in this country coal is anywhere from eight dollars to fifteen dollars a ton. Salt can be brought over here at a merely nominal freight. And very many of those bags and packages in which the salt is brought over are sold at a profit on the cost abroad; thus reducing in many instances the entire duty on salt.

Now, unless some relief, such as is presented in this bill is afforded, the salt interest in this country must suspend entirely. The Committee of Ways and Means have not given as much duty on salt as has been asked for by the salt manufacturers. It was thought that the least rates that would be satisfactory were thirty-six and fifty. But the committee have thought proper to report the figures contained in this bill, and the manufacturers have agreed to acquiesce in that report. I trust that no member of this House who pretends to be a protectionist, who pretends to be in favor of protecting the necessities of life, I do not care what they are, that are manufactured in this country, will vote for the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. HUMPHREY.]

Mr. DRIGGS. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the rates fifty cents and thirty-six cents. Unlike my friend from the Buffalo district of the State of New York, [Mr. HUMPHREY,] I can say that the delegates from my State are unanimous in support of the tariff as reported by the bill. Now, they do not live in my district, where the salt of our State is produced, any more than the gentleman from Buffalo lives at Syracuse where the salt of New York is produced.

Mr. Chairman, the States of New York, Michigan, West Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania are all interested in favor of the duty agreed upon by the Committee of Ways and Means on salt, especially the three first named, in which perhaps two thirds of all the salt produced in the United States is manufactured. Saginaw, in my district in the State of Michigan, can produce, when relieved from ruinous foreign competition, five thousand barrels per day, and yet the average production within the last year has not been one thousand, most of the works being closed for the very good reason that foreign salt costing only ten to twelve cents per bushel at Liverpool is brought out in ballast and landed here at a cost of less than one dollar per barrel, while to produce it here, including the internal revenue tax direct and indirect, it costs about two dollars per barrel.

Thus it will be seen that the foreign article can be sold for two shillings per barrel less than the domestic and yet make a profit of seventy-five per cent.; while the domestic producer to sell at that price would be losing two shillings per barrel, which many of them have been doing to keep their works running, in anticipation that Congress would give them at least a partial protection which the duty recommended by the committee will only afford. Early in the session the members from the States named above met the representatives from the various salt interests of the country in this city, and after a full discussion of the subject at several meetings, in view of the consideration that salt being a necessity of life should be secured to the consumer at as low a figure as justice to the producer would permit, they agreed to and did, through a committee, present to the Committee of Ways and Means, and recommended that the duty be fixed at thirty-six cents in bulk, fifty cents in bags and barrels, in lieu of which the committee have reported only in favor of thirty cents in bulk and forty-two cents in bags and barrels. Now it is proposed by the amendment to reduce it still lower, which if done will be a great injustice and ruinous to the salt producers of the country.

At Saginaw there is a capital of over two millions invested in this interest, and I am confident to reduce it below the amount fixed by the committee would be to close the works now in operation. The present tariff is eighteen and twenty-four cents, and the increase asked for, considering the amount consumed per annum in the United States, when divided among all the inhabitants, would not amount to over five cents per head. Nor would it in all probability increase the salt per barrel over twenty-five cents. Mr. Chairman, as the Representative of an interest in which my constituents are so largely and directly interested, I had thought it my duty to ask the House to increase the duty to thirty-six and fifty cents, but believing the Committee of Ways and Means have intended to act justly under all the circumstances I shall submit to its decision, and appeal to the House to act justly also; to vote down the amendment and sustain the committee.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. DRIGGS.] I do not know that it is possible to effect any reduction of the duties levied upon any article in this bill; but it seems to me that if the bill contains one item on which the duties are fixed at too high a rate, it is this article of salt. Salt, as we all know, enters into the consumption of every family in the land. Now, sir, whatever may be said in other cases in respect to the effect of the duty upon the price of the article, it is clear that the cost of salt to my constituents will be increased precisely to the amount of this duty. Here is a proposition to increase the duty on salt from eighteen to forty-two cents per one hundred pounds. Now, sir, my constituents in the State of Missouri are obliged to use foreign salt; and this increase of duty is equivalent to a tax of one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty per cent. on the article. It must be obvious how seriously this must affect the great packing interest of the West.

The gentleman from Michigan spoke of the salt-works in his own State. But, sir, who does not know that the extent of country that can be supplied by those works is necessarily quite limited? The salt they manufacture never can, to any considerable extent, compete in the State of Missouri with foreign salt. With respect to this article of salt as well as many other articles, this bill increases the duty with no corresponding benefit to us, with the exception, perhaps, of the small increase of the duty on wool, which is very trifling.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me a moment, I desire to say—as I may not have another opportunity—that this is a question upon which I differ with the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, and where I reserved the right to vote for the lower rates. I am willing to vote for any reasonable and moderate reduction of the duty proposed on this article.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am very glad to learn that fact.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I find, Mr. Chairman, in looking at the census of 1860 that nearly two thirds of all the salt consumed in the United States is imported from foreign countries. Perhaps the manufacture and consumption of the domestic product has increased somewhat since 1860, but certainly not to any large extent; and we may safely calculate, I think, that in the future two thirds of all the salt consumed in the United States must be imported from abroad.

Mr. DRIGGS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I renew it. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have not been at all surprised at the remarks of my honorable colleague from the Buffalo district, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] He opposes this increased duty on salt not because the interest is not one intrinsically entitled to the fair and just consideration of this House, but because he is opposed to all protection. That is his doctrine. He opposes the whole bill in every form, feature, and principle; and he will vote against it, no matter what may be said by its friends or its enemies. Now, sir, the honorable gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] is mistaken in his statement with reference to the consumption of foreign salt in the United States. Formerly two thirds of all the salt used in this country was the production of our own citizens.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to ask the gentleman whence he gets his figures.

Mr. DAVIS. From the returns of imported salt.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have here the census returns of 1860, and I do not find them to agree with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. DAVIS. I have the returns from the Department. If the gentleman will refer to the census of 1860 he will find that we manufactured in that year about fourteen million bushels of salt and imported about the same quantity. But large quantities of salt manufactured at that time in the country were not represented at all in the returns. The salt in the Pomeroy district was not returned. The salt of California was not returned. The salt of many places was not returned. The question we have to settle by this Congress is one which appeals to the justice and conscience of the country; and that is, how we are to divide labor between mechanics and agriculture so as to make both remunerative. That is the question we have to meet. It is the solemn duty of the American Congress to see whether the industry of the American people, whether the agriculture of America, whether all of our interests cannot be fairly protected. I am not in favor of a prohibitive tariff, but I want liberal and fair protection. When I remember the fact that upon the salt produced in my own district one hundred and twenty-five thousand persons all over the country are dependent, directly or indirectly; when I remember that the miner of Pennsylvania is employed in procuring the coal with which salt is manufactured; when I remember all the interests concerned, directly or indirectly, of transportation, &c., I ask from Congress action, and favorable action. Without just protection the manufacture in this country may cease. It has been said the salt manufacture has been profitable. The gentleman from New York made that representation. When this war broke out our salt went down the Mississippi to Memphis, and to New Orleans when we captured that place.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I want to correct a statement.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I will do that. Mr. Chairman, there has not been a single proposition to increase the tariff on any article presented to this committee but has been urged on the ground that unless it was adopted the business would stop. Now, I want to read for the benefit of this House in relation to this subject of salt from the report of the superintendent of the Syracuse salt-works, which furnish more than two thirds of the salt manufactured in this country. I want the committee to listen to that report and say whether they put it upon the ground that foreign salt has interfered with them as a reason why they want protection or claim they ought to have any protection. This is a report published a year ago, and signed by the superintendent of the salt-works, a gentleman whom I saw around this House and the Committee of Ways and Means for two months during this session. This is what he says, speaking of the increase in the manufacture of salt:

"Still the rate of increase is not commensurate with the anticipations of former periods, or with the increase of population in the country. This is doubtless to be attributed largely to the competition met with in the markets of the West, from the salt manufactured in Michigan, where extensive manufactures have sprung into existence within three years. The quantity of Onondaga salt received at Chicago last year was about three hundred and thirty-two thousand barrels, while that of Michigan was three hundred and forty-four thousand. Thus Onondaga salt has been replaced by Michigan to the extent of one million seven hundred thousand bushels in one lake port alone, to which is to be added what the Michigan manufacturers have supplied to Cleveland, Toledo, and Detroit, large entrepôts for salt."

"But while anticipations of a large extension of the manufacture have been disappointed, it is well to reflect that the money value of the products of the salt-works have been greatly augmented. A business that but a few years ago was comprised within the compass of a million and a half of dollars, has grown to one of four or five millions."

That does not look very much as though these companies were getting poor. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to another fact which shows beyond a peradventure that this pretense that the salt interest is suffering, in order to saddle upon the people of this country sixty-six cents a barrel, is merely for the purpose of putting the money into their own pockets. In 1860 there were only four thousand barrels of salt made at Saginaw. The amount has increased gradually until 1865, when, instead of the salt-works being shut up, as the gentleman says, the inspector returns eight hundred and nineteen thousand barrels of salt at Saginaw; and that is the only competition which the Syracuse salt-works have.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw it.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] in order to say a word or two in explanation of what appear to be facts stated by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] Nothing better demonstrates the importance of protection as protection than the very facts he has disclosed here.

As I have had occasion to say before since this bill came under discussion, our manufactures and arts have been living independent of all question of tariff whether it be protective or free trade. The difference between gold and currency, and the fact that duties were paid in gold, has been the protection, and under that protection the salt interest of Michigan made the marvelous progress that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] has indicated. But when our currency came to be within twenty-five or thirty cents of gold, the salt factories of the Northwest closed with the iron factories of Pennsylvania and the woolen and cotton factories of the country. Give us now a tariff, not that shall be protective, in any generous sense, but that shall countervail the influence of the internal revenue taxes imposed on our industry by the war, and we will soon produce salt enough to supply the country.

It is not hoped that either West Virginia or Michigan will supply New England. The rates fixed in the bill—and those are the rates which I hope the House will adhere to, for the committee seems to have given that subject consideration—the rates fixed in the bill will admit quite as much salt into New England and into all our coast ports, in proportion to any enlarged demand that may grow, as the existing rates will. The only difference will be that the Government will derive something more of revenue; and with a generous western market, and with the border States restored, and the coal and iron regions of West Virginia and southern Ohio in full blast, Michigan, New York, and West Virginia will give us as good salt as we have ever had, and cheaper than the American people have heretofore been accustomed to.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise in order to terminate debate upon the subject of salt.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I hope this will be discussed more fully.

Mr. MORRILL. I will allow ten or fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the subject of salt shall close in fifteen minutes after the committee resumes the consideration of the same.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend by inserting "ten minutes."

Mr. ALLEY. I move to amend the amendment by making it "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to; and the motion, as amended, was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Chairman, I have been struck with the appropriateness of some of the observations which have fallen from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] in reference to the subject now under consideration. I happen to know, because some of my constituents are interested in the subject now before the committee, that during the early part of the war the salt interest, by reason of the price of gold, was so protected that it flourished in the district that he has alluded to, the portion of the Kanawha valley that lies in Ohio; and I happen to know, also, that during the last year that interest has not been sustained, and the manufacture of salt has in a great measure diminished. Now, what are we about to do? How are we proceeding in the business of protection? What are the principles that are to guide us? I am not one of those who favor a tariff for prohibition nor a tariff for protection merely. Necessity forces upon us a tariff for revenue; and duty requires that it should be so adjusted as to afford proper, reasonable, and as equal protection as we can arrive at.

When the interests of New England are presented to us, and we are told that those interests will be stricken down without a duty that furnishes protection, we tax the consumers of New England goods to the extent we consider our duty. We have voted protection to those who make books. We have levied a tax upon intelligence. We have done it upon the principle that the necessities of revenue require us to impose a tariff, and that, therefore, we should impose it with reference to judicious protection. Now, this great interest of salt is not one that affects the poor merely. I tell the members of this committee that it is not the poor alone that are interested in salt. The bulk of the salt in the country is consumed by the farmers in independent and moderate circumstances, who use it for their stock, and those engaged in preserving meat. The great bulk is thus used, and it is idle to attempt to enforce on us the idea that the poor man merely is interested in this article of salt. There are various interests throughout the country and in various parts of the country interested in the production of salt, and unless some protection, just protection, is afforded them, these interests must not only languish, but be destroyed. While, therefore, we are protecting other interests, I trust the good sense and judgment of the House will protect this interest also.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I desire to call the attention of the committee to some of the facts made known by the gentleman from the Buffalo district [Mr. HUMPHREY] upon whose proposition I suppose the test vote in the committee will be had. His proposition is to reduce the tariff on salt to the exact figures at which it stood before the war and under the old tariff. Now, I ask the committee to recollect the vast difference there is in the values of everything used by manufacturers and by those who furnish them with their supplies. Why, sir, in the region where salt is manufactured in Michigan wood could then be purchased at seventy-five cents a cord, and it now costs between three and four dollars per cord. Labor was then a dollar and a dollar and a quarter a day. Now it is two and two dollars and a quarter a day. I claim then that there would be no possible justice in compelling them to compete with the foreign salt manufacturers under the old tariff while they are compelled to pay these enhanced prices for everything they use and consume in manufacturing salt.

I desire also to call the attention of the committee to another fact stated by the gentleman, and stated very nearly correctly, and that is that less than half the salt consumed in the United States is produced in the United States. I assert what my colleague [Mr. DRIGGS] has asserted, that so far as Michigan is concerned, unless our salt manufacturers can have this protection, they will certainly be compelled to suspend, as more than half of them have already suspended. More than half of the works on the Saginaw river are idle to-day because they cannot produce salt for what they can get for it. And thus the entire production of that region, amounting to over eight hundred thousand dollars, will be driven out of the market. I cannot speak for the salt workers; they may, possibly, produce as much as they did before; but, sir, we are not producing in the United States half the salt we consume, and we are dependent on foreign countries for the remainder.

Now, I ask if this article, which the gentleman has represented as so necessary to everybody, which enters into the consumption of the whole community, can be left to be supplied to us by foreign manufacturers. I ask, if as legislators for the United States we should not secure the domestic manufacture of this article against the contingencies of foreign difficulties and troubles. It seems to me that no wiser course can be pursued by this Congress than to secure to ourselves as far as possible the manufacture of this article of necessity. We possess capacity to supply the entire United States if we can only get a reasonable price for it. And it seems to me that so far as we can we should protect those who are producing this great article of necessity for our people. I desire also to call attention to the statement of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUMPHREY], that we propose to increase the duty on salt sixty-six cents per barrel. Now, he is too clear-headed a man to believe that himself. By far the greater portion of the salt that comes into this country comes in under the eighteen cent tariff now, and by this bill it is only made thirty-two cents. So that the increased duty on salt will be only about thirty-five cents per barrel. Now, it is not fair to mislead the committee by the statement that the duty is to be increased sixty-six cents per barrel. And further, although this article is so necessary for the consumption of the country, the amount consumed per capita is calculated to be only about forty-two pounds annually, and therefore the increase will be but little to each person.

Mr. PIKE. It seems to me it is well enough to be reasonable about this matter. This session we have reduced the internal revenue duty on salt four cents and two mills per hundred pounds. It was seven cents and two mills last year; it is now three cents per hundred pounds. Now, I suppose in consequence of that reduction, it is a necessity to have an additional protection. That I know is somewhat in accordance with the whole theory of this bill. Having labored here nearly a month to relieve the manufacturers of this country of some $75,000,000 of annual taxation, we now propose to protect them additionally in consequence of that relief. And we are to go through a fortnight's or three weeks' work in the hot weather of July to protect them additionally because of that relief of $75,000,000 of annual taxation which we afforded them in the internal revenue bill.

Now, I have this to say about salt, that it is in its nature a monopoly in this country. It can be produced in New York, in West Virginia, in Ohio, and in Michigan. And do you propose to coerce the people of Maine into buying Michigan salt? Is that the proposition? The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TROWBRIDGE] says truly that give them duty enough and they will make my constituents buy salt of his constituents. Of course they can undoubtedly produce enough in Michigan to supply that locality and ours, too. And it is proposed to carry salt from Michigan across the country to Maine, when it can be produced on Turk's Island for eight or ten cents a bushel.

Now, I am ingrained a protective man; but I propose in legislation not to run the thing into the ground. I do not propose, as Mr. Webster said on a certain occasion, that we should reenact the laws of God. Nor does it seem to me worth while in a tariff bill to attempt to override the laws of God. We should pay some little attention to the situation of the country, where this article can be produced and at what rate, and where else we can get it, and at what rate it can be produced elsewhere. But now when the present rate of duty upon salt is something like one hundred and fifty per cent. ad valorem, it is proposed to add seventy-five per cent. more to that.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HUMPHREY, there were—ayes 39, noes 60.

Mr. HUMPHREY called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HUMPHREY and Mr. PLANTS were appointed.

The committee divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 57.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend by striking out "forty-two" in line six and inserting "thirty;" and by striking out "thirty" in line seven and inserting "twenty-two;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

On salt in sacks, barrels, and other packages, thirty cents per one hundred pounds; on salt in bulk, twenty-two cents per one hundred pounds.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I desire to offer an amendment to which I think the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will agree. It is to insert "thirty-six" instead of "forty-two," and "twenty-two" instead of "thirty;" so that the paragraph will read:

On salt in sacks, barrels, and other packages, thirty-six cents per one hundred pounds; on salt in bulk, twenty-two cents per one hundred pounds.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend by striking out this paragraph, embracing lines six, seven, and eight, with the view to insert salt in the free list.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On flaxseed, linseed, hemp-seed, and rape-seed, thirty cents per bushel, of fifty-two pounds per bushel: Provided, That no drawback shall be allowed on oil-cake when exported.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by striking out "thirty" and inserting "sixty," so as to make the duty sixty cents per bushel.

Mr. Chairman, we have now come to that part of the bill which concerns the agricultural interests. And I wish gentlemen of the committee to give their attention to a single fact. Flaxseed oil, under the provisions of this bill, will pay a duty of thirty cents per gallon. Flaxseed, it is proposed, shall pay thirty cents a bushel. In one bushel of flaxseed there are two gallons of oil. The effect is to tax oil in the seed fifteen cents a gallon, and out of the seed thirty cents a gallon. It requires no argument, and I do not propose to make any, to prove that this is a discrimination against the agricultural interests and in favor of the manufacturing interests.

We can raise in this country seed enough for all the paint in the world, even if we had no oil in the bowels of the earth. If we propose to protect any interest, I need not argue to this committee that the agricultural interest is the interest to be protected, for it underlies and furnishes the foundation for every other prosperous interest in the country; and without the prosperity of the agricultural interest there can be no prosperity in the nation. I hope that the legislation of this body will not look toward discrimination against the agricultural interests.

Mr. MORRILL. This is another portion of the bill in reference to which I reserved my right to vote against it. The duty fixed in the paragraph is already, in my judgment, higher than it ought to be. Linseed oil is anything but a luxury. It is a common necessity. Every man uses more or less of it for the painting of his house once in two or three years; and it is also used in various manufactures. It is essential that we do not put upon this article a rate of duty which may practically be prohibitive; for we derive from abroad I suppose nearly three fourths of all that is used in the country. The duty upon this article may affect us in very many ways. Our California trade is more or less dependent upon the article of linseed imported from India. Our vessels which are freighted from the Atlantic sea-board to California must return in ballast or they must go to India and get something of this kind on which to make a return freight. The average cost of the article in India is about one dollar per bushel. I undertake to say that if the bill be allowed to stand as it is, imposing a duty of thirty cents per bushel upon the seed and thirty cents per gallon upon oil, which costs abroad only fifty cents per gallon, every linseed oil mill east of the Alleghanies, instead of crushing linseed, will be crushed itself. The article will be imported in the form of linseed oil. It will be of no benefit except to some half a dozen crushers west of the Alleghany. Under all the circumstances, I hope not only the duty will not be increased, but that it will be reduced. But it is for the committee to dispose of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I propose to amend the amendment by making it forty. Mr. Chairman, our western friends have agreed upon forty, petitioned for forty, and hope to get forty; and it is quite little that agriculture can get out of this or any other tariff bill. We have nothing in it but wool and linseed. The oil men went down and asked the manufacturers what they could get, and we took what they would give us. We took forty. The linseed manufacturers came here and said they would not do it, that it would ruin them. Out in the West we are not afraid of ruin if we get the Niagara ship-canal. Rather than see all these men ruined we consented to thirty. As a farmer, as a western man, I am willing to compromise and help all these suffering interests out if they will adhere to thirty and thirty; thirty on oil and thirty on flaxseed. But, Mr. Chairman, if they propose to disturb this, then I propose to say something further on the subject. I hope my friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] will withdraw his amendment if my friend, the chairman, will agree to stand by the compromise of thirty and thirty.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not enter into any compromise.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I never knew the time when you compromised on less than what you could get. [Laughter.] I do not know any interest that will consent to anything less. I withdraw my amendment; and I hope the friends of agriculture, the friends of the farmer in this House, will stand by the compromise of thirty and thirty.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "sixteen," sixteen being the present rate of duty fixed by the existing tariff. It appears to me that our friend from Illinois, as well as the rest of our agricultural friends, will defeat the object they have in view by putting such a tremendous tariff on agricultural products. We of the middle States have interests to attend to as well as you gentlemen of the western States. While you have flaxseed—

Mr. WENTWORTH. You have coal.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. We have coal; but we also have flaxseed factories. We use your flaxseed, but you unfortunately cannot give us all that we want, and if you put this increased tariff of thirty per cent. on flaxseed you will close up our flaxseed factories, and the consequence will be that we cannot buy even what you now raise.

Now, sir, I have received time and again communications from different flaxseed factories in my district, from very reliable gentlemen, that the product of flaxseed in this country is not sufficient to meet the demands of even the flaxseed factories east of the Alleghanies. And yet while this fact is stated gentlemen propose to put a higher duty on flaxseed which will break up these factories and prevent increased consumption of the article. I am opposed to putting at a higher rate and in favor of the proposition of the chairman, striking it down one half.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am perfectly aware there is in this matter to some extent a collision of interests. I wish to state briefly some of the points involved in the case. The distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has made two errors. In the first place he says two thirds of the seed already used in this country is imported. I think he is mistaken in that. For ten years the average home crop has been one million six hundred thousand bushels, and the average imported one million four hundred thousand.

The importation of oil has been about half a million gallons annually. So that, adding all the importation of oil to the oil made from the imported seed, it makes a little less than the amount made from the home seed. The result of that comparison of facts is, that we produce more of our oil from home-grown seed than we bring from abroad in the shape of oil and seed. The chairman of the committee speaks of there being about a dozen presses in the West that will be benefited by this bill as it now stands. I will tell him that there are in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa ninety-three presses, of the capacity of crushing two million five hundred bushels annually.

Now, what are the facts in regard to the business itself? We lay a tariff of sixteen cents a bushel on foreign seed and twenty-three cents on a gallon of foreign oil. Now, a bushel of foreign seed produces two and an eighth gallons of oil. So that if a man brings the seed from abroad and crushes it in Boston or New York he produces an amount of oil which, if shipped from abroad, would pay forty-nine cents duty; but in the shape of seed it pays only sixteen cents, and he then has a drawback of seven cents per bushel. The consequence is that the oil brought into this country in seed really pays only about nine cents a bushel on the seed it comes in. Now, when a man raises seed in this country and ships his cake abroad he gets no drawback on cake made from the home-grown seed; but if he buys foreign seed and then ships his oil-cake abroad he gets his seven cents a bushel drawback. So much advantage to the man who handles foreign seed over one who handles home-grown seed. Now, the committee proposes to harmonize these things, as was said by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] by giving to the grower of the seed in this country about two thirds what they ask for.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland withdraw the amendment?

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I will withdraw it if the gentleman from Ohio will renew it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will renew no such amendment as that.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. J. L. THOMAS, it was disagreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move pro forma to make it forty cents. This clause proposes a duty on the seed from which the oil is produced and on the oil when manufactured, to equalize the two. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] says this is the result of a compromise. If so it is a bad compromise. The tax ought to be higher. The chairman of the committee admonishes us that this is one of those cases in which he intends to oppose the action in committee and go for a lower tax. I apprehend he means a lower tax on the seed alone, and not on the oil.

Mr. MORRILL made some answer inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. SCHENCK. He prefers to have it where it is, a heavy tax on the manufactured oil to keep that out, but a low tax on the seed to let that in, in order that eastern manufacturers, in competition with the interest at the West, may manufacture oil from the imported seed, and thus crush out and destroy the whole western interest. And in accordance with this, a most extraordinary statement has been made by the chairman of the committee. He asks where is the necessity for increasing the cost of linseed oil, one of the articles in common use throughout the country, for the benefit of a little interest west of the Alleghany mountains, not involving more than half a dozen presses. Now, sir, let me say that this is an extraordinary statement coming from the gentleman to whom we look for information in regard to the manufactures of the country. There are twice as many presses as that in the town in which I live. There are forty-odd in the State of Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. Forty-seven.

Mr. SCHENCK. There are about ninety in the six western States which are interested in this matter; and the whole interest, instead of being one that deserves to be spoken of contemptuously, I undertake to say involves $8,000,000 annually. I tell him, sir, that the flaxseed at its market price, raised annually in the six States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and Kentucky, amounts to a little over $5,250,000; that manufactured it produces $6,000,000 worth of oil annually, and $2,000,000 worth of oil-cake which is exported and sold abroad without the drawback which these eastern gentlemen get the benefit of when they export oil-cake made from foreign seed. I tell him that the labor, the gunny-bags, the cooperage, and the transportation to the eastern market of this oil-cake for shipment adds so much more that it becomes an interest of $10,000,000 annually before it reaches the market; and it does not become the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, instructing this House, to stand up in his place and speak contemptuously of this interest, as if it were a matter affecting only half a dozen crushers west of the Alleghany mountains. Sir, we want these five and a quarter millions' worth of seed to receive some little protection. We want a protection like that which is given to almost every other industrial pursuit or production provided for in this bill; and because we ask a little protection of this sort a great interest is to be spoken of in this contemptuous manner, as though it were some small matter out at the West not worthy the notice of gentlemen living upon the Atlantic sea-board.

Sir, we can comprehend why these gentlemen want to bring in seed from abroad and manufacture it into oil; they want to break down the western interest and buy our seed cheap, and let us manufacture none at home. It is all in the way of business. We can understand how they can go for a low tariff when nearly all the oil-cake made for the feed of cattle is used abroad, and little or none in this country. It finds its way after manufacture from the West to the sea-board, and from the East directly abroad, and they get a drawback of seven cents upon it, thus reducing the tariff which they pay to something like nine cents instead of sixteen.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I am ready to admit that I spoke rather at random when I said that there were but half a dozen establishments for crushing linseed west of the Alleghanies; but it was not my purpose to speak contemptuously. I only desired to give an idea that this increased protection is not for the benefit of the farmers and the agricultural interest, but purely for the benefit of the crushers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the amount of importations, I am ready also to confess that I have not examined them since 1861; but previous to that time I did examine them critically, and I know that we import very large quantities of both seed and oil. We all know that the importation of everything for the last four years has been entirely interrupted; the course of trade has been changed; it has not been as it has been before, and therefore the records for the last four or five years afford no criterion for legislators to go by. In order to show that I am not wrong in my position upon this subject, I ask the attention of the House to the records of Congress since 1842. Why, sir, there never has been a time when there has not been a greater duty on linseed oil than upon the seed itself. It is obvious, if the gentleman from Ohio nearest to me [Mr. GARFIELD] is correct, that if we import linseed oil when there is seven cents per gallon more duty upon it than upon seed, you put them on equal terms; and no more seed will come into the country; it will all come in in the shape of oil.

Now, let me call your attention to the record. In 1842 the duty on oil was twenty-five per cent., on seed five per cent.; in 1846 oil twenty per cent., seed fifteen per cent.; in 1857 oil fifteen, seed free; in 1861 oil twenty, seed sixteen; in 1864 oil twenty-three, seed sixteen. All previous Congresses, therefore, have been strangely in error or else my impetuous young friend from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] is somewhat in error to-night.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in my own State, and it is probably the same in Ohio, we have given up the growth of linseed for the sake of the seed. Every farmer, every agriculturist knows that if he lets even his grass ripen into seed it exhausts the soil twice as much as if he cuts it while in the flower. And if flax is allowed to grow until the seed ripens it is very exhaustive to the soil. And in States where they can grow wheat as they can in Ohio, where they can get twice as much from the same number of acres as they can of flaxseed, and get a higher price for it, you cannot by any system of protection induce them to grow flaxseed.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I wish to recall to the attention of this House that ever since this tariff debate commenced we have heard nothing but "protection."

Mr. MORRILL. Not from me.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The United States is a large landed proprietor in its own right. But our land has become so valueless that we find great difficulty to give it away if we compel the one to whom we give it to go and live upon it. So we give it away to railroad companies in order that our lands may be occupied by somebody. Now, suppose a poor man goes to work on that land, just see how the country protects him. He first undertakes to fence in his land, and the spade with which he digs the hole for a post is taxed; the ax with which he cuts the post to put in the hole is taxed; the boards he puts on the posts to make his fence are taxed; the nails with which he fastens on the boards are taxed; and the hammer with which he drives the nails is taxed. When the fence is done and the man goes inside to work his plow is taxed, his hoe is taxed, his cultivator is taxed, his reaper or mower is taxed, and everything he uses is taxed. And for the benefit of whom? For the protection of American manufacturers. And the poor man must pay his tax in advance. He cannot stir a peg, he cannot dig a hole, or plow a furrow until he has paid his tax on his implements. And after he has endured the heats of summer and the frosts of winter, after he has risked the fevers and agues, the miasmas that are always incident to a new country, he looks to the Government for some protection. He fights the battles of the country and pays its taxes, too, and this is the protection you give him. I want to know what encouragement there is for us to go into agriculture if we have no protection at all. And there have been rich men and rich men and rich men here this winter trying to lobby against the agriculturists and put them down. I hope the House will say thirty cents for the oil and thirty cents for the seed.

Mr. PRICE. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the debate on this tariff bill from the commencement of it. And I have heard a great deal said about protection for the interests of this country. I believe, if I properly understand the meaning of the word, that I am a protectionist. But if the very moment we strike the agricultural interests of this country protection is to cease, then I shall begin to review my course and opinions upon the question of protection, and conclude that possibly I am not quite so much of a protectionist after all. The committee must allow me to say that if the manufacturer is to be protected, and the merchant is to be protected, and all classes and conditions of society are to be protected except the agriculturist, then I undertake to say that we have begun to protect at the wrong end, and have left entirely out of sight the interest that needs protection the most and that must have it.

My friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] tells us as an argument why the provision reported by the committee should not be changed, that previous Congresses have adopted a lower scale. I do not know Mr. Chairman, that I ought to speak longer, for I am afraid I shall interrupt the private conversation that seems to be so interesting to members here. It would be impolite, perhaps, to interrupt them. If I can be heard, I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] who says that the action of the last three Congresses has been of a different character from that which I propose, and therefore we ought to adhere to that line of policy. Now, sir, it just occurs to me that there is a class of politicians who—

"Chime on errors past,
And stumble on in blunders to the last."

I do not propose to be one of that kind. I prefer, when I see that an error has been committed, to correct that error, and to do better in the future than I have done in the past.

Now, I have only to say to gentlemen of this committee that if the agricultural interest of this country cannot be protected to the same extent as all other interests, then I am not a protectionist or a tariff man, not in the least degree whatever. If the men who do the work of the nation, who constitute the bone and sinew of the country, underlying the prosperity of every other interest, are not to be protected equally with other interests—yes, sir, and above all other interests—then I am not a protectionist. The agricultural class embraces the men who furnish the labor of the community; and labor in this country, as in all other countries, is the only true standard of value. Sir, are we to tell the agriculturist that he must sell a bushel of flaxseed at a certain price to the eastern manufacturer for the making of oil because the seed can be raised in some foreign country at one dollar per bushel? Why, sir, have we not put a duty of sixty, seventy, eighty per cent. upon iron and steel and other articles in which the manufacturing interests are concerned?

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will permit me to say that I am not opposed to protecting the agricultural interest; but we do protect the agricultural interests by putting a higher duty on linen, encouraging farmers to raise flaxseed for the fiber rather than for the seed, and which will be found of far more value.

Mr. PRICE. I thank the gentleman for that word as much as the "Jew" was ever thanked. Sir, with reference to Russia duck and crash and other articles of that class, we the other day did that of which, if we examine it properly, we should be ashamed. We can raise in my own State raw material for enough duck and crash to supply the world; yet we must cater to the interests of Russia, and encourage the pauper labor of Europe rather than the industry of our own citizens. Now, sir, I am for taking care of the people of this country; and I would not deserve to be called a "protectionist" if I were not.

Mr. MORRILL. For the purpose of terminating debate, I move that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate on the pending paragraph terminate in one minute.

Mr. SCHENCK. I suggest to the gentleman to allow three minutes for the explanation of some of his figures.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman shall have the whole of the one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate, by order of the House, is limited to one minute.

Mr. SCHENCK. The "impetuous friend" of the gentleman from Vermont would like to avail himself of that minute in order to show that the deliberate gentleman from Vermont, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, is about as wrong in his figures in reference to importation as with regard to everything else connected with this interest. He says there has been no importation of seed of any consequence since 1861. Now, sir, I have taken the pains to procure the figures on this subject; and I find that in 1861 123,603 bags were imported; and since that time the quantity of foreign seed brought into the country for the use of these eastern manufacturers has gradually increased till in 1865 it amounted to 321,570 bags—nearly three times as much as in 1861. The average annual importation during the last ten years has been 1,376,213 bushels. He is willing to protect all this foreign seed but none of that five millions and a quarter worth of seed raised by all these western States for these half a dozen of crushers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WENTWORTH, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. PRICE's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to strike out the words, "that no drawback shall be allowed on oil-cake when exported."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On mackerel, two dollars per barrel; on herrings, pickled or salted, one dollar per barrel; on salmon, pickled or salted, three dollars per barrel; on shad, two dollars per barrel; on all other fish, pickled, two dollars per barrel; on all fish, not herein otherwise provided for, one dollar per hundred-weight: Provided, That any fish in packages other than barrels shall pay in proportion to the rates charged upon similar fish in barrels; on sardines and anchovies, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on fish-oil, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. PIKE. I move to add the following:

Provided further, That herring imported in bulk shall pay at the rate of fifty cents per barrel of two hundred pounds.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pelts, (without wool,) skivers, and roans, pickled or salted, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move the following:

On raw goat-skins in the hair from any port of shipment five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Chairman, the object of reducing the duty, as indicated in my amendment, is this: these skins come in free all over the world except into the ports of this country.

Mr. BINGHAM. Debate is not in order, as the committee commenced to divide.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I ask unanimous consent to go back to move an amendment reducing the duty on mackerel from two dollars to one dollar per barrel.

Objection was made.

The Clerk read as follows:

On skivers, tanned, colored, and finished, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "and" and insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY. I move to insert the following:

On goat and sheep skins, tanned and unfinished, from any port of shipment, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On fawn, kid, and lamb skins, tanned and dressed, otherwise than in colors, and known as chamois, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On mats of sheep-skins, not colored, forty per cent. ad valorem.

On mats of sheep-skins, fancy, colored, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On upper leather and calf-skins and goat-skins, tanned, dressed, or finished, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On leather, patent, japanned or enameled, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the word "enameled" the words "and on glazed skin."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On parchment and vellum, forty per cent. ad valorem.

On shoes and boots of all kinds, and all manufactures of leather, not herein otherwise provided for, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to add the following:
On goat or sheep skins, colored or finished, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope by unanimous consent the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEY] will be allowed to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. ALLEY. It should read, "shipment from foreign ports."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I wanted to make an amendment to that when it was up before.

Mr. ALLEY. If the committee will allow me, I will explain what I meant. By the existing law goods coming from the Cape of Good Hope by the way of London or Liverpool, or any other foreign port, are charged ten per cent. ad valorem, and there are a great many goods that are shipped to this country in that way. Now, it is to obviate that difficulty that I have offered the amendment. I supposed the word "foreign" was in it. If it reads "from any foreign port," it will read right.

Mr. THAYER. The word "importation" in the beginning of the section implies the same thing as the word foreign.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to going back unless we can consider the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is the one offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL.]

Mr. MORRILL. I object to the amendment, because goat-skins are already provided for at a different rate elsewhere, and if the amendment is adopted it will present the anomaly of two different rates for the same article.

The amendment of Mr. O'NEILL was disagreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have another amendment, as follows:

On raw goat-skins in the hair, from any foreign port of shipment, five per cent. ad valorem.

I merely wish to say a word. I offered an amendment some time ago which was ambiguous in its language. This is to confine it to any foreign port of shipment, so that American manufacturers can have the advantage which foreign manufacturers now have. This gives to the American manufacturer the opportunity of making up morocco from the skins instead of buying it from abroad.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On artificial flowers, fifty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That artificial flowers when composed wholly or in part of silk shall be subject, in addition to the foregoing rate, to a duty of twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the last paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On artificial flowers when imported in roses, buds, leaves, and grasses, in gross fifty per cent. ad valorem; when imported in bunches or wreaths consisting of flowers, buds, leaves, and grasses combined, ready for sale and use, sixty per cent. ad valorem; when made wholly or in part of silk, seventy-five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On buttons, pearl, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on buttons of all other descriptions, not herein otherwise provided for, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to add the following:

On blacking for shoes and boots, forty per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On Britannia and pewter ware, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On cobalt and oxide of cobalt, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HOGAN. I move to amend by striking out "thirty" and inserting "forty." I do not think it necessary to say anything in reference to this. Cobalt is a product of our western country. It is found nowhere else in the United States. I think we ought to advance the rate of duty upon it so as to enable us to manufacture it. There are other countries that produce it.

Mr. MORRILL. No objection.
The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I move to add the following:

On bichromate of potash, four and a half cents per pound.

The present duty is three cents per pound. The ore out of which it is made is found in Maryland in great quantities, and that is about the only State where it is produced. It is used to fix colors to dyes. It is a very important branch of industry in our State, and one that needs protection. I hope the committee will accept it.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, the committee will remember that in the progress of the internal revenue bill we took off all tax upon this article, which is essentially a raw material and enters into various other manufactures. If the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. J. L. THOMAS] will be content with an increase from three to three and one half cents, I will not object; otherwise I hope the proposition will be voted down.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Will the gentleman from the Committee of Ways and Means agree to four cents?

Mr. MORRILL. No; not more than three and one half cents.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I cannot agree to that.

The question was put on the amendment; and there were—ayes 12, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. J. L. THOMAS and GARFIELD were appointed.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I withdraw my amendment, and move to make the duty three and a half cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On corktree, bark of, unmanufactured, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. RADFORD. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. RADFORD, (at ten o'clock and five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees.
By Mr. HARDING, of Illinois: The petition of people of Warren county, Missouri, for a bridge at Quincy, Illinois.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of sundry citizens of Millintown, Pennsylvania, for amending the tariff so as to protect labor to the extent of the difference of the cost of capital and labor here and abroad, with the addition of the taxes paid by American industrial products from which the foreign are free.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of morocco manufacturers of the city of Philadelphia, asking that the tariff act may be so amended as to protect their manufacturing interest.

By Mr. PHELPS: The memorial of George W. Graves and John Creamer, claiming compensation for loss of schooner Fanny Davis.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The memorial of C. Parker, of Ohio, the "dusty philosopher," on Government abuses generally, whisky prohibition, negro equality, and pardons before conviction, with a postscript inquiring for a site for a grist-mill for himself and his son-in-law.

By Mr. UPSON: The petition of members of the first Michigan cavalry, praying for further compensation and relief.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 6, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
On motion of Mr. STEWART, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of McClure & Miller, of Albany, praying that Solomon P. Smith may be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Brevet Brigadier General Ward B. Burnett, praying that he may be allowed arrears of pension from the 4th of March, 1863, to March 4, 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 559) to authorize the extension, construction, and use by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company of a railroad from between Knoxville and the Monocacy Junction into and within the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 517) for the relief of Liston H. Pearce, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 695) for the relief of William H. Wheeler, of Bangor, Maine, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 540) in relation to claims for horses turned over to the Government, have instructed me to report it adversely. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 602) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WADE. The select committee, to whom was referred the Senate resolution in reference to the adjustment of the inequalities of compensation allowed to the several officers and employes of the two Houses of Congress, with a view to the adjustment of the same in the Senate, have had that matter under consideration, and have directed me to make a report accompanied by a bill. I move that the report be printed.

The motion to print the report was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 411) to equalize the compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, with those of the House of Representatives, was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee, on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 393) to incorporate the Metropolitan Club of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 726) to extend to certain persons the privilege of admission, in certain cases, to the United States Government asylums for the insane, reported it with amendments.

RETRENCHMENT COMMITTEE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the resolution of the House of Representatives, providing for the appointment of a joint committee on the subject of retrenching the expenses and correcting the abuses in the civil service of the Government, to report it back with the recommendation of the committee that the Senate concur therein; and I ask for the present consideration of the resolution inasmuch as I presume there will be no objection to it. It is not of course a resolution out of which any great results can be expected now to flow; but it provides for the only means the representatives of the people have to inquire into the abuses which in the course of time creep into the administration of the civil service of the Government. While I do not expect from it myself any great advantages to the people, I think that it will be useful to a very considerable degree.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. CLARK. I do not know that I have particular objection to the passage of the resolution; but I think it had better lie over for consideration. The power given to sit in the recess and send for persons and papers is a very broad one, and perhaps there had better be a little consideration in regard to it. It had better lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to its present consideration, the resolution lies over until to-morrow under the rule.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 410) for the relief of Solomon P. Smith; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ALOIS KLAUS.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bill No. 164.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 164) for the relief of Alois Klaus. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Alois Klaus the sum of $32 90, in full payment for moneys paid by him for transportation, and due to him for rations, while in the military service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to take up for consideration the resolution which was offered by me some days since continuing throughout the year the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the clerk of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I will state that the object of this resolution is to put those two clerks on the same footing as the clerk of the Committee on Printing and one or two other of the committee clerks of the Senate. The reason for this arises from the impossibility of getting clerks properly qualified, for the pay which the law provides for a committee clerk during the three months of the short session and the six or seven months of the long session.

When I introduced the resolution the other day the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] suggested that it should be referred to the select committee which was appointed to consider the compensation of the employees of the Senate. I did not then have an opportunity to state to him that the reason why that course was not deemed proper to be pursued was that the chairman of that committee was in favor of this measure. Upon subsequent inquiry I ascertained that the object of the appointment of that committee was to equalize the pay of the clerks and other officers of the Senate with that of similar officers of the House of Representatives, and not to adjust the relative compensation of the various clerks in the Senate or the various committee clerks of the Senate to each other.

It is well known that the Committee on Military Affairs have vast amounts of business, not only during the sessions of Congress, but in the intervals. It is known to every member of that committee that the investigations necessary for perfect legislation on military subjects require most incessant work and high talents. That committee has now a clerk of that character. It is desirable, in order to obtain as perfect legislation as can be secured, that the business which comes before the committee shall have the revision of a competent hand. The individual who now occupies that post has had an experience of one or two years in the War Department, and is efficient in such a way that when matters are brought before the committee time is saved and more perfect legislation obtained. It is well known that in all the Executive Departments competent clerks are continued, and that the pay of the commonest is $1,200 a year; and here, where it should require the greatest care, and where there should be brought to the consideration of the committees all the information possible, the pay is interrupted by the expiration of the session, and important committees are obliged to procure clerks with the small pay that the per diem for the broken session of Congress allows.

The question arises whether if we pass this resolution there will not then be left other committees of the Senate who will have clerks not receiving the pay allowed to the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs and the clerk of the Committee on the District of Columbia. That suggestion, however, is answered by the fact that there are committees in the Senate who do not require this order of talent and who have no business to be attended to during the intervals between the sessions of Congress. I therefore submit the question to the Senate and ask for favorable consideration on the resolution I have proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution the substance of which has been stated by the Senator from Rhode Island?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the annual compensation of the clerks of the Committees on Military Affairs and the Militia and the District of Columbia shall hereafter be the same as that of the clerks of the Committees on Finance, Printing, and Claims, commencing July 1, 1866.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to inquire what is the compensation of the clerk of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The compensation of committee clerks now is six dollars a day.

Mr. JOHNSON. For the year?

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, sir; for the session; but the clerks named in the resolution are paid all the year round.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have no objection to the resolution, but I think it should be more comprehensive, and that some committee should consider it in order that we may know whether other committee clerks ought not to be embraced in this resolution. It is very likely that there are other committee clerks quite as deserving of this increased compensation as those who are named in the resolution. I do not oppose it, but I hope we shall not act upon it until we include all the cases that probably may require this kind of legislation. Perhaps it would be as well to refer it to one of the committees—I suggest the Committee on Contingent Expenses—and let them report what other clerks of committees should also be embraced in this enlargement of compensation.

Mr. GRIMES. As I understand it, the clerk of the Committee on Finance now receives a compensation of $1,850 a year. The clerks of the two committees named in this resolution receive each six dollars a day during the time they are employed. The one has an annual salary, and the others are paid for the services that they render. The effect of this proposition would be to make the clerks of these two committees permanent officers, and to pay them every alternate year for nine months when they are performing no service. Whenever any resolution of this kind has hitherto been introduced it has always been referred to some committee. I do not know of any reason why we should single out these two particular clerks, making an invidious distinction between them and the other clerks at this time, without such a reference, without having the matter properly investigated by some committee. I hope, therefore, that the motion of the Senator from Minnesota will prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. Two of the clerks of committees of the House and the Senate now receive an annual salary instead of a per diem allowance.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Three of the Senate: the clerks to the Committees on Claims, Finance, and Printing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know that the clerk of the Committee on Claims was included. The clerk of the Committee on Printing receives it because he is required during the vacation to make out certain indexes and records, the precise character of which I cannot state.

Mr. GRIMES. Indexing the laws.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am told that he is a very competent person, and during the vacation he is employed in performing the duties that belong to that committee, making up indexes, &c. The clerks of the Committees on Finance of the Senate and Ways and Means of the House it seems to me ought to be salaried officers, because they have to prepare to some considerable extent for the discharge of their duties. An inexperienced man would cause delay and trouble. I think the clerks of those two committees ought to be salaried officers. They should be men of considerable ability in that line, and ought to have great familiarity with the various laws relating to appropriations, and ought to be able to frame the appropriation bills. Those clerks have to perform the work of framing most of the bills. As to whether this compensation should be extended further than that is a matter that I cannot judge upon. The clerk of the Committee on Claims must necessarily make digests, and must have a great deal of manual labor to perform.

Mr. CLARK. He has been paid an annual salary for many years.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps the Military Committee ought to have a salaried clerk. I do not think there is anything lost by keeping these necessary officers and having them fairly paid. Most of the officers employed in the Senate are paid an annual salary. The clerks who perform their duties at the desk, receive an annual salary, although their duties are only performed a portion of the year; and so with many of the messengers and with many of the officers of the Senate. I think nothing is lost if we keep experienced men in office, because they are then ready to discharge their duties promptly, and generally with great fidelity. The longer they are kept the better they are. If there is any peculiar knowledge required by the clerk of the Military Committee, and I should think there should be, perhaps it would be well enough to substitute a salaried officer for a mere clerk with a per diem allowance. The duties of the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs during the last three or four years must have been very responsible and arduous. It would be much better to pay an increased salary in order to keep a competent man, a person familiar with the duties. If he is discharged at the end of the session, and is compelled to seek other employment, and if a new clerk has to be employed, it may be a very serious embarrassment to the committee in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, at the opening of the war the then clerk of the Military Committee was allowed the sum proposed by the resolution submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island. He had been for many years in the office and was very thoroughly posted in military matters and matters pertaining to the War Department; but, owing to causes not connected with his office, he had to leave that place, and it was with some difficulty that we could obtain another man fit for the place. We found one in the person of Mr. White, now the editor of the Chicago Tribune, a gentleman of rare intelligence and ability; but he was only with us for a short time, and then we had to find another. We have now a clerk who has had a great deal of experience, having been in the War Department for some time. He received there $1,800 a year, being a fourth-class clerk, and having a very important position. There are but few men in the service anywhere who understand matters pertaining to the War Department or military claims or anything connected with the Army as well as he does. He is our clerk now at a compensation of six dollars a day during the session. When this session ends, of course his connection with the committee must end, because he cannot afford to remain with us and be our clerk at the next session for three months. He would not get any compensation of any account. He is a very competent man, and I believe will be a great loss to the committee; at any rate, he certainly will be to me, for I do not know where I can get a decent man who can be with us any length of time for the pay allowed. Gentlemen may come with us during a long session and get some twelve or thirteen hundred dollars; but then for the three months' session a clerk would get only five or six hundred dollars a year. No man can afford to come to us and stay for that. I should be glad to have a permanent clerk for our committee, and I believe it would be a saving to the Government to have it, for we have an immense number of cases coming to us which the clerk we now have either knows about or can at once inform himself in regard to. I shall be very glad to have the clerk of our committee made a permanent clerk.

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose that clerks to some of the committees are necessary; but many of these clerks seem to have a double calling. They are not only clerks of the committees, but many of them are slanderers and libelers and traducers of the members of Congress. If a man is to be a clerk here, I do not think he ought to combine with it the character of a daily and habitual libeler of members of Congress and be supported from the public Treasury.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me a single word?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that the clerk of my committee is in no way connected with the press in any form whatever. He has no connection whatever with the press, and never had.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection whatever to any committee having its necessary clerk; but, although I am as impervious to the shafts of such malignant slanderers as any living man, I protest against a score or more of clerks being brought here and paid and supported by the public Treasury when their particular vocation is not to act as clerks to the committees and to facilitate the committees in the transaction of their business, but to send off their foul and false libels upon members of Congress.

I shall not make any proposition in relation to the resolution of the honorable Senator from Rhode Island nor in connection with this subject; but men who stickle for the freedom of debate, and who are willing to assure to members of Congress the perfect liberty of debate, at any rate within legitimate and decent bounds, ought not to billet upon the public Treasury a set of infamous libelers and slanderers, the principal business of some of whom is not to act as clerks but to send forth their vile missives from the Capitol in order to abuse the public mind in relation to the sentiments and the course of members of the Senate and House of Representatives. Sometimes the missives of these creatures meet my eye; it is not often that they do, but some of them have done so; and I know that that is the vocation of some of the men who occupy positions as clerks in the Departments and to the committees. Sir, if I was the chairman of a committee, and had the appointment of a clerk, if that clerk dared to desecrate his position by uttering falsehood and calumny, and endeavor to bring into contempt and degradation the humblest member of this Senate, I should immediately dismiss him, so far as my action would have the effect, from the service of the committee, and from thus being billeted upon the Treasury of the United States for the purposes of traduction and calumny.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask leave at this time to make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the report will be received.

Mr. DAVIS. If the honorable Senator will permit me, I wish to say a word in explanation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not mean in this denunciation to include all the clerks of committees. Some of them are gentlemen, modest, well-behaved gentlemen, with whom it is my pride to associate. They are clerks, and I am a Senator; but I receive them upon the pale of the equality of American citizens and American gentlemen. It is only those blackguards and infamous libelers who indulge in the sort of missives that I have alluded to that I intended to include in any remarks I have made.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

Mr. FESSENDEN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 513) "to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864, and amendatory thereof," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 32, 58, 59, 60, 80, 109, 118, 121, 136, 150, 154, 197, 198, 215, 219, 221, 223, 225, 227, 233, 237, 259, 299, 301, 312, 317, 318, 324, 325, 349, 352, 354, 355, 362, 363, 368, 369, 379, 415, 416, 427, 428, 437, 447, 449, 450, 457, 466, 472, 478, 479, 480, 487, 509, 523, 532, 542, 552, 556, 557, 569, 592, 606, 611, 612, 618, 635, 649, 650, 652, 656, 658, and 659, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments to the bill numbered 153, 155, 158, 162, 163, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 292, 302, 303, 309, 315, 320, 322, 323, 357, 375, 377, 433, and 475.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-second amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out the words proposed to be inserted and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen months."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-fourth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: add at the end of line one, page 24 of the engrossed bill, the words "and whenever the word 'duty' is used in this act, or the acts of which this is an amendment, it shall be construed to mean 'tax' whenever such construction shall be necessary in order to effect the purposes of said acts."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-seventh amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "and twenty-five cents for each permit granted for making tobacco, snuff, or cigars."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the one hundred and eighth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments to the matter proposed to be inserted, namely: in line two, page 10, strike out the words "this act," and insert the word "law;" in line twenty-three, page 11, strike out the word "such," and insert in lieu thereof the word "any;" after the word "aforesaid," in line three, page 12, insert "reciting the facts set forth in the said certificate;" in line nine, page 12, strike out "this act;" and insert in lieu thereof the word "law;" in lines three and four, page 13, strike out the words "by this act;" and at the end of line eleven, page 14, add, "Provided, That the word 'county,' whenever the same occurs in this act, or the acts of which this is amendatory, shall be construed to mean also a parish, or any other equivalent subdivision of a State or Territory;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the one hundred and thirty-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "except as samples;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the two hundred and fourteenth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line two of said Senate amendment strike out the words "for each license;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the two hundred and eighteenth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line two of said Senate amendment strike out the words "for each license;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the two hundred and twenty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out the word "only" inserted by the Senate, and also all after the word "that," in line twenty-seven, page 79, down to and including the word "team," in line one, page 80, and insert in lieu thereof the words "persons owning and em-playing not more than one vehicle;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the two hundred and seventy-sixth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line one of said Senate amendment, after the word "and," insert "until the 30th day of April, 1867;" and also in line seven of said Senate amendment, after the word "manner," insert "and for the same period;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line three of said Senate amendment strike out the words "retail price" and insert in lieu thereof the word "value;" and also in line five of said Senate amendment strike out the word "cents" and insert in lieu thereof the words "per cent.;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and twenty-first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out the word "enameled," proposed to be inserted, and after the word "tax," in the sixth line, page 109, insert the words "or duty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and twenty-ninth and three hundred and thirty-first amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: strike out all of line nineteen, page 111, including the word "ten," proposed to be inserted by the Senate, to the word "thousand" inclusive, in line twenty, same page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on all cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, the market value of which is over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand, and in addition thereto twenty per cent. ad valorem on the market value thereof;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and forty-seventh amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows: after the word "shall," in line three of said Senate amendment, insert "until the 30th day of April, 1867," and at the end of said Senate amendment add, "and whenever the addition to any fare shall amount only to the fraction of one cent, any person or company liable to the tax of two and a half per cent. may add to such fare one cent in lieu of such fraction; and such person or company shall keep for sale at convenient points tickets in packages of twenty and multiples of twenty, to the price of which only an amount equal to the revenue tax shall be added."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and fifty-first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out, "and of the amount of notes of persons, State banks, or State banking association paid out by them for the previous month."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and fifty-eighth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words, "and notes of persons, State banks, and banking association paid out."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and sixty-first amendment of the Senate so far only as it proposes to strike out words, and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and sixty-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows: after the word "due," in line five of said Senate amendment, insert "wherever;" and after the word "depositors," in line seven, page 40, of said Senate amendment, insert the words "or parties whatsoever, including non-residents, whether citizens or aliens."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and sixty-sixth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line eleven, page 42, of said Senate amendment, after the word "stockholders," insert the words "including non-residents, whether citizens or aliens;" and after the word "whenever," in line seventeen, insert "and wherever;" and in the same line, after the word "payable," insert the words "and to whatever party or person the same may be payable, including non-residents, whether citizens or aliens;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the four hundred and twenty-third amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line two, page 49, of said Senate amendment, after the word "except," insert the words "playing-cards."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the four hundred and fortieth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line twelve, page 55, of said Senate amendment, strike out the word "or" where it first occurs; and in lines fourteen and fifteen, same page, strike out the words "shall use the bills of such State bank or banking association;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the four hundred and fifty-fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: at the end of said Senate amendment add: "mounting and machinery of telescopes for astronomical purposes."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the sixty-third amendment and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out the following:

SEC. 67. And be it further enacted, That in any case, civil or criminal, where suit or prosecution shall be commenced in any court of any State against any officer of the United States, appointed under and acting by authority of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or of any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer on account of any act done under color of his office, or against any person holding property or estate by title derived from any such officer, concerning such property or estate and affecting the validity of this act or acts of which it is amendatory, it shall be lawful for the defendant, in such suit or prosecution, at any time before trial, upon a petition to the circuit court of the United States in and for the district in which the defendant shall have been served with process, setting forth the nature of said suit or prosecution, and verifying the said petition by affidavit, together with a certificate, signed by an attorney and counselor-at-law of some court of record of the State in which such suit shall have been commenced, or of the United States, setting forth that, as counsel for the petitioner, he has examined the proceedings against him, and carefully inquired into all the matters set forth in the petition, and that he believes the same to be true; which petition, affidavit, and certificate shall be presented to the said circuit court if in session, and if not, to the clerk thereof, at his office, and shall be filed in said office, and the cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of said court, and shall be thereafter proceeded in as a cause originally commenced in that court; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court, if the suit were commenced in the court below by summons, to issue a writ of certiorari to the State court, requiring said court to send to the said circuit court the record and proceedings in said cause; or if it were commenced by captias, he shall issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, a duplicate of which said writ shall be delivered to the clerk of the State court, or left at his office, by the marshal of the district, or his deputy, or some person duly authorized thereto; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the said State court to stay all further proceedings in such cause, and the said suit or prosecution, upon delivery of such process, or leaving the same as aforesaid, shall be deemed and taken to be moved to the said circuit court, and any further proceedings, trial, or judgment therein in the State court shall be wholly null and void. And if the defendant in any such suit be in actual custody on meane process therein, it shall be the duty of the marshal, by virtue of the writ of habeas corpus cum causa, to take the body of the defendant into his custody, to be dealt with in the said cause according to the rules of law and the order of the circuit court, or of any judge thereof in vacation. All attachments made, and all bail and other security given, upon such suit or prosecution shall be and continue in like force and effect as if the same suit or prosecution had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the State court; and if, upon the removal of any such suit or prosecution, it shall be made to appear to the said circuit court that no copy of the record and proceedings therein in the State court can be obtained, it shall be lawful for said circuit court to allow and require the plaintiff to proceed de novo, and to file a declaration of his cause of action, and the parties may thereupon proceed as in action originally brought in said circuit court; and, on failure of so proceeding, judgment of nolle prosequi may be rendered against the plaintiff, with costs for the defendant: Provided, That an act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports," passed March 2, 1833, shall not be so construed as to apply to cases arising under an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, nor to any case in which the validity or interpretation of said act or acts shall be in issue: Provided further, That if any officer appointed under and by virtue of any act to provide internal revenue, or any person acting under or by authority of any such officer, shall receive any injury to his person or property, for or on account of any act by him done under any law of the United States for the collection of taxes, he shall be entitled to maintain suit for damage therefor in the circuit court of the United States in the district wherein the party doing the injury may reside or shall be found. And all property taken or detained by any officer or other person under authority of any revenue law of the United States shall be irretrievable, and shall be deemed to be in the custody of the law, and subject only to the orders and decrees of the courts of the United States having jurisdiction thereof. And if any person shall dispossess or rescue, or attempt to dispossess or rescue, any property so taken or detained as aforesaid, or shall aid or assist therein, such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to such punishment as is provided by the twenty-second section of the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, approved the 30th day of April, 1790, for the willful obstruction or resistance of officers in the service of process.

SEC. 68. And be it further enacted, That the fiftieth section of an act passed June 30, 1864, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed: Provided, That any case which may have been removed from the courts of any State under said fiftieth section to the courts of the United States shall be remanded to the State court from which it was so removed, with all the records relating to such cases, unless the justice of the circuit court of the United States in which such suit or prosecution is pending shall be of opinion that said case would be removable from the court of the State to the circuit court under and by virtue of the sixty-sixth section of this act. And in all cases which may have been removed from any court of any State under and by virtue of said fiftieth section of said act of June 30, 1864, all attachments made, and all bail or other security given upon such suit or prosecution, shall be and continue in full force and effect until final judgment and execution, whether such suit shall be prosecuted to final judgment in the circuit court of the United States or remanded to the State court from which it was removed.

SEC. 69. And be it further enacted, That whenever a writ of error shall be issued for the revision of any judgment or decree in any criminal proceeding where is drawn in question the construction of any statute of the United States, in a court of any State, as is provided in the twenty-fifth section of an act entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," passed September 24, 1789, the defendant, if charged with an offense bailable by the laws of such State, shall not be released from custody until a final judgment upon such writ, or until a bond, with sufficient sureties in a reasonable sum, as ordered and approved by the State court, shall be given; and if the offense is not so bailable, until a final judgment upon the writ of error. Writs of error in criminal cases shall have precedence upon the docket of the Supreme Court of all cases to which the Government of the United States is not a party, excepting only such cases as the court, at their discretion, may decide to be of public importance.

The committee of conference further recommend that the words "by the collector," in line nineteen, page 140, in the text of the engrossed bill, be stricken out.

W. P. FESSENDEN,
P. G. VAN WINKLE,
JAMES GUTHRIE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. HOOPER,
W. B. ALLISON,
C. H. WINFIELD,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are a great many amendments, and most of them are verbal and formal. The committee have examined them with very great care, and had no difficulty in coming to a conclusion except upon some half a dozen points, which were finally settled by an agreement satisfactory to all. It is too much of a task for me to undertake to take up the report in detail and go through with it and state what it is in every respect. It has been read; but if any Senators have any questions to ask about particular points, I shall be very happy to answer them and state how they are settled. I may state generally that the differences are settled to the satisfaction of the committee of conference on both sides.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As this bill came from the House of Representatives a tax of five cents a pound was proposed to be imposed upon cotton. The committee of conference, I understand, have fixed that tax at three cents a pound. So far they have done well, in my judgment; but considering the situation of the people where this article is grown, reduced to absolute poverty, scarcely able to get bread for their families, unrepresented in Congress, without any voice in the levying of taxes, I think it is unjust that the article of cotton should be singled out of all the products of the farmer and planter to be taxed.

I am utterly opposed to any tax upon cotton unless a tax be levied upon the other products of the earth. If you tax wheat and corn and the other articles which are produced by the farmers and planters, I have no objection to a tax being placed upon cotton. But under the circumstances in which we are placed, the circumstances in which the country is placed, I am opposed to imposing any tax whatever upon cotton; and while three cents a pound is more favorable to the planter of cotton than five cents, yet, being opposed to that particular article being singled out to be taxed, I cannot vote for the report of the committee, nor for the bill itself with that provision in it. Before the war, I understand that the average price of cotton was about nine cents a pound. This tax would be about one third of the average price of the article as it stood before the war. It seems to me unjust to single out that one particular article, especially when we know that those who grow it are reduced to almost abject poverty, and are in no situation to be singled out as a class to bear an unequal share of the public burdens. I make these remarks simply in explanation of the vote I shall give.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the vote is taken on this proposition, I desire to say a word or two. This bill purports to be a bill to reduce taxes. We were informed by the proper Department of the Government that the condition of our finances would allow a very large reduction; and I think I understood from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the reduction contemplated in this bill would be about seventy-five million dollars, and that the condition of the Treasury would allow that much of a reduction. I had hoped to see some reduction in those taxes that press particularly upon the agricultural interests of the country; but I have been disappointed in that, and I think the western country will also be disappointed.

We have a tax levied, for some reason, in most extraordinary amount, upon one important production of the western country. I speak of the production of whisky. That is continued at two dollars a gallon. I think that the experience of two years has shown that that tax defeats revenue, and at the same time defeats production. I am not going to speak of this interest in its connection with the morals of the country, for no Senator in any of the discussions upon it has assumed that Congress has any right to legislate in the tax bill with a view to any moral results. The tax of two dollars a gallon is imposed with a view to revenue; and two years' experience has shown that that tax instead of producing revenue defeats revenue, and at the same time defeats a production very important to the western country.

While we are reducing the tax upon other articles it is proposed to increase it upon a very important production of agriculture, that production to which the Senator from Delaware has just referred, the production of cotton. I am not able to see upon what principle Congress now proposes to increase the tax upon cotton as it comes from the earth fifty per cent. While you are reducing the tax upon other articles you increase it upon cotton fifty per cent. From two cents on the pound this report takes it up to three cents. The Senate refused to increase it, upon a decided vote, as I recollect. I am not going to refer to the argument so ably presented by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON], and which I thought was not answered, in regard to the constitutional power to tax this article; but I speak of it as a measure of wisdom, considering the present condition of the country. Every Senator is aware of the fact that the balance of trade is largely against us, and that to meet this balance every year there are large exports of the precious metals. Cotton, for a long series of years, has been the production of this country that enabled us to maintain the balance of trade in our favor. Cotton was indispensable to the industrial pursuits in Europe. We had not to beg a market for cotton. It demanded its market and that demand had to be responded to by all the industrial interests of Europe. Now, sir, when it is very important that we should encourage the production of agriculture, not only with a view to the interests of the southern States, but with a view to the substantial interests of all the country, that we may have an article for export which will command a foreign market, which will restore the balance of trade in our favor, which will enable us to keep the precious metals at home; now, at a period in our history when it is most important that we shall encourage this production, we impose a most extraordinary tax upon it, a tax, as the Senator from Delaware has said, which will be equal to one third of its whole value if the production were equal to what it was a few years ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is Senate bill No. 217.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will be postponed until we dispose of this report.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to occupy the attention of the Senate but for a moment, and would like to conclude what I have to say now, if it is the pleasure of the Senate. I presume this subject is as important as any that will be brought before the Senate.

Mr. POLAND. I have no objection to the unfinished business being laid aside informally for the purpose of completing the business on hand; but I do not wish it to lose its place.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It will not lose its place; it can be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is suggested that the unfinished business of yesterday be laid aside by common consent temporarily until the debate shall close upon this question. That will be the course pursued, no objection being made. The unfinished business is laid aside.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Heretofore, as I understand, cotton has been worth nine cents a pound. It is worth more than that now, because of the great falling off in its production. Suppose—and it is very much to be hoped that it will return to its former market price—it returns to that price of nine cents a pound, one third of that value is imposed for the purposes of taxation. Sir, what is the tendency of this legislation? It is, to say the least of it, to embarrass the production. The only article that we propose to tax as it comes from the face of the earth is cotton; and why? Is it because that article is produced in the southern States? I ask Senators if we are going to legislate in our revenue laws for revenue upon the principle of prejudice or sectional dislike.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator is mistaken in one statement. There is one other article taxed that comes from the earth, and that is gold, which I think is wrong.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator calls my attention to a fact which I had overlooked, that gold is taxed. Gold is hardly an agricultural production. I thought it unwise to impose any tax upon gold. I thought it was the policy of the Government in our present condition to encourage the production of gold, and so spoke and so voted in the Senate when that tax was first imposed.

I ask Senators why cotton is selected as an object of taxation. It is the only agricultural product that is taxed before any value is added to it by labor. Is it because it is a production of the southern States? I am sure Senators will not admit that this tax is imposed as a penalty upon the people of the South. A revenue system must be imposed without reference to prejudice or sectional dislike. It must be just to all the interests of the country. But, sir, as a northern man, I believe that the northern people are interested in the production of cotton to a very large extent in order to restore the balance of trade in our favor with Europe. This interest was never in such an embarrassed and depressed condition as it is in at this very hour. Nature seems to have been against it during this present year. In large portions of the South the seed was found to be unfit for planting, and in many localities the crop will fail on that account. In other and in very large and desirable localities the rivers have broken from their boundaries, and have flooded whole sections of the country, so that no crop will be produced. And now, when the people of the southern States are scarcely able to cultivate the land at all; when nature has joined with their poverty to prevent the production of a crop; when the balance of trade is against us; when we need to send hundreds of thousands of bales across the ocean to restore the balance of trade in our favor, at this period it is proposed, when we are reducing taxation upon other articles, to increase by fifty per cent. the tax upon cotton. I cannot understand the statesmanship or the policy that for one moment will allow such legislation.

I presume that we are to be answered during the latter part of this week from the House of Representatives on this subject of the balance of trade. Our productions have been cut off; much of the labor of the country for the past five years has been called into the Army; the lands of the country have not responded with their abundant crops during these five years as in past years; the balance of trade is largely against us; and now Congress is to depress the most important interest, which we ought to encourage, and we are to be told in the latter part of this week, I presume, that we shall restore the balance of trade in our favor by cutting off arbitrarily and by a prohibitory tariff any importations from abroad. To strike down that interest in our own country which will restore trade, which will place our interests as they should be in our commercial relations with foreign countries, and instead of that policy, prohibit importations from abroad, and make the agricultural interest of this country wholly dependent upon the manufacturing interests for their supplies—this is the policy that is to be carried out at this Congress. I do not know whether the western country will quietly agree to it. I see that western gentlemen give it their support. I suppose this policy is to receive the support of western gentlemen. I suppose the tariff that is to come in here, which is a part of the system of which this bill is a part, will receive the support of western gentlemen.

For one, sir, I shall vote upon this bill and upon the tariff bill without sectional feeling; but I think we have a right to ask that toward our interests there shall be simple justice. I would like to see manufactures and commerce encouraged; but I do not want to see taken from agriculture a thousand million dollars and put into the pockets of the manufacturers of this country. New England, New York, and Pennsylvania have not the right to ask this. We protect by most extraordinary duties the labor of New England, and by most extraordinary duties we oppress the agricultural interest. What response can Senators make to the people of the West, when the people are told that a bushel of corn, which is worth in the farmer's crib, say forty cents, when it has one process of manufacture, when it goes into liquor, and in a shape in which it can be shipped to a market, is to be taxed eight dollars, and cotton is to be taxed an increase of fifty per cent. in a bill that proposes to reduce the taxes of the country, and on the other hand that the labor of another section of the country is to be protected by a law which prohibits importation?

It will not do to tell the country that this is a financial policy. It is not such. It is not imposed for purposes, simply and alone, of revenue. I will support that system of tariff which is designed for revenue. I am willing that the labor of New England shall be benefited by a revenue tariff. We have to raise a large amount of gold to meet our public debt, and I am willing to agree to a revenue tariff.

I think that is enough. I think, then, that when that protection is given to the labor of one section of the country there ought not to be a direct tax upon the labor of another section of the country. Because this bill starts out with the policy of taxing an agricultural production in the shape in which it comes from the earth I will not vote for the report of the committee. While the taxes upon other articles of production are reduced you increase the tax upon one article of agricultural production; and next year it may take one step further. If you can tax cotton as it comes from the earth, why may you not tax wheat? Three cents a pound upon cotton, when cotton comes down to nine or ten cents a pound, is equal to twenty, thirty, or thirty-five cents a bushel on wheat. Suppose you say to the farmers of the West, we will tax wheat twenty, thirty, or forty cents. Why not? Upon what principle do you refuse to do it? If it is right to tax agricultural labor in the production of one article as a raw material, why is it not right to tax another article of agricultural labor? If you can take this step this year you may take another step next year. I oppose it at the start. I do not think it is right to tax the labor that is expended upon the earth.

Of course, Mr. President, this report will be adopted; of course the tariff bill that will come in here, a part of this system, will also be adopted; and then the country will have the system—a system exceedingly favorable to the labor of one portion of the country and depressing to the labor of another section of the country. This question will eventually have to be contested before the people, not as a sectional question, I hope, but as a question of justice to labor; and on that question I believe the country will come to the right judgment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana tells us that he approaches this question in neither a partisan nor a sectional view, and he closes his remarks with an appeal to the people against the enormities of this tax bill. He commenced his remarks by stating that this whole bill is a discrimination against the agricultural interest; and as he and I represent agricultural States, and as he proposes to discuss this matter before the people, I propose to meet him here at the threshold.

I assert that in this tax bill there is no tax on any production of the State of Indiana or Ohio except the tax on whisky; that the whole bill, if there is any discrimination at all, is in favor of agriculture; and that most of the relief which is extended by this tax bill is in favor of the interests that he and I represent. As I was a member of the committee that had the consideration of this bill, I can state what I do now authoritatively, that there is no tax in this bill affecting any interest of Indiana or Ohio in which we are not relieved to a considerable extent from the previous tax. There is no tax on any production of agriculture of Indiana or Ohio in this bill. Besides that, all the tax on the implements which are used by the farmer in his agricultural production is thrown off. That is a discrimination in favor of the agricultural interest. The mowing-machine, the rake, the plow, the harrow, and all the multitude of implements that are used by the farmer, pay no tax. They are relieved from the tax not only on the machine itself, but on the component parts that enter into the machine. The building that is constructed on the farm is free from tax. All the tax is removed from almost every implement of husbandry and almost every article that is consumed in the family. Not only that, but when you come to transport the product of the farm from the field where it grows to the consumer in the East and in Europe, the tax is removed from the transportation; so that there is no tax on the production of the agricultural article, or on the tools which produce it, or on the labor which raises it, or on the transportation which carries it to a market. Now, for the honorable Senator from Indiana to state here, in an evident appeal to the people upon a tax question, that this bill discriminates against the agricultural interest, it seems to me is not exactly fair; and I am therefore rather disposed to question the sincerity of his declaration when he says that he does not look at it in a sectional point of view.

I did, to some extent, look at this bill in a sectional point of view; that is, like every other Senator, I endeavored to protect the interests of my constituents, which are like the interests of the people of Indiana. I endeavored to relieve the great laboring masses of the people from as much of the burden of taxation as possible; and let me say that when this bill goes into operation, nearly all the burden of taxation will fall upon accumulated wealth and upon articles of luxury. The income tax is still continued, which is paid mainly by New York and New England, and no relief is given from that tax of five and ten per cent. But a small portion of it is paid in an agricultural community, because in an agricultural community wealth is generally so diversified that comparatively few of our people have more than a thousand dollars' income, and therefore pay no tax; and then the consumption which enters into the farmer's expenses, that portion of his product which he consumes himself, is free from tax; so that not one in ten of the constituents of my friend from Indiana and myself will pay any income tax.

When you come to the luxuries, like tobacco and whisky, it is true tobacco is grown in the West; but it is also grown in the East; it is grown in the South; it is grown in every country; but in this very bill the relief to the tobacco interest is greater than that to any other interest affected by the bill. We justly complained in the West that the uniform tax of one dollar a hundred on cigars was oppressive and odious, and we have taken care to relieve ourselves from the burden of that tax in a great measure by reducing it to one third, I believe, of the amount it was in the old law. I think it is now from two to four dollars a thousand on cigars produced from our products in the West; so that it is reduced some two hundred or three hundred per cent. So on the cheap tobacco made from our product and consumed by our people for smoking-tobacco, the tax is very much reduced; so that in this agricultural production we have extended probably as much relief as to any other.

Now, when you reach the tax on whisky, it is true that the tax on whisky is not changed. I did not think it was wise to change it. It was said that a larger amount would be consumed if the tax should be thrown off. I think by the tax on whisky we gain in a double sense. We gain, first, in promoting temperance and sobriety among our people. A decrease of the amount of whisky consumed as a beverage is undoubtedly beneficial to us as a nation. It would be better if we could substitute some light drinks, as the Germans do with their beer, or as the French do with their wines, for the use of alcoholic spirits. If we could strike down the whole of this industry founded upon whisky, or so much of it as is consumed by the people as a beverage, it would be better for our people in every sense of the word. But there is no article in the world that can afford to pay a tax so well as the article of whisky. England assesses nearly twice as much upon her whisky as we do upon ours. Now, because whisky is made out of corn, and corn is grown in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, is that any reason why we should oppose the tax on whisky? Is that the spirit in which we are to legislate? Are we to refuse to avail ourselves of this ample source of revenue simply because we raise the crop which is consumed, in a great measure, in the production of whisky? Certainly not. My friend from Indiana will hardly confess that. I have no doubt that the consumption of whisky has been very much reduced by the tax; but is that an objection to the tax? On the other hand, if we could raise all our internal revenue from tobacco, whisky, and a few articles of luxury, and from the income tax, we ought to favor that course, because it is manifestly not only for the interest of our own people, but for the interest of the whole country.

I then again repeat that there is not a single industry of the State of Indiana or the State of Ohio but what will be benefited by the passage of this bill. Every production of our country, every interest of our country, is aided, benefited, and relieved by it. The farmer is relieved, not only of the tax on agricultural products, on implements, and on transportation, but in those vital necessities which go into the expense of every farmer, on iron, on coal, on those great leading productions of the mines, produced partly in our own country, and consumed there to a great extent, the tax is very much reduced. It will be within bounds to say that if Ohio paid ten millions of tax under the old law, she will not pay over five millions now. On the single item of transportation alone we save a tax of $1,000,000. Therefore, I say, regarding this in the light that I do, as a matter in which the people of Ohio are interested, I regard this bill as a very great improvement upon the bill that now stands as the law of the land. If this bill should be defeated, the State of Ohio would pay in a single year one or two millions more tax, and I have no doubt the State of Indiana would pay one million more under the old law in a single year than under this law.

The Senator alludes to the tax on cotton. I agree with him in the main with regard to that. As I was not a member of the committee of conference, it is not for me to discuss the question of the tax now proposed. I suppose it was the result of a compromise, the House insisting on a tax of five cents a pound, and the Senate insisting that it should not be increased. The Committee on Finance proposed to leave it stand at two cents, where it is now, and to provide some mode by which the collection of the tax would be removed from the agricultural producer, and only be levied at the time when it entered into the consumption of the country, either as an article of export or as an article of consumption in manufactures. That was the proposition of the Senate. The House, it seems, would not agree to that; and the result is a compromise. If there is any mode by which we can keep the tax at two cents, and avoid raising it to three cents, I am rather disposed to join with my friend from Indiana in that project; but it is well known that in a bill like this, involving a multitude of amendments, several hundred I judge from the number acted upon, there must be some yielding by each House. That the tax on cotton is an exceptional tax, that it is probably not justifiable on the principles of political economy, and that it will not be long continued, I think is generally admitted in the Senate, because it is a tax upon a raw agricultural product; and that it will soon pass away I have no doubt; but the question is now whether we will continue the controversy with the House, ask another committee of conference, and endanger the passage of this great bill, a grand bill of relief, merely on account of a dispute about imposing, for this year, an additional tax of one cent a pound on cotton. The Senate proposed two cents. The Senate by a very large vote yielded the principle of the tax; and the only question is, whether it shall be for this year two cents or three cents a pound. If there can be any way pointed out by which we can reduce the tax to two cents, I am disposed to adopt it.

The Senator from Indiana alludes to another subject which is not yet before the Senate, that is the tariff bill now under debate in the House of Representatives. It seems to me it is rather premature to bring that question here. It is hardly fair to suppose that because the House may pass the tariff bill in an offensive shape to the Senator, therefore the Senate will do so. He anticipates the action of the Senate. I do not think it is fair to do that. I will not follow him in that discussion. When the tariff bill comes here, we can then decide upon the various questions that are involved in it. My own idea is that we dare not and will not in the passage of any tariff bill surrender the ample revenue we receive from duties on imported goods. We will not pass any tariff bill which will yield up that revenue on any idea of protection or anything else. If, however, we can levy larger duties on imported goods, yielding us a larger revenue in gold, without materially disturbing our commercial interests, we will certainly do so; we will be bound to do so. Every civilized country in modern times looks to duties on imported goods as a fruitful source of revenue. If we can derive all our revenues from duties on imported goods, we are justified in doing so. That has been the policy for years, and no nation will ever resort to a system of internal taxation when it can raise sufficient revenue by duties on imported goods. I believe even the Democratic party would go so far as to say that all that can be raised from imported goods for revenue should be raised, rather than to resort to internal taxation. If there are classes of articles the duty on which may be raised by a tariff so as to yield us a greater revenue, we are justified in resorting to such a tariff, and we will do so. But the idea that we intend to destroy all the commercial interests of this country, that we intend at a single blow to destroy all our commerce, and all the revenue from imported goods, is simply preposterous. I do not believe that such a plan will be proposed in the Senate, nor acceded to if adopted in the House; but it is sufficient to say that it is premature to discuss that question at this time. The bill will come to us in a few days, and then there will be time enough to discuss that question.

I come back to the point that is now under consideration, and that is this: the only point upon which there is a vital disagreement between the two Houses, upon which there is probably any disagreement between the Senator from Indiana and myself, is whether we shall yield one cent additional tax on cotton in order to secure the passage of this bill. If he can show me that we can secure the passage of this bill, giving its bountiful relief to all branches of our industrial interests, without yielding to a tax of more than two cents a pound on cotton, I will join with him in the effort. But I fear from the statement made to me by the gentlemen who served on this conference committee that the House is set on this proposition, and therefore we should probably endanger the passage of the bill by prolonging the controversy on this point.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It was hardly necessary upon this question for the Senator from Ohio to refer to the income tax, and in that connection to say that New York and New England paid the greater proportion of that. The income tax, sir, is uniform upon the citizens of all the States, and if the West and Northwest do not pay so much of the income tax as the eastern States, it is because their incomes are less; and unless we have an equal system, a just system of legislation in regard to the interests of all sections, our income tax will always be less than that of New England and New York. We have rich lands, lands that ought to produce to us very largely. We have a country which ought to make the people very rich, and it will be so if we have equal and just legislation.

I do not agree with the Senator that Indiana and Ohio have no interest in this question of the cotton tax. His argument is that Indiana and Ohio have no interest that is prejudiced by this legislation. I do not agree with him. Indiana and Ohio produce corn, wheat, flour, bacon, beef, which ought to seek a market in the southern States. It is the interest of Ohio and Indiana that the southern States should be most fruitful, that they should again be restored to their condition of wealth and prosperity. It is the interest of the farmer in Indiana as much as it is the interest of the farmers in Louisiana that the cotton crop should be a rich and a productive one, for when the southern people produce their cotton, and find a market abroad and in New England, they are able to buy from us the surplus of our productions.

We are directly, immediately interested in the prosperity of the southern crops.

It is not our interest that the southern people should leave off the production of cotton; it is not our interest that cotton should be taxed out of production; it is our interest that it should be encouraged so that the people of the South may produce that article in the production of which we do not compete and cannot compete. We want the southern States to produce the largest possible cotton crop that we may sell to the southern States our surplus. It is the only convenient and cheap market that we have. The Ohio and the Mississippi rivers carry our heavy productions to this southern market, and if we but allow the southern people again to be restored to their condition of prosperity, we in the West have our convenient and natural market and will receive from that market the wealth to which we are entitled.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Indiana tells us that the people of the West have a direct and immediate interest in the culture of cotton and in the revival of prosperity in the southern States. Have the people of Indiana any more interest in that than the people of Massachusetts? Have the people of the West any more interest in the growth of cotton than the people of New England? Is there a stronger desire in the West that cotton shall grow and that the southern States shall prosper than there is in New England or New York or Pennsylvania? This tax on cotton is not a New England inspiration. It does not come from Massachusetts. I think that if it were submitted to Massachusetts to-day she would not vote for it. I have received innumerable letters during this session against a tax on cotton from men of intelligence and character and large business men in my State.

A Massachusetts man cannot turn his hand to anything that is not taxed in this bill; and I say here to-day that our internal revenue system, which has been put upon the country to pay the expenses of the war, bears heavily, and more heavily, upon New York and New England than upon any other portion of the country. There is hardly any industry in Massachusetts that is not hunted out and taxed by your internal revenue system. But how is it with the great agricultural sections of the country? They are hardly touched at all, and men of wealth, living on large farms, having good incomes, under the system of letting off persons under $800, pay no income tax. Then there is a provision in this bill, which was well enough in time of war, when we had to submit to anything and everything, but which is utterly unjust now, making a discrimination against persons having incomes over $5,000, and making them pay ten per cent. It is unjust, and it bears with a heavy hand on some portions of the country.

The Senator tells us that a protective tariff is to come here, and he gives the Senate and the country to understand that that tariff originated in New England. I deny it. I say that this new tariff is a western measure. It had its origin in the West; it is to take care of western interests; and the New England manufacturers will be taxed from forty to fifty million dollars a year on one article annually for the next five years, if it passes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is that?

Mr. WILSON. The article of wool. Sir, Massachusetts has nothing whatever in that tariff bill as it stands before the other House to-day. There is not a thing in it by which her interests are protected. It may perhaps be for the general interests of the country to pass a tariff bill, but unless the pending bill be modified, and modified largely, I will not vote for it, and I hope every Massachusetts man in Congress will vote against it.

Sir, I want this cry to stop here and stop now. Whatever tariff you may pass is not called for by Massachusetts. We are content with things as they are, with the tariff as it is. We take your internal revenue bill as you pass it, and will pay our share under it; but I want the Senator from Indiana to understand, and his people to understand, and the people of the West to understand, and the western newspapers who are talking about it to understand, that the proposition to increase the tariff does not come from the State of Massachusetts, that her interests are not promoted by it, and that, as one of her representatives, if the bill comes here and is not modified largely from what it now is, I intend to vote against it, and I hope every Massachusetts man in Congress will do the same.

We have had enough instances of protection being called for by new interests in the Northwest, and by the great iron and coal interests of Pennsylvania, and then when it has been given, persons going up and down the country denouncing New England as the sinner. If there be any sin in the tariff now take it to yourselves and hug it to your bosoms. We have had no lot or part in it. It is not ours. It has no New England call for it; and I believe the ablest and best manufacturers in New England are opposed to it, do not believe a word in it, believe their interests will not be promoted by it, and are content with the tariff as it is. Others may say that the general interests of the country may require that there should be some modification of the tariff, but not our special or political interests. I want the Senator from Indiana to understand, and I want his people to understand, that this tariff had its origin in the Northwest, to take care of the wool-growers of the Northwest.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish to ask him who is the author of the tariff bill in the House of Representatives, whether that bill came from any western man, or whether it is not from an eastern man. Was it not reported to the House by an eastern man?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. MORRILL, a Representative from Vermont, who is chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the bill; but I say here, and I want the Senator to understand it, that the beginning of the tariff movement this year originated with the wool-growing interests of the Northwest. They commenced it, they began the agitation; they visited all parts of the country and tried to induce the leading men of New England to go into the movement, who feared to go into it, because they said, "If you increase the duty on wool you must also increase the duty on woolsens, and we fear this thing." I tell you it has been imposed upon us, and whoever charges, from whatever section of the country, that the present effort to make a new tariff came from Massachusetts or from New England, is altogether mistaken.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am very much in hopes now that the tariff bill can be beaten. I do not think that it can receive a western support, because it is not a revenue measure. It is not claimed to be a revenue measure by its author, nor does the author, in the able speech with which he introduced the bill into the House of Representatives, claim for it the positions assumed by the Senator from Massachusetts. I was reading, on yesterday evening, his able speech which accompanied the introduction of that bill into the House of Representatives from the Committee of Ways and Means, and I think the Senator is not sustained by the authoritative declarations of the chairman of the committee when he reported the bill to the House. I recommend to the Senator to examine the statements made by the Representative who introduced the bill from the committee. I think he will find that that bill is claimed by its author, the chairman of the committee, as a protective instead of a revenue measure; but I will join with the Senator from Massachusetts in laboring for its defeat. I am willing to give to New England and Pennsylvania and New York all the protection that the very high tariff for revenue will now give, and that is all they have a right to ask. That revenue is to be very large. The condition of the Treasury requires it to be large. Incidental to revenue there is a very large protection, such a protection as is given to the labor of no other portion of the country; and if the income of New England is so much greater than the income of the West, it is not because we cultivate poor lands; it is not because our people are not frugal and industrious; it is because the advantages of the present system are so much against us and for another portion of the country.

Mr. WILSON. A single word in regard to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the other House, who reported the tariff bill. I think the Senator from Indiana, if he will inquire carefully into it, will find that the chairman of that committee was often, and very often, overborne by others from other sections of the country. I think he will find, too, that the high duty on wool and on iron was put on that bill not by the choice of the chairman of that committee. If I have watched his course aright, I think it has been to make a moderate tariff, and one that would take care of all sections of the country and excite the hostility of no considerable portion of our people.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. President, my individual judgment is and has been against any cotton tax, and also against a tax on sugar. I thought that certainly, in our present condition, after the people of the southern States had, in the course of the rebellion, lost their whole labor applicable to these productions, we ought not now to tax them. I reflected on what appeared to be the opinion of the majority of the members of this and the other House, and I came to the conclusion from their votes and from what they said, that there was a pre-determination to have a tax on cotton and to retain the tax on sugar. Seeing this, I thought we might make the tax on cotton two cents, and might reduce somewhat the tax on sugar, and I so voted when the bill was before the Senate. When I was appointed a member of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, I found that the House of Representatives still retained its predilection for a tax of five cents a pound upon cotton, and the Senate sustained the Finance Committee in proposing two cents. That was one of the difficulties among a great many that were to be reconciled.

Now, in legislation it has not been my habit to set down a principle from which under no circumstances will I depart. Though I am as earnest as almost any one to carry my views—and I was exceedingly earnest in relation to the cotton tax and the sugar tax, because I did not believe the people could bear those taxes, and I do not now believe they can fairly bear them—I will not resist this report. After much deliberation we finally settled on all the points of difficulty except the cotton tax, I think, pretty fairly. I think the House committee acted liberally and fairly, and I think the Senate committee acted liberally and fairly in coming to an agreement. Both parties determined to adhere to the cotton tax as their respective Houses had fixed it. We offered a compromise which they declined, and I was exceedingly sorry, and expressed myself so when it was declined. Finally, however, a compromise was made settling the tax at three cents. I felt that it was within the discretion of the committee to reconcile the difference if they could; and not bring it up for discussion before the two Houses again. I know very well how the feelings can be harrowed up by discussions on points like this. I know that the discussion runs into the rebellion and all the feelings that have been engendered by it on both sides. I see nothing to be done now but to concur in the report, or else there will be a long delay and interminable discussion which will not tend to harmonize the two sections of the country.

I intend to vote for this report, and then to vote for the levee bill which has been introduced, so as to give back, in the shape of an appropriation for that purpose, as much of this money as it will take to put the fields in order and put up the levees so that cotton may be made. The southern representatives on this floor for a long period consisted of patriotic and conservative men, and I look to them again on this floor to join the conservative men and hold the balance in favor of a conservative Government. I hope and trust to live to see that day, and I hope we shall not by long discussions upon points of this kind widen the breach. My judgment, as I have said, is against any tax upon cotton, and if I were to act upon extreme points and extreme views, I would hold that there should be no tax; but still all legislation is a compromise of conflicting opinions. Some men yield, and some do not. I am one of those who are in favor of yielding when it is necessary to accomplish an object.

Mr. POMEROY. I only desire to say a single word in reply to the Senator from Indiana, who thought it strange that any Senator representing a western State should think of concurring in this report of the committee of conference, especially that portion of it relating to the tax upon cotton. Representing in part a western State, I do not forget that I am also a Senator of the United States, and that in arranging taxes for the whole country we cannot look simply to the interests of our own State or section. An appeal to a section upon a question of such public interest as this looks to me like an effort to divide the country rather than to unite it.

I have been, I confess, taking the tax bill as a whole, admirably well pleased with it, because it is a great improvement upon the bill of last year. I did not vote for the tax upon cotton, not because the people of my State had any particular interest in that production—we always raised some, but a very little—but because since the rebellion has closed there is now an effort to raise cotton by free labor, and it is an experiment. The cotton interests in this country are going to a great extent into hands that have never raised cotton before. The committee have been careful to encourage the production of iron by striking off all the taxes. Under the old bill the iron manufacturers for manufacturing the simplest form, like railroad iron, paid eight dollars a ton, while under this tax bill they pay not a cent. I am glad of that. It is done because we want to encourage the production of iron. I use that only as an illustration of a number of other articles. Now, I want to encourage the production of cotton. It is as valuable to us as gold. We are undertaking to raise it under a new system of labor, and at this crisis I think it exceedingly unfortunate to put a tax upon it. That, however, is only one item in this bill, and because I regard that as unfortunate, I shall not go against the whole bill; for, as a whole, it is certainly a very great improvement upon any tax bill we have had before.

The Senator speaks about the agriculture of the West being taxed. In reply to that I will say, in the first place, that there is no reason why one interest of the country should not be taxed as well as another. This bill is peculiarly favorable to agriculturists, and for no reason that I know of. I do not know why agriculture is any more honorable or is any more entitled to exemption than any other interest; and yet we exempt it; and I am very glad of that, because the section I represent is an agricultural community, and that is the great interest of the country. But on principle I know no reason why that interest should be particularly protected in tax bills. The manufacturing interests of the country are as deserving of protection as the agricultural, and so are the commercial interests, and so are all the interests of the people. They are all deserving, and no one of them should be discriminated against; but in this bill I find hardly anything raised by agriculturists taxed except, perhaps, cotton and whisky and tobacco. So far as whisky and tobacco are concerned, the tax comes ultimately, almost all of it, out of the consumer; and I have long believed that if persons desired to consume those luxuries, as they are called, they could very well afford to pay for them, and I do not hear much grumbling against their paying for them. Persons who dance at such a shrine as that should always pay the fiddler, and pay him well. I do not think that that is any too high; I think it should be at least as high as it is. My own opinion is that this bill is such an improvement upon any other tax bill that has ever passed Congress that it will be received in the country with joy, and the report of the committee of conference should be accepted, notwithstanding there may be in it one or two items which as individuals and as representing particular sections of the country we might desire to have changed. As a whole I shall go for it, and I think we ought to adopt the report of the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I really hope the Senate is ready to take the vote. Everybody is aware that this report must be taken as a whole, and I suppose everybody is pretty well satisfied that it will be taken, the whole of it, just as it is. If Senators are disposed, because of the cotton tax or any other, to vote that we shall have no bill at all after all the labor that has been given to this, they will so vote. I do not pretend to argue the matter; I will only say that it is very important that the bill should be sent to the House of Representatives in season to get it through the House to-day. The bill has yet to be enrolled, and that will take a good while. If gentlemen really are determined that the love of talking shall conquer the heat, if they will sit here to talk instead of acting on a matter about which the ultimate result is perfectly well understood, be it so. I hope, however, that they will be willing to take the question and not argue the tariff in advance. But if they do argue the tariff in advance I hope they will agree that when the tariff bill comes here they will consider their speeches as made and not then give them to us over again.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not about to argue the tariff bill, nor to argue the propriety of this particular tax. I do not understand that any portion of the report is objected to except that which relates to the tax on cotton. The report contains recommendations on a variety of other subjects, to which there has been as yet no objection. I assume, therefore, that all those portions of the report are satisfactory in the judgment of the Senate. I rise now merely for the purpose of saying that I think there should be no tax upon cotton, or if there should be any it should be fixed at the lowest sum that the Senate can get it adjusted at. The Senate last year fixed it at two cents, and we adhered to that at the present session. The other House placed it at five cents. A compromise between the two bodies, under the auspices of the committee of conference, fixes the tax at three cents. I believe the production will bear that tax; but I think it will certainly not bear the tax which the House had determined upon. Although I think this tax is unnecessarily high, yet as it apparently is the best which can be done for the producers of the commodity I shall vote to support the report of the committee.

The report was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another question on the bill. The committee recommend a change in the text of the bill, which was not in controversy between the two Houses.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Only striking out three words. There are three words in one section, which are inapplicable on account of changes made in other parts of the bill, and retaining them would only lead to embarrassment. The proposition is a mere verbal change, and it becomes important in reference to the proper construction of the section. We did not feel authorized to change it, but recommend the two Houses to do it, as has been done in other cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recommendation of the committee is in these words: "the committee of conference further recommend that the words 'by the collector' in line nineteen, page 140 of the text of the engrossed bill, be stricken out." It has been ruled frequently by the Presiding Officer of the Senate that a matter not in controversy between the two Houses was not in the power of a committee of conference and could not be acted on by either House. The Chair will be advised, however, to receive any motion which may be made in regard to the matter.

Mr. CLARK. It may be done by unanimous consent, by the consent of both Houses. If we agree to it and the other House agree to it, it may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would make a change in the bill, as a matter of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the engrossing clerk could be directed by a resolution passed by the two Houses to make the change.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This has been done before.

Mr. JOHNSON. It cannot be done without the consent of the other House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Of course not. It is no part of the report proper, but is a mere recommendation, and if concurred in by both Houses it is done. It is a mere verbal change, to which there can be no objection.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that it is only by virtue of the parliamentary law that it is not within the power of a committee of conference or within the power of either House to amend a portion of a bill which has been agreed to by both Houses; but it is clearly within the power of the two Houses, both consenting, to dispense with that parliamentary law and agree to an amendment of the bill, even where the text of the bill has been agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. POMEROY. There is no difficulty about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the Senate concur in the recommendation of the committee of conference, regarding a correction in the text of the bill which was not in controversy between the two Houses. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the correction is ordered to be made by the Senate.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 3d instant, the following bills and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 30) to create an additional land district in the State of Oregon;

An act (S. No. 193) granting lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, in that State;

An act (S. No. 219) granting certain lands in the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a ship-canal to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the lake known as Lac La Belle, in said State;

An act (S. No. 243) to extend the time for the reversion to the United States of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of the said road;

An act (S. No. 813) to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glynnol oil, and other substances therein named;

An act (S. No. 317) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 110) to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 113) for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Cuyahoga river over and upon the Government piers at Cleveland, Ohio.

And that on the 4th instant he had approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. No. 37) making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas;

An act (S. No. 58) granting land to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from Corvallis to the Aquina bay;

An act (S. No. 56) granting a pension to Mary C. Hamilton;

An act (S. No. 156) making additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State;

An act (S. No. 168) to provide for the disposal of certain lands therein named;

An act (S. No. 215) concerning certain lands granted to the State of Nevada;

An act (S. No. 299) granting a pension to Jane E. Miles;

An act (S. No. 314) for the relief of Sarah J. Purcell; and

An act (S. No. 368) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret A. Farran.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th of June, 1867.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 125) granting aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th of June, 1867, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 191) to amend an act making a grant of lands to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of the railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior, approved May 5, 1864; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 149) declaratory of the law of bounty.

PAYMENT FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is now properly before the Senate, being Senate bill No. 217.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask the honorable member from Vermont who has charge of that bill to consent to let it lie for the present that a vote may be taken on my resolution which was pending this morning. I think there will be no further discussion upon it.

Mr. POLAND. I have no objection to that if the resolution will take no time.

Mr. CLARK. I think there may be some discussion on it. Let us go on with this bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 217) to provide for the payment for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WILSON to strike out in lines six and seven of section one the words "or which may have been taken by such officer without giving such receipt."

Mr. HOWE. Is that amendment open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HOWE. Will it be in order, if those words are stricken out, to move then to insert other words in their place?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be.

Mr. HOWE. Then I shall reserve the amendment which I was about to propose.

Mr. CLARK. I hope this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will not be made. The bill provides that where property has been taken and a receipt given, and also where property has been taken by a proper officer of the Government authorized to direct the taking of the property, and no such receipt has been given, the property shall be paid for. Now, I will thank any Senator to tell me why there should be a distinction in the two cases if the claim in each is fairly proved. The receipt is for the purpose of proof. If when the property was taken the officer taking it gave a receipt to the man from whom it was taken that he had so taken it and that the man was entitled to be paid for it, then that man had the proof that his property was taken; but where a man can clearly prove, aside from the receipt, that his property has gone for the benefit of the Government, that it was taken by a proper officer and used by the Army, pray let any Senator tell me why he should not be paid for it. What is the ground of the claim? Simply that you had the man's property for public uses and ought to pay him. Ought you not to pay him just as much where you have had his property and given no receipt as where you have had that property and given a receipt? And if you allow the man to be paid who has a receipt and not the man who has no receipt, then you make the officer who gave the receipt the power to determine the right of the man to payment; and perhaps the man who has the receipt may not be a loyal man and may not have so good a right to be paid as the man who has no receipt. The ground of the claim is the taking of the property and the use of it for the Government, not the receipt the man may have from the officer; and is it not as just to pay the man who has no receipt as to pay the man who has the receipt, if he be a loyal man and you have had his property?

And now one word, Mr. President, in regard to this bill, to its general provisions, and what, in my judgment, the Senate ought to do. I know it is objected that where you have taken the property of a man in a disloyal State, whether he be a loyal man or not, you ought not to pay him because he was living in the enemy's country. Gentlemen undertake to say that the law is that when two parts of a country are at war as we have been at war, all citizens on one side of the line are to be considered as enemies of the country; that is, everybody who was in the disloyal States is to be considered as an enemy to the Government, no matter how loyal he was himself, no matter how much he may have sighed for the appearance of the Union Army, no matter what aid he may have given the Union Army in its progress; he may have fed it, he may have housed the soldier, he may have taken his gun and gone off in your Army, and yet if he lived within that country he is an enemy of the country.

I know, sir, that in deciding certain prize cases in the Supreme Court the court laid down this rule; but when the Government comes to deal with its own citizen, and the citizen comes to the Government for relief, can the Government say to that citizen, if he has been a loyal man, "Because you have lived within that section of the country I have no aid for you?" Why, sir, in the State of Tennessee, which was within this disloyal country, we raised how many soldiers?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Thirty thousand.

Mr. CLARK. Thirty thousand soldiers in one State within the lines of this disloyal country. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan if they were enemies.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir; they were not enemies because they were in the service of the United States as soldiers under the military organization.

Mr. CLARK. They were not enemies, though within the lines of the rebellion, because they were in the service of the United States. Then tell me if a man living by the side of those thirty thousand soldiers in Tennessee who gave you his property to feed those soldiers, was not also in the service of the United States, and entitled to be paid.

Mr. HOWARD. Do you want an answer now?

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator chooses to give an answer, if he has any answer for it. It is the man who serves the country and maintains his loyalty to the country that is a friend of the Government. He may have been an old man who could not march with a regiment, who could not carry his gun, but he may have said to the Government, "Here is all I have; take it for your service," and the Government may have taken it from him and left him poor and almost penniless, and shall that Government turn round when peace has come and say to him, "I will not pay you for this property?" Will the Government say to the soldiers, "We will pay you eleven dollars or thirteen dollars a month, and to the man who gives you rations we will not pay one cent?" Is that the justice of your Government? Is that the justice of the Government which will make your Government be loved at home and respected abroad? Why, sir, it was to maintain the authority of the Government over this part of the country; nay, sir, it was to protect these very Union men to whom we owed protection in that country, that we strove in this fight.

I will not say, as the Senator from Michigan said, that he would not recommend his constituents to pay these loyal men. I say to you, sir, show me the loyal man that lived in that country and who suffered as some of those loyal men did, and not only will I advise my constituents to pay, but I will divide with him the last crust.

Mr. HOWARD. Perhaps you may have the opportunity.

Mr. CLARK. It may be that I may have an opportunity, and let the opportunity come. I will not throw around me, Mr. President, the dictum of the law that all within those lines are to be considered enemies. The man that struggled within those lines to preserve the Union deserves as much as he who struggled without the lines for his heart was as true to Union.

It is said to me, Mr. President, and it is said to the Senate, there were not many loyal men within these States. I do not undertake to say how many, but in the State of Tennessee we found thirty thousand loyal soldiers. In northern Alabama there were Union men, and true Union men. Everywhere there were more or less of them; and where I find one of these men, if he is the only man in that Sodom, he shall have the protection of the Government, so far as I can give it; and if he has been true and loyal within the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, if his loyalty has not been of the passive kind, but of that active kind which manifested itself all along for the Government, so much the more is he deserving.

Mr. President, we do not consider, I fear, what the loyal men in these districts have suffered. In New Hampshire, or anywhere in the northern part of the country, in New York and in the Northwest, it may have been an easy thing to have been a loyal man. A man may have gone with the current. It was a difficult thing to be a disloyal man; and if a man manifested any hostility to the Government he was apt to be surrounded by a crowd and mobbed and compelled to put out a flag and make a speech for the Government. But in the southern country, where the current was all the other way, where they were overborne by masses, it was a struggle, it was a life of heroism for a man to be a loyal man; and if through that struggle he maintains his loyalty, I ask anybody to tell me why, if you have had that man's property for the benefit of the Government, the Government should not pay him.

It is said by the Senator from Michigan and also by the Senator from Massachusetts that if we pass a bill of this kind we shall open the Treasury of the United States to claims for millions. It may be so, though I do not believe it to the extent to which they say, for there is nothing in the claims that have come before Congress up to the present time to justify any such remark; but suppose it were so, I ask the Senator from Michigan, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if they are going to shut up the Treasury and refuse justice to the men who ought to have the aid of the Government because men not deserving it may claim it. You cannot escape these claims; you may postpone them to-day, you may postpone them this session, you may postpone them the next session; but the claims will come, and the man whose property you have had, who has been a loyal man, will not be satisfied until the Government has done him justice; the public will not be satisfied until you have done your citizens justice; and you had better take the matter in hand while the proof is recent and can easily be made, and it can be shown on which side the man is, whether a loyal or disloyal man, and whether the Government have had his property or not, and how much. It had better be done now than done at a later day. There is within the records of the Committee on Claims a claim made by a citizen against this Government in what was called "the last war," the war of 1812, and at the time he presented his petition to Congress he asked only $450. It was refused him from year to year until in 1825 a commission was appointed by both Houses of Congress to value the property he had lost, and they valued it at $2,500. At the time he suffered the loss it could have been settled for $450; but as years rolled along, the claim kept increasing and the proof kept increasing until it swelled up to $2,500. It is the experience of everybody who has anything to do with these claims that the longer they lie the more uncertain they become, and the more the testimony on one side and the other accumulates the more you are apt to do injustice. Take the thing when it is new and recent, when the people standing around, the neighbors, know how the matter is, and decide it upon the testimony that is then presented to you, and you are vastly more likely to do justice than you are at some subsequent time.

But, Mr. President, Senators seem to have misapprehended somewhat the nature of this bill. It is a bill carefully prepared by the Judiciary Committee, guarded in every way that it could possibly I think be guarded, so far as they understood it; and it provides that where the claim is for over $500, the claimant shall go to the Court of Claims and make his proper proof before a judicial tribunal. There he is to be heard by his counsel upon his claim on one side, and the Government is to be heard by its counsel and its proofs on the other side, and the matter adjudicated as shall seem fair to the court. But as to those claims which are under $500, the committee thought it was hardly worth while to drive the claimant through a lawsuit in the Court of Claims. I was myself for fixing the amount at $300, and letting everybody who had a claim over $300 go to the Court of Claims; but the committee thought otherwise, and thought it would be well and safe to leave it with the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle these claims under $500; and I can say to the Senator from Massachusetts, I can say to the Senator from Michigan, that the experience has been that those accounting officers and the Quartermaster General and Commissary General have been hard enough in all conscience on those people who have any claims.

And now, sir, why should not this great Government be just to all its citizens? Why should the man who has been swept away by the current of secession, who was a loyal man, be cast out by the Government? Swept away by secession and then thrown out by his own Government, how hapless is his lot! Who would want to live under such a Government, who would praise such a Government, who would yield it respect? Sir, your Government must be founded upon its justice and must rely upon its justice, and its perpetuity rests upon its benevolence and the prosperity that it carries to all classes under it. I am not to be bound by any line between the loyal States and the disloyal States. I am for restoring in every proper way that part which was disloyal. Where there is justice in their claims I am for giving them their claims; and though they may have struck at my country's flag, where I can reach out to them the helping hand, if they be loyal now, if they accede to the terms of the Government, I am for receiving them and making the restoration and prosperity of the country complete.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My friend from New Hampshire is so very eloquent on this subject that I do not know but that I ought to yield to it. Still, it strikes me, after all, that there is some danger connected with this bill. There is a manifest distinction between cases where on the spot the officer who took the property gave a receipt for it, thus making proof at once, and cases that may be brought up hereafter to depend upon oral testimony entirely. Our officers were not over-anxious, I take it, to consider men as loyal in an enemy's country. It may be presumed, therefore, and I suppose it was the fact, that they exercised or tried to exercise a sound discretion on that subject, and did not give a receipt for property taken unless they were satisfied of the loyalty of the person. So far as that evidence thus taken on the spot goes, perhaps it may be relied upon with some considerable degree of safety. But it seems there are a great many cases—the argument of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire would rather tend to satisfy me that the cases are very numerous—where officers who took property of this description did not choose to give any receipts. The inference naturally, therefore, from that would be that they did not think the case a proper one for a receipt to be given, that they were not satisfied about the party's loyalty. We propose to legislate that, although a receipt has not been given, oral evidence may yet be taken to establish the fact, in the first place, of loyalty, and in the next place, that the property was actually taken and went to the use of the United States; and where that is made out, then that the same rule shall apply which applies to cases where the proper receipt was given upon the spot.

I think this would be a dangerous practice. It would be dangerous for several reasons. In the first place, from the evidence that I have had and the observation I have made with reference to other cases, the easiest thing in the world will be to prove loyalty. I think when it comes to matters of claim it will be pretty well made out that there was never anybody down in that country who was otherwise than loyal, but that they were all forced into the rebellion. Who forced them in, inasmuch as they were all forced in, we cannot exactly tell; but the argument now is, whenever there is a claim against the Government, or whenever anybody wants a pardon or anything of that sort, that there was compulsion used from somewhere to force the whole population into rebellion, and the evidence is forthcoming at once. From the regard which has been paid to oaths, so far as I have observed, and to the taking of oaths, I do not think it will be very difficult to establish loyalty in any given case, or to make out the amount of any claim, or to prove anything that is necessary.

Then again there is difficulty arising from the meaning of "loyalty." That, I think, ought to be defined in the law. If you leave that to a clerk in the War Department, very much will depend upon what sort of a clerk you have. This will be running along for a course of years, and we cannot tell what may be the character of the man to decide the question; he may be one of these "loyal" people himself; and very likely he will be, to settle all these claims on oral testimony that may be adduced there. Thus it will be within the power of a clerk in the War Department (because after all in the office of the Quartermaster General it goes through the hands of clerks in the first place) to settle all these questions. Taking the course of time that this will run over, taking the chances as they will occur, and all the difficulties about amounts, I really do think that in all cases except those that were settled upon the spot by the officer who took the property by giving his receipt for it, it would be very unsafe and unwise to open this door to extraneous proof with regard not only to the character of the claimant but the amount of the claim, and everything about it; and although that power is limited here to $500, yet a great many claims of $500 make considerable of a sum.

For that reason, and outside of the fact that we had very excellent soldiers from some parts of the disloyal region, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. The case is not like that of the soldier. My friend from New Hampshire asked the question, if you would recognize the loyalty of the soldier and take care of him why not of his neighbor who furnished the property? So I would. But with regard to the soldier the rolls show the fact; it is easily established whether he was serving the country or not; it does not depend on oral testimony; it is a matter that is established as easily as anything else that is matter of record. Everything of that sort is plain and palpable; but when you come to oral testimony taken as this must be, and to claims to be settled as these must be, I think it is much better that they should go to the court and be settled judicially rather than in the way proposed.

Mr. CLARK. Those go to the court beyond $500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know; but many claims of $500 will amount to a considerable sum. Although I agree that I would in some cases pay such claims if exhibited, yet I would scrutinize them very carefully, in the first place as to the character of the claim itself, and in the next place as to the character of the claimant. I do not go quite so far as the honorable Senator from Michigan, but I do not know but that his view is the correct one after all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When this bill was brought forward I had grave doubts about its expediency, and I am not now fully satisfied that it ought to pass in its present shape, although I think it has been improved by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois. I do not intend absolutely to commit myself against the payment of any and all claims that may have accrued to loyal men in the southern States during the late rebellion; and I do not feel much inclined to commit myself absolutely to the payment of all such claims. I think that each claim must stand upon its own popular circumstances; and my objection to this bill, if I have any objection, is not to any law providing for the payment of claims held by loyal men in the southern States so much as to the mode and the manner provided in this bill for the settlement or adjustment of these claims. I confess I have some apprehensions as to the effect of this bill upon that ground.

A man under the provisions of this bill is not entitled to recover for the property which has been taken by showing that he is the owner of the property and then by showing that it has been taken and appropriated by the Government, but his right of recovery depends upon his loyalty. Now, loyalty is something about which men widely differ, and I think I may safely say that when a man's loyalty is brought in question, the decision depends as much upon the sympathy and opinions of the judge as it does upon the views and action of the man whose case is brought to judgment.

This bill proposes, in the first place, to refer a class of these cases to the Quartermaster General, who is to decide as to the loyalty of the claimant, and if persons making claims before him are found, in his judgment, to be loyal, they are to be paid, or judgment is to be rendered in their favor, and Congress is to appropriate the necessary amount of money to pay that judgment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They are paid directly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, sir, how do we know what views the Quartermaster General will take of this question of loyalty? I venture to say that I can pick out three men in this Senate who would constitute a tribunal whose judgment on the question of loyalty under this law would appropriate millions of dollars more out of the public Treasury than the judgment of three other men whom I could pick out in this Senate to constitute a similar tribunal for judgment upon such questions, and not because there was any difference in the merits of the claims, but because there are certain men here who regard loyalty as one thing, and certain other men who regard loyalty as another and a different thing.

I do not know who the Quartermaster General may be and what his views may be upon the question of loyalty. I have heard southern men complain of those people who claim to have been loyal men during this war, and say that many of them were property-holders, men of influence in the South; they agitated the question of secession, they fired up the southern mind, and when the collision of arms came, when they had inveigled the poor and the ignorant into the war, then they stood back in order to protect and preserve their property and took no part; they were Union men when it was to their advantage to be Union men, and rebels when the safety of their persons and property required them to be rebels; and they preserved that state of neutrality through the war while their dupes were fighting the battles of the rebellion; and since the rebellion is overcome they, because they did not bear arms, because they did not go into the ranks of the war, come forward now and claim it as a peculiar merit that they are the Union men of the South.

Now, sir, I think it is a question yet to be determined which class of men in the southern States is the more reliable, which class of men are those who are more willing to submit to the authority and acquiesce in the control of the Federal Government—those who remained at home, skulked all responsibility, who were one thing or another thing as circumstances required, or those men who went into the battle-field and experienced all the hardships and sufferings and calamities of this war, and know something of what it costs to fight against the Government of the United States. I suppose that the men whose property was protected in this way by this sort of neutrality are the men who are to obtain the advantages of this bill, while poor men who were misled by these leaders of public opinion there, who were induced to go into the war and carry arms, are to be excluded from its benefits, and if any of their property was taken they are not to have any advantages under this bill. Now, sir, I question whether those men who were able to say that they were loyal during the war are entitled more to the protection of the Government than this other class of men, and I doubt very much whether they are entitled to more credit, under any circumstances, or favor at the hands of this Government.

Here is a class of cases to be referred to the Quartermaster General; then there is another class of cases to be referred to the Commissary General, and parties are to appear before these respective officers with their claims, and they are to establish their loyalty. Now, how is that loyalty to be established? Suppose a man comes to the quartermaster from the State of Mississippi, in what way is he to prove his loyalty? Can it be proved in any other way except by the production of affidavits? Will anybody be able to testify as to the loyalty of that man except his neighbors, those who were acquainted with him during the war? And they will testify on that subject according to their views of loyalty; and they will swear, and they may be conscientious in it, that in their opinion this man was a loyal man because he may have before the commencement of hostilities expressed his opposition to the rebellion; but he was coerced, it will be claimed; a draft was ordered; there was a military force organized to impress men into the rebel service, and he was compelled either by actual force or the fear of actual compulsion to go into the rebellion; and in that way a case can be made out of loyalty on the part of the claimant. This man has a claim against the Government, and his neighbor has a similar claim. The thing may be arranged and understood there among different persons who have claims against the Government. I do not wish to make any wholesale charges against these people; I do not wish to say that they are more inclined to perjury than other people; but we know that there is a very large number of persons in that section of country who are enemies of the Government and regard it as lawful, under the circumstances, for them, if possible, to indemnify themselves for the injuries which they say this Government inflicted upon them while they were trying to defend their rights, and we must expect that that feeling will have more or less influence upon the judgment and the opinions of those men.

I say, therefore, Mr. President, that notwithstanding this bill seems pretty carefully drawn, the difficulty is inherent in the case, and I am afraid that if Congress now by this bill puts the adjustment of all these claims, which are innumerable and which amount to millions, beyond its control it will have occasion hereafter to regret it. I know it will be a great relief to Congress, and particularly to the Committee of Claims, to have all this business transferred to the Departments and to the Court of Claims. I find that from the provisions of this bill the large claims are to be submitted to the Court of Claims. The evidence before that tribunal must consist of depositions taken in the southern States where these people reside. I do not suppose that it is expected that witnesses will come before the court and orally testify upon the subject; but the evidence will be taken by depositions; and any lawyer who has had any considerable experience or practice knows that it is very unsafe to depend upon depositions for evidence, because you cannot make the witness appear upon the paper, and he may concoct a story, and he may be shrewd enough to avoid a cross-examination which would expose the falsity of that story, when the whole effect of his testimony will be to produce a false impression. These judges are not allowed to go beyond the record; they must take the depositions, and they must be controlled by those depositions and by the preponderance of evidence as it appears upon the papers. Now, there is information abroad in this country that is of great value in passing upon these questions that cannot be allowed to reach the ears of a judge, that cannot be received by a court of justice—information that is satisfactory to any reasonable mind, at the same time that it does not come in the shape of lawful evidence to be submitted to a court of justice; and we, in adjusting these claims, ought to be in a situation where we can avail ourselves of this information, whatever it may be.

While I do not wish to be understood as saying that I am opposed to the payment of all claims that may originate in the southern States, while I am ready to concede that cases may arise there where the person whose property has been taken should be indemnified, yet I think there may be cases where it requires the examination of persons whose loyalty is of a certain complexion; and I would much rather that Congress would appoint a special commission of persons whose views and opinions upon that subject are known and can be depended upon to act on these questions than to refer them to those persons whose views and opinions and feelings are not known.

There is a great difference of opinion, as is generally supposed, between the executive department and Congress on that point; and I suppose if the executive department was to pass upon questions arising under this bill, many more millions of money would be allowed than would be allowed by the majority in Congress, because there is a difference of opinion as to what was or was not loyal. At present, until there are further developments, until I have more light on this subject, I am determined to vote to retain the control of the subject in Congress. I am not disposed to be illiberal or vindictive; I am willing to be kind and generous to these people; I am willing to do everything I can to promote their material interests. I have only one point to make against them, and that is that, in my judgment, it is not safe at this time to put the political power of this country in their hands; but whatever I can do to promote their material interests I am willing to do.

I do not take this position from any vindictive or illiberal spirit toward these people, but because I regard it as unsafe at this time, now upon the very reel of the rebellion, before public opinion is settled, before we fully understand the circumstances of these people at this particular time, to pass this bill and commit Congress to the payment of all these claims.

This bill is more important in my judgment as a precedent than it is in its effect upon these particular claims. We are informed that with this bill is another bill that is now lying upon our tables to pay loyal claimants for all property that was destroyed by General Sheridan in his celebrated and effective raid through the Shenandoah valley. Pass this bill, and it seems to me, the argument possesses great force and cogency that if you pay a loyal man for property which an officer took in the prosecution of this war, why not pay a loyal man for property which an officer destroyed in the prosecution of this war? And so if you take this step, the next step will be to pay for the destruction of the property of loyal men in the southern States; and I do not know but that it may be followed up finally by an argument in favor of paying the loyal men of the South for the slaves that were taken during the prosecution of the war. It is urged by a large minority of the people of this country at this time that loyal men are entitled to be paid for their slaves taken in the prosecution of this war, because they were not responsible for the rebellion; their slaves were their property; that property was taken away from them without any wrong on their part, and therefore the Government ought to indemnify them. I am afraid of the first step in this direction, and I think we should take that step with great care and with great caution. We may be compelled to take it; but I do not believe the time has now come when we ought to take this step in this direction—a step that seems to me to be going to the full extent of committing ourselves, not only to the payment of these claims, but to the payment of the loyal men of the South for what they suffered during this rebellion.

Sir, you can never pay the loyal men of the North for what they have suffered in the suppression of this rebellion. Can you pay the father whose son sleeps beneath the southern soil for the loss of that son? We must be very particular to pay a southern man—perhaps a man who helped to fan the flame of this southern rebellion, who helped to plunge the country into the abyss of civil war—for a mule or a horse or anything that was taken by the Federal Army in the prosecution of the war; but how can we ever pay the innocent people of the North who lost their fathers and their brothers and their sons in their efforts to suppress this rebellion? That people should lose in war is one of its unavoidable calamities; but we who bore the burden of the war, it seems to me, ought not now to undertake fully and completely to indemnify the South for all it suffered until we can in some way indemnify the North for what it expended of blood and treasure in its efforts to suppress this rebellion.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I think this is one of the most interesting questions that the Senate has been called upon to consider, if not one of the most important. There are two or three things I wish to say about it before the vote is taken. First, I wish to say in allusion to the remarks that have just been submitted by the Senator from Oregon, that if there has been any war between the North and the South I have not heard of it. If there had been any such war, perhaps we should have had to settle the account upon a little different basis from that upon which I apprehend this account should be settled. I understand we have had a war on our hands, but not a war between the North and the South. It has been a war between the people of the United States and their enemies. It is very true that we found the most of their enemies in the southern portion of the United States; we did not find them all there. It is very true we found the most of the friends of the United States in the northern States of the Union; I believe we did not find all of them in that section of the country. The war was between those two parties, the people of the United States and their enemies. We did send our armies into the southern States of the Union, as we sent them into the northern States of the Union when we had occasion; but when we sent them into one State or another I think we sent them for the double purpose of bearing the justice and the protection of the Government to our friends, and the rebukes and the penalties of the Government to our enemies. If we sent them for any other purpose, their mission was a mistake; we had better have kept them at home.

This bill is one of the proposed means for settling up some of the transactions which took place during this war. Wherever we sent our armies they had to be supported; and they were entitled to that support just as much in a southern as in a northern State; and if any portion of that support was contributed by a friend of the United States in a southern State he was just as much entitled to pay for it as if it was contributed by a friend of the United States in the northern States.

The Senator from Michigan has stated, and I believe rather insisted upon, the idea that by our law all of the people in what were called the rebelling States were the enemies of the United States, declared so by a proclamation of the President in pursuance of an act of Congress. I have two things to say upon that proposition: first, that I do not know when the President of the United States declared all those people to be enemies of the United States, nor when he was authorized to make such a declaration; and secondly, I have to say that it was not in the power of the President to make him who was a friend in fact of the Government an enemy in law, nor was it in the power of Congress to authorize him to so transform one who was a friend in fact into an enemy in law. I am a strict constructionist. I do not believe there is any power in the Government of the United States to drive any portion of the people of the United States outside of the Union, nor do I think there is any power in any branch of the Government of the United States to transform a friend of the Union into an enemy. If he becomes an enemy it is his own act, the result of his own perverseness, and not the effect of any governmental action.

It is said that there were but very few or no loyal men in these rebellious portions of the United States. If that is so, this bill will have but very little or no effect; for it provides only for settling the claims of men who were loyal.

But it is said to be very easy to prove that a man was loyal who was not in fact loyal. That is the difficulty, says my friend from Oregon. The issue may be one a little difficult to try; but dare you say that the Government shall sit down upon the assumption that all the men within a certain district are enemies of the Union because it is a little difficult to discriminate between its friends and its enemies? When you are asked only to do justice to your friends, and asked to try the question of loyalty or disloyalty by your own tribunals, is not that protection enough? If you dare not trust your own tribunals, that is not the fault of those men in the South; for they have had no part in the creation of them. It is no imputation upon them. The imputation rests upon yourselves and upon the agencies you yourselves have created.

But after all, Mr. President, there is no sort of danger, in my judgment, in passing this bill with the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, if that shall be accompanied by another amendment which I propose to offer myself. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes to strike out the words which would authorize a settlement with those whose property had been taken but to whom no receipt had been given. Evidently to my mind those words ought to go out, and evidently in the place of them these words ought to be inserted, "and taken up on the returns of such officer," so that then you will be called upon to pay only the claims of those loyal persons whose property had been taken by a quartermaster or a commissary, and receipted for by that officer, and the property taken up on his returns. How can you be injured when you do that? Every quartermaster in your service had so many mules and horses to feed. The law prescribed just how much forage should be fed out to them; and at the Quartermaster General's office they know just how much forage he had occasion for. He stands charged with that forage in bond, and he has to discharge himself of that. If he charges for more forage delivered out than he had animals in his custody to deliver it to, they know at the quartermaster's office that that account is false; the falsehood is detected at once. So of the commissary's department. Every commissary had a certain number of soldiers to deliver rations to, and they know at the office of the Commissary General just how many soldiers each assistant commissary had to deliver rations to and just how many rations he was allowed to make use of, and if he credits himself on his monthly statement with more rations than he had soldiers to feed them to, they know the error at once.

If a commissary seizes pork, or beef, or anything which may be a ration, in one State or another, it is his business to charge himself with it. "To take it up on his returns," I believe is the term used in these offices. When he has entered it upon his returns, he is accountable for it, and his bond is accountable for it, and you have got his obligation to account for it. If he distributes it in rations, then it takes the place of so much that he would otherwise have to furnish himself; for in the settlement of his accounts, you must remember, his business is to discharge himself of the whole amount of provisions and supplies delivered to him and charged to him by the Government. That is the business he has to do. If he seizes, in other places, or in any place, provisions, and does not take them up on his returns, then they never go to the use of the Army; they go to his own use; he does what he pleases with them. He accounts, in the settlement of his accounts, for every dollar that is committed to him by the commissary department, and for every man that he delivers rations to. So of a quartermaster. If he seizes a mule or a horse, and does not enter it upon his returns, he is not accountable for it, and the Government never gets the benefit of it. No quartermaster ever accounts for any more property than is on his returns; there is no way of accounting for it. If, therefore, you require the officer not only to give a receipt for this property, but to take it up on his returns, then the Government is perfectly safe. It can suffer at worst only by reason of paying a disloyal man for goods which it has actually obtained, but which it might have obtained, if it had known the fact of his disloyalty, without any price. You have got the benefit of the goods anyway.

I do not mean to detain the Senate—I cannot detain the Senate, for it is evident that they care but very little about the question—I am not going to detain myself but a moment. I said that this was a very important question as it struck me. It has been argued by some as important, but only as it affects the interests of the Treasury. I regard it as of infinitely more importance, because it affects the honor of the United States. It is true that if you pay, by the judgment of any of your tribunals, disloyal men for goods of theirs which you have taken, you do to that extent affect injuriously the interests of the Treasury; but it is equally true, to my mind, that if you refuse or neglect to pay the friends of the United States for goods of theirs which you have taken and appropriated to your use, the nation is dishonored. There is no escape from it; it is dishonored. You cannot afford to repudiate one of these obligations. They are as sacred when presented by a man who was your friend where there were but few friends found, and, if it were possible, more sacred there than in other sections where the friends of the Government were numerous and strong. However important you may consider it, therefore, as affecting the interests of the Treasury, I say it is of vastly more importance as it affects the honor of the Government. It is for this reason that I have seen fit to say a word on the subject; and it is for this reason that I am extremely anxious that the Senate shall not place itself in the attitude of having refused to recognize one of these claims.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The particular question before the Senate, I believe, is whether that provision of the bill which requires that payment shall be made for the property taken belonging to loyal persons and not receipted for shall be stricken out. It was not my intention to say a word on this subject; nor do I intend now to detain the Senate more than a moment.

Mr. President, I have heard some very strange principles of law announced during this debate. It seems to be assumed by some gentlemen that the laws of war applicable to questions of this kind have undergone no change from the foundation of the world to the present time; but that to-day, in the nineteenth century, they are precisely what they were when ignorant barbarians met in conflict on the field of battle. When I hear it contended on this floor that a nation at war with another must regard every individual of that nation as a personal enemy, and must treat him with all the rigors of war, though he be not a combatant, I am amazed. As well would I expect to hear announced the old rule of law applicable to war, that when you take a prisoner of war you have a right to put him to death or that you have a right to reduce him into perpetual slavery. Look into the books; and you will find that at one time those were well-recognized principles of the law of war; but, sir, they were principles recognized in ignorant and barbarous ages, and the civilization of advancing times has caused them to pass away, and nowhere throughout the civilized world to-day are such principles contended for. Throughout the civilized world to-day the doctrine is not practically enforced that, as between foreign nations, every inhabitant of one nation must be treated by the other with all the rigors and penalties of war. Such a doctrine is acted upon to-day by no civilized nation on earth; and the law of war to-day, in every nation of Europe and in every civilized country is, that you have not a right to take the private personal goods and chattels of a non-combatant for your own use without compensation. The spirit of Christianity and the principles of civilization have modified, practically, those harsh rules of war which were enforced in former times.

Why, sir, in the war of 1812, a war waged between this country and Great Britain, we contended that the British Government had no right, according to the laws of war and laws of nations, to take the private property of our citizens without making compensation for it; and upon the conclusion of that war, when it was established that the military power of Great Britain had seized slaves on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, had decoyed them from their masters, had taken them upon their ships and carried them to England, our minister demanded compensation for those slaves from the Government of Great Britain. The matter was the subject of negotiation for some time. Finally, the law as laid down by John Quincy Adams was acknowledged to be correct in principle, and the British Government was made to pay for those slaves which her military force took from their masters in this country and carried to England.

If it be so in reference to the taking of slaves, the principle is equally applicable to the taking of other private property. In the negotiations which resulted from the capture of those slaves by the British Government, no less a personage than John Quincy Adams declared that you might just as well fight with poisoned arms—that is his strong, vigorous language—as to undertake to take the private property of a non-combatant and convert it to your use without compensation. Any one who will take the trouble of looking into Lawrence's Wheaton will there find those opinions and declarations all cited. So convincing was the argument of our minister at the court of St. James that Great Britain gave up the contest and paid to this Government for the benefit of the owners of the slaves the value of those slaves; admitting, thereby, that as a belligerent Power, a Power at war with us, she had no right to take the private property of private citizens who were not engaged in the Army and convert it to her own use.

But, sir, that is not the question now before the Senate. The question before the Senate is this: when you find in the southern States an individual who has been true to the Federal Government and to the Union of these States, whose property has been taken for the use of the Army, shall he be paid for it? I do not use the word "loyalty." If there is any word in the English language that ought to be blotted out on account of the gross perversion that is made of it, it is that word "loyalty." It has no application in a republican form of government, unless we give it the definition of "conformity to and observance of law." If you use the term "loyalty" in that sense it is applicable; but in the sense in which the word "loyalty" is generally used it has no possible, conceivable application to a republican form of government, and never was intended to have such an application. No word can be found in any lexicographer, ancient or modern, which has been so grossly perverted, so egregiously misunderstood, and so wrongfully applied as this term "loyalty."

I say, then, the proposition now is, when you find a citizen or inhabitant of one of these southern States, who, during all this sanguinary conflict, amid all the raging of passion and conflict of arms, turned his eye and fixed it intently upon the flag of his country and wished to see it again float in glory and triumph over his head—whether, when you go and take that man's private goods and chattels, when you strip him bare of everything, turn his wife and children houseless and homeless out of doors, and throw them upon the cold charities of the people among whom he lives, and a people unfriendly to him, you shall deny him compensation. Go, ye war men, who thought there was no means of preserving this Union but by the bloody arbitrament of the sword; go, ye who proclaimed to the southern people that if they would not unite their fortunes with those who were warring against you, you would be their friends and protectors; go, ye now, and tell the man who has proved faithful to you, and whose fidelity stripped him of every earthly comfort, and made him a pauper, that what you told him before was a deception and a fraud. Did you not promise them protection? Had they not a right to believe that if they clung with unflinching fidelity to their country and their country's interest, you would see that loss should not come to them? Did you not tell them that wherever the American flag floated, or should thereafter float, it should be a shield and a protection to them and theirs? Did you not tell them that fidelity to the Government of the United States would be of more advantage to them than fidelity to the southern confederacy? Certainly you did.

During the whole progress of this war, we heard it hour after hour, day after day upon this floor, that down in these seceded States there were hundreds and thousands of true and patriotic citizens who had been forced by circumstances to yield a passive obedience to the government of the confederate States, and who were looking with wishful eyes to you as their deliverers. It was one of the strong arguments which you used that you were bound under the Constitution of the United States to secure a republican form of government to those people and to give them ample and full protection. You said that as American legislators it was your solemn duty to see that the faithful men of the South were protected; and on many occasions you declared that except in the State of South Carolina, the Union men were in the majority. You said it was your duty to send armies down into the southern States to give to those people protection. If you now deny to them the benefits proposed by the provisions of this bill, I ask you what kind of protection are you giving them. If you deny them this, what more were you doing for those people whom you say were true and faithful to you, than you were doing for those whom you said were rebels and traitors and who had arms in their hands trying to disserve this Government? The proposition now is to put them all on an equality, the men who with arms in their hands made war against you, and the men who refused to take up arms against you but welcomed you when you entered into their midst.

Sir, had you proclaimed in the inception of this war to the southern people, "When we enter your borders we shall make no discrimination between those who united their fortunes with the confederacy and those of you who wish to be true to us," you would have had the united opposition of all classes of society from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, and from the Ohio to the Gulf. What sane man is there living in one of these southern States, if you had proclaimed to him that you were going to invade his State and that you would take every particle of property in the State, and make no compensation to any one, but would have rushed with arms in his hands to repel the invader and to protect his family from starvation and ruin? Not one, sir. But the promises you made them no doubt induced hundreds and thousands to adhere with fidelity to the Government of the United States and prevented them from uniting their destinies with the southern confederacy. Mr. President, I appeal not to magnanimity; I appeal not to generosity; I appeal to honor; I appeal to justice; and if there be honor and justice in man, I protest before this Senate that you cannot refuse compensation to those who were faithful to the Federal Government in that struggle.

Why, sir, even among those who sympathized with the southern confederacy, but who were non-combatants in the war, there certainly has been enough suffering to gratify the feelings of the most vindictive. I have in my mind's eye now a lady, the daughter of a chief justice of one of these States, the daughter of a former member of Congress, a widow with four children, who lived on her plantation comfortable, happy, almost rolling in wealth, who, when the armies of the United States passed through South Carolina, was stripped of every living thing; her house burned over her head, and but two little corn cribs left standing; whose faithful negroes, to save something from the wreck, took her three hundred pieces of china and buried them in the ground, and there they are lying to-day; who has returned to this city, and now, with four little children upon her hands, is trying to make bread for them by keeping a humble boarding-house. Mr. President and Senators, in view of the devastation, the havoc, and the ruin which your armies causelessly made in the destruction of private property, pause before you add to that great injustice by denying to those who, you yourselves say, were faithful to you, a just compensation for their property which you took to support your armies, and which property, if it had been just across the line, you would have most willingly paid for.

The question, then, is simply this, when narrowed down to a point: whether compensation shall be allowed only for the goods received for of loyal persons, or whether upon proof of what you call loyalty, clear and unquestioned, the parties shall be paid, although they were so unfortunate as not to obtain a receipt for it. That is the particular question before the Senate. Is there any difference in principle between the two cases? If the person was true to you, does it make any difference whether he had a receipt or not? The giving of a receipt was a matter dependent upon the whim, the caprice, it may be the pressing engagement of the commanding officer. If you are satisfied that the person who has no receipt was just as true to you as the person who has, where is the principle of justice and the principle of right that can discriminate between them, and say that you shall pay the one and shall not pay the other? The fact that the party had no receipt is no fault of that party. It there be fault attaching to any one it is to the officer.

I see, sir, that it is near time to close this debate, and I shall not detain the Senate further; but I am surprised that the good-natured and kind-hearted Senator from Massachusetts should make a proposition of this kind, to discriminate between two worthy persons, and base that discrimination upon so unimportant a fact as that one has a receipt and the other has not.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, the temperature in this Chamber is too high to allow me to occupy the attention of the Senate, but a short time. I cannot, however, forbear to make a feeble attempt, warm as it is, to say something by way of reply to the remarks which have been addressed more especially to me.

The bill now before us does not call the attention of Congress to any individual cases of hardship which may have arisen in the course of the prosecution of the war in the rebel districts. As to such cases, as I remarked yesterday, I shall always hold myself ready to come to the relief of suffering humanity, and to do that which is generous and magnanimous to those who were at heart the friends of the Government in those districts. When such individual cases shall arise, they shall be sure of my careful attention; for I would not, under any circumstances, withhold from a true Union man that which is justly his, or refuse to indemnify him for the loss of property while he was really and truly at heart a friend of the Union, and willing to aid in upholding it.

Nor is the present bill founded upon the idea of making reparation for losses sustained by Union parties in the insurgent States who have actually rendered valuable service to the Union Army in the prosecution of the war. In such cases, where services have been actually and openly rendered by a person residing in a rebel community, I should always be ready to indemnify him for his losses and to pay him for his services.

The present bill is founded upon a different principle. It assumes, and so it has been argued by the honorable Senators from Wisconsin and New Hampshire, that there is a legal obligation on the Government to extend this indemnity to persons resident in the disloyal States who were, in the phrase of the bill, loyal to the Government of the United States. It does not require any act of loyalty to have been performed by the claimant. It does not require that he should have acted even as a spy in behalf of the Union Army; or that he should have contributed a single dollar of his money; that he should have ever traveled a single rod from his own door, or furnished voluntarily for the service of the Union Army a mule or a horse, or any other article of property, or, in short, to have rendered the slightest service openly and above board in behalf of the Union cause; but the bill contents itself, and its advocates here content themselves, with the fact, to be proved by ex parte affidavits to be used before a person having no judicial power, that the claimant has been at heart friendly to the Government, not that he should have done any act to promote the interests of the United States during the war, but that he should have remained simply neutral at home, and entertained at heart sentiments friendly to the Union cause.

Sir, I oppose this kind of legislation because I recognize no obligation whatever on the part of the Government to afford indemnity in such cases. The calamities of this war were brought not only upon the South but the North by the misconduct and traitorous proceedings, not merely of individuals constituting irregular and irresponsible masses within the insurgent districts amounting to little more than mere mobs, but by States organized as political communities, possessing all the attributes of sovereign political power, each with its Governor, its Legislature, and its judiciary. It has been settled, as I before remarked, that the whole of the rebel States, one after another, as communities occupying territory and invested with the attributes of political power, and in the actual exercise of that power, have become by their own act the enemies of the Government, and that their persons and their property, whether found upon the sea or the land, were, in law, to be treated as enemies' property. When I speak of enemies of the United States, I mean, not that they were all influenced by actual feelings of hostility to the Government, not that they hated that Government and would have destroyed it, but enemies because they happen to be embraced within the territorial limits of the country upon which their proceedings and our legislation have stamped the character of belligerency.

Every enemy of the United States is not, therefore, necessarily a traitor; and this is a distinction which is drawn with great clearness and force in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in what are known as the prize cases. My friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] yesterday denied the distinction; and for his information, as well as for the information of others, I will take this occasion to read a few paragraphs from the decision of that high tribunal upon the question who were the enemies of the United States, and what was enemies' property during the war. Speaking of the civil war which may break out within the territorial limits of a nation, the court held this language:

"The true test of its existence, as found in the writings of the sages of the common law, may be thus summarily stated: 'when the regular course of justice is interrupted by revolt, rebellion, or insurrection, so that the courts of justice cannot be kept open, civil war exists, and hostilities may be prosecuted on the same footing as if those opposing the Government were foreign enemies invading the land.'"

Again:

"The law of nations is also called the law of nature; it is founded on the common consent as well as the common sense of the world. It contains no such anomalous doctrine as that which this court are now for the first time desired to pronounce, to wit, that insurgents who have risen in rebellion against their sovereign, expelled her courts, established a revolutionary government, organized armies, and commenced hostilities, are not enemies because they are traitors; and a war levied against the Government by traitors, in order to dismember it, is not a war because it is an 'insurrection.'"

Again say the court:

"We now come to the consideration of the second question, what is included in the term 'enemies' property?"

"Is the property of all persons residing within the territory of the States now in rebellion, captured on the high seas, to be treated as 'enemies' property, whether the owner be in arms against the Government or not?"

"The right of one belligerent not only to coerce the other by direct force, but also to cripple his resources by the seizure or destruction of his property, is a necessary result of a state of war. Money and wealth, the products of agriculture and commerce, are said to be the sinews of war, and as necessary in its conduct as numbers and physical force. Hence it is that the laws of war recognize the right of a belligerent to cut these sinews of the power of the enemy by capturing his property on the high seas."

And I may here add that there is no distinction in principle between prizes made at sea and prizes made upon land in the prosecution of a war. [Mr. POLAND shook his head.] Yes, sir, that is the law.

"The appellants contend that the term 'enemy' is properly applicable to those only who are subjects or citizens of a foreign State at war with our own. They quote from the pages of the common law, which say 'that persons who wage war against the King may be of two kinds; subjects or citizens. The former are not proper enemies, but rebels and traitors; the latter are those that come properly under the name of enemies.'

"They insist, moreover, that the President himself, in his proclamation, admits that great numbers of the persons residing within the territories in possession of the insurgent government are loyal in their feelings, and forced by compulsion and the violence of the rebellious and revolutionary party and its 'de facto government' to submit to their laws and assist in their scheme of revolution; that the acts of the usurping government cannot legally sever the bond of their allegiance. They have, therefore, a correlative right to claim the protection of the Government for their persons and property, and to be treated as loyal citizens till legally convicted of having renounced their allegiance and made war against the Government by treasonably resisting its laws."

Such was the argument presented to the court by the counsel on the opposite side. The court proceed:

"Under the very peculiar constitution of this Government, although the citizens owe supreme allegiance to the Federal Government, they owe also a qualified allegiance to the State in which they are domiciled. Their persons and property are subject to its laws."

"Hence, in organizing this rebellion, they have acted as States claiming to be sovereign over all persons and property within their respective limits, and asserting a right to absolve their citizens from their allegiance to the Federal Government. Several of these States have combined to form a new confederacy, claiming to be acknowledged by the world as a sovereign State. Their rights to do so is now being decided by wager of battle. The ports and territory of each of these States are held in hostility to the General Government. It is no loose, unorganized insurrection, having no defined boundary or possession. It has a boundary marked by lines of bayonets, and which can be crossed only by force—south of this line is enemy's territory, because it is claimed and held in possession by an organized, hostile, and belligerent power."

"All persons residing within this territory whose property may be used to increase the revenues of the hostile power are, in this contest, liable to be treated as enemies, though not foreigners. They have cast off their allegiance, and made war on their Government, and are none the less enemies because they are traitors."

Again:

"The produce of the soil of the hostile territory, as well as other property engaged in the commerce of the hostile power, as the source of its wealth and strength, are always regarded as legitimate prize, without regard to the domicile of the owner, and much more so if he reside and trade within their territory."

I have read enough to show the character of the war. It was waged upon us by the rebel States as political communities, and every feature of a war was imparted to it. We had our blockades of the southern ports, established by our own laws. We had a legal statutory interdiction against the prosecution of trade and commerce between the communities living south and the communities living north of this divisional line between the contending parties. We had an absolute non-intercourse; and whatever articles of property may have been brought from the rebel community north of the Union lines, or taken south of those lines and transported into the confederacy, became liable to be forfeited, unless accompanied by a license to carry on trade.

The two communities, then, were belligerents, to whose character as such were applied all the rules and principles and liabilities of belligerency that pertain to a struggle between two nations; and Senators will not deny that in the prosecution of a war by an army entering hostile territory it is the right of the officers commanding that army to forage upon the enemy and supply their army from the private property of the enemy. It is one of the ordinary rights of war. If it was a calamity or a misfortune to any portion of the southern people, it must be remembered that the calamity or misfortune was brought upon them by the misconduct of a majority of their own people. It was not the fault of northern men or northern State governments that brought on this war, although we have been compelled to suffer for it as no community ever suffered. We have spent, as the records of the Treasury Department show, in its prosecution nearly three thousand million dollars. That money must now be raised by taxation upon those who contributed to our successes. We have lost more than half a million of the loyal soldiers of the loyal States. We have submitted to every privation necessary to give success to our great struggle. We have gone through it patiently, boldly, heroically, until at last we found the enemy under our feet, a fallen, conquered, humiliated foe.

It will not be pretended for a moment that this Government would be under any obligation to indemnify a person who, domiciled within the limits of a foreign nation with which we should happen to be at war, had suffered damage in consequence of the taking of his property by our Army, although such person were a friend of the United States. It might be a cruel, a harsh thing, to take his property; but it must be remembered that war itself in all its operations and rules is a harsh and cruel proceeding.

Sir, what has been the conduct of this so-called Union party in the rebellious States toward the Government during the whole of this war, and before the war? Did they not foresee that war was to come? Had they influence at the South? Who heard their multitudinous voices in opposition to their leaders and rulers? Why did they not make their influence felt? When the first shot was fired upon Fort Sumter, how did it happen that this Union party at the South did not unite their voices and their efforts in some effectual way to check the progress of the rebellion and the violence which was threatened by the secessionists? Why did they not take measures years and years ago to avert the danger of such an occurrence? They had notice, because the laws of war contained it, that in case of a collision their individual private property might be taken by us as well as their own army in the prosecution of the war, without indemnity, as an overruling necessity not to be questioned or resisted.

Mr. HOWE. As the Senator asks why the Union men down there did not make their influence felt when Fort Sumter was fired upon, I wish to ask him why we did not take some measures to punish that offense which was committed against this nation in Charleston harbor?

Mr. HOWARD. I see the point of the Senator's question, and I am very glad he has suggested that view, for I desire to make a reply to it. It has been said in this Chamber, and repeated over and over again, that the duty of allegiance is correlative to the duty of protection; and the inference is, that a party in the rebel States who had not been protected by the Government of the United States had the right to go into the ranks of the rebellion, and that he could do this without incurring the guilt of treason, simply because he was acting in obedience to the de facto government of his State.

Mr. HOWE rose.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not impute that doctrine to the Senator from Wisconsin. Sir, the breaking out of this war was like the sudden bursting forth of a conflagration in a great city. It was impossible for the Government to protect the Union people in the southern States; the thing was utterly impracticable; and it is idle to talk about the guiltlessness of treason at the South because the Government of the United States could not protect the Union men there. But the duty of allegiance remained unimpaired. It is in its nature antecedent to that of protection, and never ceases until the Government becomes so unjust and oppressive as to be intolerable.

Without spending further time upon this question, I resist the passage of this bill because I do not recognize on the part of the Government any obligation to make this general indemnity to persons who claim to be Unionists, but who continued their residence within the rebel lines during the war. We passed a law authorizing the President to declare those States in insurrection. In accordance with that law, he proceeded from time to time to declare States and parts of States in insurrection. This was no puerile or idle ceremony. It meant a great deal. It was a most solemn and significant act. It meant that the character of all persons within the limits thus declared insurrectionary was that of public enemies of the United States, whose property was liable to be taken by the Army in the just and necessary prosecution of the war, and that they, unless they made their escape from the Bedlam in which they found themselves, were liable to be treated as our foes and be subjected to the will of the conqueror.

I have another weighty objection to the frame of this bill. The questions which it submits to the Quartermaster and the Commissary General are, in their very nature and essence, judicial questions. The Constitution of the United States gives to no person judicial authority except the courts. What chance, I ask, have the United States to make out a defense against one of these claims before an official with no judicial power, not authorized to call persons before him by subpoena, not authorized to punish for contempt, not authorized to submit any of the questions that may arise to an impartial jury, but who must, from the very nature of the case, proceed ex parte, and upon testimony existing in the shape of depositions? And as my friend from Oregon has said, how very little reliance is to be placed in contested questions of fact upon the testimony of depositions! Pass this bill, and my prediction is, although I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, that the Treasury of the United States will be depleted to the tune of a billion dollars before all such claims will be satisfied.

Sir, how are you to draw a distinction between claims of this kind for quartermaster's and commissary stores, and claims for damages on the part of the same class of persons at the South for the destruction of houses, barns, and fences and forests, and every description of damage that was done either to personal or to real property? I ask my honorable friend from Wisconsin, where is the distinction, in point of principle, between the seizure and use of commissary and quartermaster's stores, and the seizure and use of real estate for the accommodation and the comfort of the Army that consumes such stores? It is in vain to say that there is any distinction. If I was a Union man at the South, I should think as great a wrong was done me if my house were used by the Army, and destroyed in the use, or my other real estate damaged, as I should were my hard cash taken out of my drawer. In both cases I am the loser and the Government the gainer. In both cases the property is used for the prosecution of the war, and I am as much entitled to indemnification for damages done to my real estate as for damages done to my personal estate.

Once establish the principle that this indemnification is obligatory upon the Government, and I ask my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] whether he must not in the end vote to pay for all the ravages committed by Sherman's army on its famous march from Atlanta to the sea, sweeping as it did with the besom of destruction a tract of not less than sixty miles in width, from Georgia to the Atlantic ocean, leaving in its track nothing but a wide-spread desolation, repulsive even to the imagination and frightful to the genius of history. Sir, we must sooner or later compensate every Union man who was affected by that raid if we pass this bill or any measure of like purport. Such, at least, is my prediction.

Again, I ask you, where is the sensible and practical distinction between an indemnification to a Union man for property thus taken and an indemnification to a rebel at heart who had not committed an open act of treason? Contemplate them! There they are; one living on one side of the highway; the other on the other. The former has professed Unionism from the beginning, but has not taken up arms to defend the Government. He has done no act; he has not contributed a dollar for that purpose; but he has staid quietly in his own home and professed in his intercourse with his neighbors to be friendly to the United States, and has expressed, honestly, perhaps, in a thousand forms, his deep regret and sorrow at the insurrection. On the other side of the street is a man who has entertained opposite sentiments, who has been a friend of secession, who has spoken in favor of and advocated the right of secession and the fact of secession, but who has not raised his hand against his Government nor contributed a dollar nor a pound of lead nor a bushel of corn nor any other thing to aid and assist in the prosecution of the insurrectionary war. "The former," says my friend from Illinois, "I will pay for all that may have been taken from him by the Army;" but he says in the same breath, "the latter I will not pay. He has lost his thousands, it is true, by the Union Army, as well as his neighbor over the way. I will reward the Union man with an indemnity; I will make the other, not a Union man and yet not a traitor, he having committed no overt act, suffer the loss of thousands for entertaining different opinions." Sir, is this just; or rather is this a safe principle upon which to rest our legislation? I insist that it is not. In my view it approaches too nearly to mere puerility not to say the ridiculous, to be the foundation of legislation.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock, so as to have an evening session for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. Let us dispose of this bill. This bill will come up at seven o'clock if we take a recess now.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. No, sir. There is a special order for seven o'clock which I had fixed for the purpose of passing some pension bills, which every Senator is interested in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it very manifest that if we take a recess now this bill will be discussed again to-morrow in the same way that it has been to-day and was yesterday. We have got to have a vote upon it at some time, and I think we had better hold on to it now until we finish it.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The Senator will understand that there was a resolution passed yesterday morning fixing this evening at seven o'clock for the consideration of bills from the Pension Committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am aware of that, but we can suspend that resolution just as we did the special order to-day. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] had a special order for one o'clock to-day, but it was set aside by the unfinished business. My judgment is to hold on to this bill now until we finish it, and I hope the Senate will do so. Let us kill it or enact it into a law, so far as we can do so.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I do not know whether a motion to take a recess is debatable.

Mr. SUMNER. It is.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. If it is, I should like to say that in my opinion greater importance attaches to the passage of these pension bills than of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We will pass those, too.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. We are proposing now to pass a bill to indemnify loyal persons in the rebel States. I shall vote for it; but I do not consider that claim any more sacred than our duty to pay our maimed and wounded and crippled soldiers and the surviving orphans and widows of those who have been killed the pensions that are due to them under the law. I, for one, would rather pass these twenty or thirty pension bills than pass this bill, if they were antagonized; but I do not see any necessity for that. When the order of the Senate was taken yesterday, it was peremptory that at seven o'clock this evening there should be a session for the consideration of bills from the Pension Committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We shall get through with this bill before seven o'clock. Let us go on with it.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Perhaps there is not a single Senator in the Senate who is not interested in some one of these pension bills. I am as little interested in them, perhaps, as any one else.

Mr. CLARK. Let us go on for half an hour or so with this bill.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I have no objection to going on with it, but I do not want it to interfere with the order for seven o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I do not.

Mr. CONNESS. There is nothing inconsistent in the two objects desired to be accomplished. I hope we shall go on now and vote on the bill before us. The Senate, I apprehend, have discussed the subject sufficiently. We have heard all sides of it. There are amendments to be offered—

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. And speeches to be made.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator says there are speeches to be made upon it. How does he know that?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The Senator who has charge of the bill told me that he desired to say something upon it, and I think it very proper that he should speak upon it, and I shall hear him with great pleasure.

Mr. CONNESS. I, too, am a friend of this bill with proper amendments, but I shall not give my vote from day to day to keep it before the Senate to the exclusion of all other business, if it is to be kept up merely for the purpose of listening to speeches when the thermometer is at eighty-eight degrees in the Chamber. If that course is to be pursued, I shall give my vote against continuing it, whether it comes in the shape of a postponement or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. If there can be a vote on the bill, I will withdraw that motion. I am as anxious to have a vote upon it as anybody.

Mr. POLAND. I had designed to say a very few words in reference to the amendment that is proposed and upon the bill itself; but ten minutes would be as much time as I should desire.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I withdraw my motion, then.

Mr. POLAND. If no other gentleman desires to say anything, we shall have ample time to finish this bill before we take a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I withdraw the motion. I understand the Senate are ready now to go right through with the bill.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. President, it is certainly very singular to me that so good a lawyer as the honorable Senator from Michigan should have fallen into so strange a delusion as it seems to me he has done in reference to the law upon this subject. He has read some extracts from the opinion of the Supreme Court, reported in 2 Black in the prize cases, as they are termed, to show that the inhabitants of the insurgent States, although they were loyal in fact, and did everything that was in their power to show their loyalty, their good will and good disposition toward the Government of the United States, still, in point of law, were enemies; and that, although we took their property, and took it by contract, bought it of them, gave them a written obligation for it, we are under no moral or legal obligation to pay for it, because, he says, they were legally enemies.

It is always important, as I have found, when you are going to attach any weight to what a judge or any court through a judge has said, to find out what he was talking about. What were those prize cases about which Judge Grier was speaking when he gave that opinion? The rebellion had assumed formidable proportions. A large majority of the people of the southern States were in arms. The great majority of them were hostile or disloyal. They stood in the attitude of a hostile foreign nation, although there were various persons in those communities who were our friends, who had never forfeited their allegiance, who had never done anything that was hostile to this Government. Now, what did the court say? They said that although we claimed, and legally claimed, that that was still a part of our own country, that all the inhabitants there, whether in arms or not, were subjects of this Government, and owed allegiance to it, that it was nothing but an insurrection and a rebellion; still, it having assumed these formidable proportions, we had the same right to resort to all those means which one nation may use against a foreign nation with which it is at war. It was argued that we were endeavoring to put down a portion of our own people who were in insurrection, and therefore we could not legally blockade their ports. Now, it is well understood, and has been for centuries, that one of the means which one nation which is at war with another may use, is to blockade their ports, to cut off their intercourse with other nations, to stop their supplies. The court said that we had just the same right to resort to that against these States that were in rebellion as we would have against a foreign nation with which we were at war; and having that right, having the legal right to proclaim and set up this blockade, of course it must apply to everybody. It must apply just as much to individual persons who were our friends, within that country, as to those who were in point of fact hostile to us; that if we undertook to stop the trade, in order to make it practicable, or of any sort of use, we must prevent everybody from trading. We could not allow our friends to go there, and we could not allow our friends who were there to come out. We must stop it entirely. In that sense the court said it was immaterial whether the inhabitants there, the individual persons, were our friends or our enemies; and that is just as far as the courts have gone. That is the length and the breadth of it.

My friend, the honorable Senator from Michigan, said yesterday that all our legislation had gone upon that same ground, had gone upon the ground that all persons within the limits of the rebel States were our enemies; that all stood alike in a loyal sense. I was somewhat struck with a declaration of that sort coming from so eminent a lawyer as the honorable Senator from Michigan, and I have since taken some pains to look into the legislation of Congress upon this subject; and, sir, it is entirely the other way. Every single word of legislation that Congress have adopted upon the subject of the rebellious States or the people of those States, from the beginning of the war down to its close, has been upon an entirely opposite theory. The distinction between loyal and disloyal people there has been recognized in every single statute passed upon the subject, and by the decisions of the courts upon those statutes; and it is distinctly recognized in the last case that is reported on the subject, the case of Mrs. Alexander's cotton. The law that was passed in relation to abandoned property in the South that our Army was authorized to take up and sell, contained a provision that if within a certain time any owner of a portion of that property should come forward and prove his loyalty, he should have it restored to him. In the case of captured property, that which was captured upon land, there was a provision also that the loyal owner might come in and have redress for any portion of it that he owned. And here let me allude to the statute that authorized this capture upon land; because my friend, the honorable Senator from Michigan, says there is no difference between a capture upon land and a capture upon the sea.

Mr. HOWARD. No difference in point of principle.

Mr. POLAND. I think there is a very great difference in point of principle. The court held in the prize cases, and justly held, that the blockade must be total in order to be effectual, and if our friends undertook to run through the blockade, they were just as liable to forfeiture as our enemies. But the statute upon which these captures upon land were made is this:

"That if any person within any State or Territory of the United States, being engaged in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States, or aiding and abetting such rebellion—" then their property is liable to be taken, but no other class of persons excepting those who are actually engaged in the rebellion.

This is all I desire to say in reference to the law on this subject.

As I said before, we have constantly gone upon this distinction from the beginning of this war to the end, that loyal persons in the South were entitled to be protected; that they were still citizens of the United States, with all the rights of citizens living in the loyal States. We have taken their property for the support of our armies. Has it ever been questioned but what, if loyal persons in the North furnished provisions for the support of our armies, they would have their pay? We have an express statute to that effect. That is the very principle of the Constitution, that if you take private property for public use you are to make compensation for it. Now we propose to extend it over these States. What is the objection to it? It is said that there will be danger that some disloyal person will get paid. I suppose there is some danger of it; and if two disloyal persons should get pay for what they have furnished where only one loyal person got pay for what he furnished, I would rather pay the two traitors than cheat the one loyal and true man. I would forego a great many disadvantages and a great many losses before I would agree that any one of our loyal friends in the South who stood by us through all the perils and terrors of this rebellion—I would do anything almost rather than that he should not have his pay.

Now, sir, as to this particular amendment that is proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, as the Senator from New Hampshire said, where is the difference in principle? If we really had the property, and it went to the use of our Army, and the man is a loyal and true man, what difference does it make whether he has got the evidence of a receipt in his pocket or not? Was it not equally beneficial to us? Was it a matter of choice with him whether he should have the receipt, written evidence, to show what he had furnished? Of course not.

But, Mr. President, there is another answer to this, and it seems to me a very sufficient one. If this business had all been done in the quiet of a counting-room, if it had been done in the ordinary way of mercantile transactions, there would have been some ground to suspect a claim that was not evidenced by a writing; but how was it? That country was invaded by our armies. Generally in the immediate vicinity there was a hostile army. Everything was terror and confusion and alarm. In a great many instances the owners of the property were not present to have any receipt given to them. When these foraging parties went out in haste and confusion for the purpose of getting supplies, there was not always time, they had not the materials, had not the opportunity to give receipts. Of course, this class of cases has got to be scrutinized with more deliberation; more care must be taken; more strictness must be required in the proof that the claimant is required to make in order to allow a claim that is not evidenced by writing than one that is evidenced by it; but that is a matter for the administrators of the law. The bill that we have framed, with the amendment that the honorable Senator from Illinois has proposed, and which we have adopted, has been made as strong as language could make it. As the Senator from Wisconsin said, we have the administration of it in our own hands. Are we afraid to trust ourselves to do right for fear somebody else will do wrong? That is a very old argument that we must not do right, must not do what justice requires of us because somebody may make a pretense of doing wrong. That is an argument that has no terror for me. I trust, sir, that this amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend that amendment by striking out all after the word "and," in the fifth line, down to the word "receipt," in the seventh line, and to insert in lieu thereof "taken up on the returns of the proper officer."

Mr. JOHNSON. How will it read then?

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to include in the words proposed to be stricken out the words "received for by the proper officer receiving the same," and to insert "taken up on the returns of the proper officer," so that if the amendment to the amendment be adopted the first section will read:

That all claims of loyal persons, not exceeding $500 for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States and taken up on the returns of the proper officer may be submitted to the Quartermaster General, &c.

Mr. HOWE. The point of the amendment is this: the entering them on the return of the officer is the evidence, that the United States gets the benefit. These are quartermaster's and commissary stores which we provide for paying. If they are entered on the returns of the officer he becomes chargeable with them and must disburse them just as he distributes other stores furnished by the different departments. If he does not enter them on his returns the evidence is conclusive that the Army does not get the benefit of them, but that the property was applied to the personal use of the officer taking it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand now what the honorable member's object is; but how is that accomplished by saying "taken up on the returns?" You mean "entered on the returns," I suppose.

Mr. HOWE. That is the term, I believe, that the officers themselves use.

Mr. JOHNSON. "Taken up on the returns?"

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. It cannot be so.

Mr. HOWE. That is what I mean by it, at all events, and I understand that to be the term in use by the accounting officers at these departments. It is evident that we do not mean to pay for property taken by officers and applied to their own use, whether they gave receipts or not. It will be within the recollection of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire that the Committee on Claims refused to pay for a horse taken in Virginia, although the quartermaster taking it gave a receipt for it. Why? Because he never entered it on his returns, he never accounted for it to the United States, but took it and appropriated it to his own use. It was a mere trespass. I do not suppose we intend to hold ourselves responsible for the trespasses committed by our own officers.

Mr. CLARK. There may be and undoubtedly are cases where the property taken went to the use of the Army, and yet where it does not appear on the returns. There was a case, as the Senator will perhaps be aware of, where a considerable portion of tobacco was taken at the city of Atlanta and distributed by General Sherman. It did not appear on the quartermaster's return, but yet we recommended that it be paid for. We did not pay for the horse in the case referred to, because it did not appear by the return or in any other way that it went to the use of the Army, and we supposed the man kept it.

Mr. HOWE. There was a case where, assuming the power that belongs in the Legislature and nowhere else, under very peculiar circumstances, an officer commanding a great army did take possession of some tobacco, which I believe is not a ration. The soldiers of his army being in a position where they could not purchase this article, he took it and distributed it, and the committee recommended, that the Legislature should pay for it. But I take it we could not authorize either the Quartermaster General or the Commissary General to audit claims for such property. It is neither a commissary nor a quartermaster store. This bill only provides for paying for quartermaster's stores and commissary stores, and every dollar of each of those articles of property which goes to the use of the Army is entered on the returns of the quartermaster or the commissary. That is the way he makes himself chargeable for the property, and then he discharges himself by delivering it to the use of the troops.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Wisconsin had examined the bill he would have seen that it provided for the very thing which he is at. The first section of the bill provides that the stores must have been "actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army." A man must prove that in order to get his claim allowed. The property must have been taken for the use of the Army, and must have been actually used by the Army; so that his amendment, I think, is provided for.

Now, I want to answer in a word, as I am up, the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] who made a speech of some half hour in length, and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] one equally long, declaiming against this as a precedent that would cost this Government, in the language of the Senator from Michigan, a billion dollars at least, and the Senator from Oregon would like to go for this bill, but it established such a precedent that he was alarmed. Now, has the Senator from Oregon forgotten that he has lived under this law for two years? On the 4th day of July, 1864, the Congress of the United States passed this law:

"That all claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States, and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officer without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Quartermaster General of the United States, accompanied with such proofs as each claimant can present of the facts in his case; and it shall be the duty of the Quartermaster General to cause such claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just, and of the loyalty of the claimant, and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army, then to report each case to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with a recommendation for settlement."

That was the law passed on the 4th day of July, 1864. There was the precedent. If the Senator is alarmed at the precedent, he has lived under it for two years. That law applied to Missouri, it applied to Kentucky, it applied to West Virginia, it applied to Maryland—States in which our armies were. Now, what is the effect of this bill which we are trying to pass to-day? It is simply to pay the loyal citizen in Tennessee and Arkansas just as we have been paying him in Kentucky and in Missouri and in West Virginia and in Maryland all the time; and it has other limitations on it. We have put on the present bill a definition as to what loyalty shall be, requiring the party affirmatively to show some loyal act. What else have we done? We have taken away from the Quartermaster General and the Commissary General the right to pass upon claims to an unlimited extent, and placed all claims over $500 in the Court of Claims. This is a restrictive bill. It is a bill requiring stricter proof of loyalty than the present law requires. It is a bill placing the larger claims under the jurisdiction of a court, throwing additional security around the Government. That is what this bill is; and if there is anything about precedent, you have agreed to pay loyal men—

Mr. HOWARD. There is no precedent to pay persons who were resident in the rebel States during the war, and the Senator is now endeavoring to fix and settle that question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then the whole precedent is this, and that is what you are alarmed about when you speak of a billion of dollars: that you are willing to pay a man in Kentucky and are not willing to pay one in Tennessee. Here was Major Lewis the other day in this city, the old friend of General Jackson, who owned property all around Nashville and gave all he had to your Army to feed it when there, bringing with him the certificates of his loyalty from Major Generals Thomas and Granger and Palmer, and every man who was ever there—a man tottering, over fourscore years of age, bearing with him here the open ballot that he gave when the question of secession was presented to the voters of Tennessee and when he marched up to the polls in the neighborhood of Nashville, and with an open vote, and giving his reasons why he could never vote for secession or to dissolve this Union, placed it openly before the judges; and that man you will not pay; it is a dangerous precedent to pay him; but if he had been on the other side, over in Kentucky, you would have paid him!

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator will allow me one word. I would pay such a claim as that for this reason: that the claimant has actually and voluntarily contributed without being constrained to it his means and efforts to give success to the Union Army. That shows a will and a purpose which I admire.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The bill provides to pay nobody except he can show his loyalty affirmatively. It is stricter than the old law. As now amended, the party must show affirmatively that on every occasion where it was practicable he has manifested his loyalty and devotion to the Union. And now how preposterous to say that this will take a billion of money! Why, sir, the whole supply of your commissary and quartermaster's departments did not amount to a billion, all they ever used. It is no answer to get up scarecrows about a bill without examining it. A thousand millions of money was never used by both departments from the beginning of the war to the end; and yet Senators come in here and make such grave statements as this, and talk about precedents, when they have been living under a law like this two years, and a law not as closely guarded as this; and the Senator from Oregon, to my utter surprise, when talking about the danger to this Government, talked about sending out a congressional commission to pay claims for damages at random all over the United States! I do not know but that you would get a billion of dollars then. It is a great deal safer to put the matter under the checks and guards that are thrown around this bill, and in your Court of Claims, where you will have attorneys, and where you will have cross-examination, and where you will subject every claim to a judicial investigation before you will pay one of them that amounts to more than $500.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised at the very emphatic manner in which the honorable Senator from Illinois condemns me for making any distinction between loyal and disloyal States of the Union. Now, sir, if there be no distinction I should like to know how he reconciles himself to the position which he occupies here as opposed to the representation of those States in Congress at this time. I have supposed that that distinction has been recognized in more ways than one by Congress; and because the law has provided for the payment of men in the loyal States to whom the Government has become indebted, does it therefore follow that those persons in the seceded States whose claims originated in this war are to be paid by the Government. I should like to know why the law to which the gentleman refers at the time it was enacted made a distinction between the loyal and the disloyal States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Because at that time we were in the midst of the rebellion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No doubt of that, and, sir, we are forgetting the lessons of this war every day. There is no more reason now why a law should be passed paying indiscriminately all persons in the South who may make it appear that they are loyal for claims which they have against the Government than there was in making a law to that effect at the time the law to which the gentleman refers was passed, for the claim of a loyal man then was as good as the claim of a loyal man at this time.

Now, sir, the gentleman represents that we have manufactured a scarecrow, or at least that the honorable Senator from Michigan did, in saying that this might lead to the expenditure of a billion dollars. I did not understand myself to say that that expenditure would accrue in the payment of these claims, but I say, and the intimation has been distinctly made here already in this discussion, that if you pay these men for the property which the officers of the Federal Army took for the subsistence of the Army it will be followed by a claim to pay for the property which the Federal armies destroyed belonging to Union men.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Have we done that in the loyal States?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have not done it in the loyal States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Why should we do it down there any more than in the loyal States?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because the argument will be, and it will be difficult to meet, that if a man who is a loyal man there had property which was taken by the Government with or without a receipt and if he is entitled to pay for that property, then he is entitled to pay for property that was destroyed. I do not say that we shall do it, but I say that that argument will be forced upon us, and it will be difficult to meet it; and it is in that respect that I fear the precedent.

Now, sir, I deny that the honorable Senator can put me in the position of refusing payment in the case which he has presented in his remarks, because I do not deny that there may be cases of peculiar hardship arising where indemnity should be made; but this bill, as I understand it, deprives Congress of all jurisdiction over the subject, turns this whole matter of adjusting these immense claims, immense in number and amount, to another department of the Government. That may be right; it may be safe; but so far as I am concerned, I have apprehensions that it will not be found to be a judicious law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to modify my amendment by saying "entered upon," instead of "taken up." Senators about me think that is a better form of expression.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in the power of the Senator to modify his amendment, and that modification will be made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I apprehend that the Senator from Wisconsin, if he will reflect for a moment, will not insist upon that amendment. For myself, I am perfectly indifferent about this bill. The Senator from Wisconsin knows as a member of the Committee on Claims that I have voted constantly against the allowance of all these claims, not upon any legal ground, but because I have insisted that in all probability they would bankrupt the Government, and I thought we had better look into them somewhat before entering upon their payment. I shall not object, however, to the passage of this bill. But if the Senator from Wisconsin insists upon the amendment which he now offers, it will certainly defeat the very object that he a little while ago said he had in view. If he thinks that no claim should be allowed except those which have been taken up on the quartermaster's return, (and he makes no change now by saying "entered upon,") he is sadly mistaken in supposing that his amendment does not affect the bill. Where a quartermaster has put upon his return a claim and it is returned here, of course he could not have done that without issuing what is called a quartermaster's voucher. That is utterly impossible. He retains one copy of it, and gives duplicates to the individual from whom he gets the property. That certificate in the hands of the individual from whom the property is obtained is never paid until the returns come in to the quartermaster's department. When they come in and the quartermaster has made his settlement, this becomes a voucher in the hands of the individual, and any quartermaster in the United States will give him the cash, any banker in the United States will give him the cash. Bankers purchase up these certificates after it is certain that they have been returned, "taken up" on the quartermaster's returns. It is not worth while now to say that the Quartermaster General may allow those claims which may have been taken up on the quartermaster's return, because they are worth the cash all over the United States; they are bound to be paid anywhere.

If I understand this bill it is for the purpose of covering altogether a different class of claims. For instance, a quartermaster passing through my State took forage from an individual, a farmer, and he did not enter it upon his returns, he never charged himself with it, and did not credit himself with it; it was an outside matter. He may have given the party a certificate, or he may have said "You are a disloyal man and I will not give you any certificate," or he may have given him a receipt, saying, "This is to certify that I took from this individual on this occasion five hundred bushels of corn; I have not time to inquire into his loyalty." Quartermasters in my State never gave receipts unless they were satisfied of the loyalty of the individual. He may say "I am not satisfied of the loyalty of this individual; I give my receipt, but I do not put it on my returns." If I understand it, this bill is for cases of that character, and for cases where property has been taken and a receipt not given at all. The Senator accomplishes nothing certainly by saying "entered upon the returns" or "taken up on the returns," because then the voucher is perfectly good and worth the cash in any part of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. FESSENDEN and Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the amendment may be reported.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, which was in lines six and seven, of section one to strike out the words "or which may have been taken by such officer without giving such receipt."

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK, (when his name was called.) I agreed to pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] who has left the Chamber until the adjournment.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Cragin, Fessenden, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Guhrrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Poland, Saulsbury, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Dixon, Grimes, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Sherman, Wright, and Yates—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. The adoption of that amendment makes it necessary to strike out the same words in the second section and in the third section; in the second section in lines four and five, and in the third section in lines five and six.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senate has just decided upon that question by a yea and nay vote. These are the words of the old law applicable to the loyal States, but it applied to Kentucky and Missouri, and is the law now and applies to all these cases. The bill is a very restricted one. No great amount of claims can come under it. It has been in operation for two years, and the whole amount allowed by the commissary and quartermaster's departments a short time ago, as reported, was less than half a million; I think only about a quarter of a million, when we got the report, since the session commenced.

Mr. WILSON. Can the Senator tell us how much has been claimed?

Mr. TRUMBULL. We had the amount; I do not recollect what it was; three or four millions, I think, in all these States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the loyal States?

Mr. TRUMBULL. The loyal States included those States where our armies were, the State of Missouri, the State of Kentucky, the State of West Virginia, and the State of Maryland. It is the present law, and I really think the Senate is making a mistake in striking out those words.

Mr. HENDERSON. Claims were presented from all the States. The construction given outside to the law of 1864 was that claims could be allowed from all the States, and they presented claims from Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, and elsewhere.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They presented those claims but they were not allowed. Claims were brought up from all the States under the law as it is, but the officers construed the law as applying only to the loyal States.

Mr. HENDERSON. To citizens of loyal States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes; it must be citizens of loyal States who presented the claim.

Mr. HENDERSON. And the taking must have been in a loyal State.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That was the construction put upon it, although there were claims brought in from the other States.

Mr. WILLEY. I regret, with the Senator from Illinois, that this amendment has been made. Of course it indicates the sense of the Senate as to those words in the other sections. I shall be under the necessity of voting against the bill altogether if it be put in this form, because while I am exceedingly desirous to extend justice to loyal men in the southern States, I want to retain as much as possible of it for the loyal men who come within the purview of the law in the loyal States. The effect of this bill so amended will be to repeal the law as it exists already. What will be the result, then, upon the States of Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, and Maryland? Every loyal man who has furnished supplies to the Army; who has fed our soldiers; who has furnished forage; every loyal man who has thus placed himself in a relation to the Federal Government which, if he sustained the same relation to an individual, would justify an action of assumpsit and the recovery of a judgment and an execution to secure payment for his property, would be deprived by the repeal of the law as it now exists of enforcing his just claims against the Government.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator can avoid that by just making an amendment confining this bill to the States that were declared in insurrection.

Mr. WILLEY. I cannot for the soul of me bring my mind to make any distinction between a loyal man in a loyal State and a loyal man in a disloyal State. Sir, if the Senator from Maine had lived in West Virginia, if he had lived along the border of the States in insurrection, if he had seen men, as I have seen them, hunted in the mountains, sometimes immured in rebel prisons, coming back again with hearts unbent and unsubdued, standing up manfully for the flag of their country, eager and willing oftentimes to divide the little of food they had for man and forage for beast with "our boys in blue" when they passed by their homes—if he had seen all this as I have seen it, I think his feelings toward the loyal men in the South would have been different from what they are.

Sir, what difference does it make if a man with a loyal heart in his bosom furnishes a portion of what he has to feed our soldiers and forage our horses whether his misfortune was to be born in a southern State or his fortune was to be born in a northern State? Is there not all the more credit due to him because he maintains his integrity in a disloyal State, surrounded by fire and persecution and obloquy and scorn, and stands up, notwithstanding all this, and gives his means to support our armies and for the prosecution of the war? How can it be possible that the nation can receive valuable consideration from loyal men in these disloyal States, and yet refuse to pay for it honestly and honorably, as I think we ought? Sir, if I had I gone down through the State of Maine during these late troubles, these Fenian troubles, or during those other struggles during the war, when those wretched incendiaries from the South were attempting to burn his towns and his villages, and were robbing his banks, and in the hurry of my progress to his rescue I had taken of his substance, of his food or of his forage to support myself or to forage my beast—if I had done that, or to change the figure, if I had thus gone there on my own business, and afterward he had demanded payment at my hands, and should say, "Sir, you have received so many bushels of corn, you received so much forage, you received so much valuable consideration;" and I should reply, "Oh, yes, I have received it; I acknowledge to that fact; but you have no certificate that I received it; I did not give you a receipt, sir, that you had got it. You do not hold my bond." Would that exonerate me, in the estimation of the honorable Senator from Maine, from paying full and fair consideration for what of his means I had received? Sir, he would have scouted me from his presence as unworthy of the character and pretensions of an honorable man.

Let me put an actual case within my own knowledge. I know the man to-day. It is not a supposititious case. He is an old man. All through this terrible war, although he lived in a southern State, he was steadfast, unflinching; his iron will and his patriot heart never bent for a moment before the storm that beat upon his household. Sometimes he was immured, more than once, in rebel prisons; at other times he was hunted as a wild beast in the mountains; sometimes he stole stealthily home at midnight to his fireside to spend an hour with his family, and then again sought his refuge in the caves of the mountains. Our armies on a certain occasion, and on more occasions than one, passed by him. From his retreat he came out to meet them with beaming eyes and bounding heart, so glad was he to look upon the old flag of his fathers, for he inherited revolutionary blood; he gladly divided with them what little of food he had for man and forage for beast. On two occasions they gave him certificates, on other occasions he would not have any. He stands here to-day, or those of the class of whom he is a representative stand before Congress, and what is the response they meet at the threshold of justice of this great and magnanimous nation? The Senator from Massachusetts, always so just and always so generous, turns upon him his back, and the Senator from Michigan says, "Begone, you are a public enemy; you are of no more consideration than a rebel himself." Sir, is that the way in which we are to treat these loyal men? Are we in that manner to draw a distinction between Union men of the South and rebel men of the South? Are we to be forever proclaiming that we will make treason odious and that we will make Unionism honorable, and yet make no distinctions between the traitor and the Union man? Will we say to the Union man, "Yes, you have given us of your substance, but we will not pay you for it?" Or shall we say to such men as he to whom I have alluded, who gave two sons to the service of his country, one of whom lies among the melancholy hillocks at Andersonville, and the other, wrapped in his gory uniform, slumbers on the field of battle where he fell—will you say to such men as that, "We will not pay justly and honorably for the means which you have given to the support of the country in the hour of its peril and of its want?" Why, sir, it seems to me that it absolutely is abhorrent to all the better sentiments of human nature, not to say entirely inconsistent with the character for justice and magnanimity of a great and righteous nation.

I trust, sir, that this distinction will not be made, and that the United States Senate will not say to men, "Unless you present us with a certificate, unless you present us with a bond for the food we have received and the forage we have had and the means you have given us to support the war and carry it on, we will not pay you." I hope it will not be done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not like to be misunderstood; I will not say with regard to the honorable Senator from West Virginia that he misrepresented, because he never intentionally misrepresented anybody. My objection to the bill is not founded on the idea that I would not pay a Union man if I could find him and his claim was established. That I have not asserted. I go with the Senator in that respect, so far as I am concerned. He might have spared all his eloquent appeals to "Andersonville," "gory shroud," and all that kind of thing, which I do not think very good argument, especially on a matter of money, a matter of business, although it may be very good eloquence. My objection is to the mode in which you are getting at it. I will not put all these claims that may arise in the eleven disloyal States into the hands of a clerk in the Quartermaster General's office, without any written testimony to look into, for him to report on them as he may choose to report. God only knows what sort of clerks you may have to do it. My objection, as I have said before, is that I will not put the Treasury of the United States into the hands of such an officer. I do not like the mode proposed. I do not know when the law to which reference was made was passed, but it certainly passed without my observation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was in 1864.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not know until this bill came up that there was such a law in existence; but there is not the same danger in such a law confined to the loyal States. In the first place, confined to those States it was very much less extensive, and in the next place, we do not look there for disloyal men.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine if he has not consented that in the Department over which he presided clerks examining claims should adjudicate upon claims amounting to thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars for vessels taken and which we agreed to pay for if the vessels were lost, without any evidence except parol testimony.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Everything there goes through the regular accounting officers.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Just so; but they were examined by clerks, as these claims will be examined by clerks.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That may be, but they passed under the hands of the accounting officers afterward. But at any rate questions of this sort have not come up before. Another thing I will say to the Senator, that if it is wrong there it is wrong here, and if it is wrong here I think it is wrong there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think it is wrong in either.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the man ought to be paid.

Mr. FESSENDEN. When the Senator puts it to me, "Was it not so in your Department?" that proves nothing if it was wrong.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the Senator was in the Senate when that bill was passed which requires the Departments to pay for vessels that were taken on the rivers and were lost in the service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very likely I may have been. I have done a great many unwise things in my day, and probably that was not one of them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But the answer that is made in this case, "was it not so in another case," and so on, does not prove anything. That is no answer to an argument. Many things are done wrong, but they do not form a justifiable precedent for others. What I have spoken of is the great extent of these claims, extensive as they must be; and with what we have seen of the facility with which the most red-handed rebel can be proved a loyal man, I am unwilling for the next five or ten or fifteen or twenty years to put the Treasury of the United States into the hands of clerks of the Departments. I would rather the claims should go through the Court of Claims, and be properly adjudicated. I rose merely to say that I objected to the mode, and not to the thing. Prove to my satisfaction that the property of a loyal man has been taken by our armies and used for the benefit thereof, and I am willing to pay him.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move now that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock P. M.

THADDEUS HYATT.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to postpone the consideration of the measure which has been under consideration this afternoon and take up Senate bill No. 367.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I suppose it is not necessary to make a formal motion to postpone; I will give way for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the unfinished business on which the Senate was engaged at the time the recess was taken is now properly before the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to postpone the unfinished business and take up the bill (S. No. 367) to extend the time of letters-patent issued to Thaddeus Hyatt. It is a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Patents, and will excite no discussion I think.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 367) to extend the time of letters-patent issued to Thaddeus Hyatt was read the second time.

Mr. GRIMES. How did that bill come before the Senate? I desire to inquire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was taken up on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. GRIMES. I thought the understanding was that we were to take up pension business this evening. This is a bill for the extension of a patent. I object to its being considered now.

Mr. POMEROY. If anybody has any objection to it, I will consent to let the bill go over.

Mr. GRIMES. I object to any case of that kind being taken up now.

Mr. POMEROY. Let the bill be laid aside. I did not suppose anybody had any objection to it.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not know anything about it. I did not come here prepared to consider such subjects to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside.

PETER ANDERSON.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up Senate bill No. 79.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 79) for the benefit of Peter Anderson. It provides for the payment to Peter Anderson of $1,128, in full for back pension, at the rate of six dollars per month, from the day he received his wounds to the day his pension commenced, under award of Commissioner of Pensions; that is, from November 7, 1847, to July 13, 1863.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time and passed.

ANN SHEEHY.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move now to take up for consideration House bill No. 461.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 461) granting a pension to Ann Sheehy.

The bill proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ann Sheehy, of Boston, Massachusetts, on the roll of invalid pensions, and pay her the sum of eight dollars per month during her widowhood; and also to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle and adjust the accounts of John Sheehy, late a private in company D, twenty-eighth Massachusetts volunteers, and pay to Ann Sheehy the amount that may be found to have been due him on the 3d day of July, 1863, the date of his death.

Mr. GRIMES. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Yes, sir; the report of the House committee was read on a former occasion.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM CROSWELL.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Crosswell was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William Crosswell, of Boston, Massachusetts, on the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st day of February, 1865.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear the report in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of William Crosswell, have considered the same, and beg leave to report:

It appears from the petition and accompanying papers that the petitioner shipped on board the United States steamer Columbia in December, 1862. In January following the Columbia was wrecked on the coast of North Carolina, and the petitioner, in attempting to leap from the vessel into a boat which was being tossed about by the waves, struck his side against the thwarts and produced a rupture. His injury was aggravated by exposure in wet and insufficient clothing, and by bad treatment, as a prisoner, by the rebels, he having been captured and taken to Richmond after his escape from the vessel. He is now unable to support himself, and asks a pension of the Government. He is unable to produce evidence from those who were present at the time of the accident, inasmuch as in the general confusion which prevailed scarcely anybody noticed it. One witness, upon whom he depended for proof, has deserted since his exchange, and is not available. Ample testimony does exist, and that it did not exist before the petitioner entered the service.

The committee are of the opinion that the case is meritorious, and they submit herewith a bill allowing the petitioner a pension of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st day of February, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the bill does not put this man on the naval pension-list.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. No; we doubted about the propriety of that, as this occurred on a Government transport.

Mr. GRIMES. Was he not a seaman?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. No; he shipped on board a Government transport. We have put a provision that the pension shall be paid out of the naval pension fund in those cases where we thought it proper. I have no objection to such an amendment here if the Senator from Iowa thinks it proper.

Mr. GRIMES. It strikes me that the committee may possibly have made an error in this case. They say in their report that "it appears from the petition and accompanying papers that the petitioner shipped on board the United States steamer Columbia in December, 1862." If she was a United States naval vessel, he would be entitled to be put upon the naval pension-roll; but if he shipped in an Army transport he is not entitled to a pension at all, because all the Army transports that I am aware of were chartered under charter-parties, and those who were employed as seamen on board of them were paid by the persons who executed the charter-parties. I think it will be discovered that if this man shipped on the Columbia—I have no recollection of any such vessel belonging to the Navy—he was not in the United States Government service at all except in so far as the vessel to the crew of which he belonged was in the Government service.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I think he was in the service in a transport. He was captured and taken to Richmond afterward and was returned as a prisoner of war, at all events.

Mr. GRIMES. I observe that he says in the petition that he was shipped as an ordinary seaman in the United States naval service. If so, he ought to go on the naval pension fund. There does not seem to be any testimony to support the case, though.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. He accounts for the absence of testimony on the ground that he was captured and taken prisoner, and the witness who was with him has deserted our service, but there is abundant proof of the nature of the injury.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

LUCINDA GATES.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up House bill No. 616.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 616) for the relief of Lucinda Gates was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Lucinda Gates, widow of the late Horace Gates, of Franklin, Vermont, on the roll of invalid pensions, she to be paid the same pension during her widowhood, from the death of her husband, as was allowed him per special act approved July 4, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire what the special act is to which reference is made in this bill.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. There is a House report accompanying the bill which can be read if desired. We examined the papers and found the case entirely satisfactory. I cannot remember the facts of this particular case, there are so many of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not ask for the reading of the report if the Senator will state the case.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. It is a House bill. I do not remember the facts of the case, though I know that we examined the papers and found them satisfactory.

Mr. RAMSEY. I imagine that our committee had before them all the evidence on which the House committee acted.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. We had all the evidence, and examined all the papers which were before the House, and finding the House report satisfactory, we adopted it for ourselves.

Mr. RAMSEY. I imagine that is sufficient.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not insist on the reading of the report, but I supposed the Senator from Indiana could explain in a word what the bill meant.

Mr. GRIMES. We have just passed a bill where we had no evidence at all.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The committee examined all the papers. If all the papers were not here, we sent to the House of Representatives and got every paper they had acted upon, and examined every one separately, and wherever the House report was satisfactory we did not make a new report.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

REUBEN CLOUGH.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 171, for the relief of Reuben Clough, which was reported by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 171) for the relief of Reuben Clough was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The purpose of the bill is to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Reuben Clough on the invalid pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 15th day of May, 1815, and ending on the 29th day of December, 1848, when his present pension was allowed him at the Pension Bureau.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill by striking out, in line six, the words "15th day of May, 1815," and inserting "1st day of January, 1816."

Mr. GRIMES. Does the Senator from Minnesota want the report read in that case?

Mr. RAMSEY. I have no objection.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. There is a report accompanying this bill.

Mr. GRIMES. This is a regular old stager. It has been here ever since I have been in the Senate. The claim runs back to 1816. It has been a favorite with the Vermont Senators, if I remember aright, for the last ten years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the report be read. The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. EDMUNDS on the 7th of June:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 171, entitled "A bill for the relief of Reuben Clough," having considered the same, beg leave to report:

That the facts in the case appear in the printed paper herewith returned, marked A, to which the committee refer for statement thereof. Under the act of May 15, 1820, (3 Statutes-at-Large, 597), which provides that "the right any person now has, or may hereafter acquire, to receive a pension in virtue of any law of the United States shall be considered to commence at the time of completing his testimony," &c., the said Clough obtained a pension, commencing on the 29th day of December, 1848, at the rate of eight dollars per month. The said Clough was wounded, at the battle of Chippewa, on the 5th day of July, 1814, and was justly entitled to a pension therefor, under the acts of 1812 and 1813.

The committee find from the evidence that the intellect of the said Clough, as well as his physical health, was greatly enfeebled and impaired in consequence of said wound; and they are satisfied from the evidence that he failed to complete his testimony within a few years after the war of 1812 in consequence of his intellect being so enfeebled and of the want of friends to care for his interests. At one time, prior to 1849, but when does not appear, he procured his testimony in part, but his case was neglected and his testimony lost.

Recognizing fully the propriety of these rigorous limitations in the pension laws, they as fully recognize the equitable exceptions which exist in all statutes of limitations, and in most other laws, in favor of persons incapable or deprived of the opportunity of defending their own interest; and inasmuch as the same wound which created his right to a pension deprived him of the intellectual capacity to obtain it, they are of the opinion that no laches are imputable to him in the premises, and that he is justly entitled to a pension from such time as he might reasonably have been expected to complete his testimony, had his intellect remained unimpaired, which the committee think would have been January 1, 1816. The committee therefore recommend that the bill pass with an amendment, as follows: in line six strike out the words "15th day of May, 1815," and insert the words "1st day of January, 1816."

PENSION OFFICE, April 19, 1860.

It appears from the evidence that Reuben Clough was wounded at Chippewa July 5, 1814. The Adjutant General made the following report in the case: "That Captain Goodrich's muster-roll for June, 1814, reports that Reuben Clough enlisted October 1, 1812, for five years. On roll for August he is reported 'wounded.' In general hospital July 5, 1814. Captain Bliss's muster-roll, eleventh infantry, war establishment, ending May 15, 1815, reports Reuben Clough wounded July 5, 1814; hospital, Williamsville."

It appears that in the battle of Chippewa he received a wound in his face by a ball entering the right nostril, and passing out back of the angle of the lower jaw into the neck. The surgeons in their certificate say: "The inflammation which would probably result from such a gunshot wound might, and probably would, impair materially the mental faculties, by deranging the functions of the brain."

The following is a synopsis of the testimony of witnesses, in the order in which it is presented: Henry Newman, who lives near, and has known Reuben Clough twelve years, knows he is very poor, and incapable of getting his living; his mind appears to be very much impaired.

Ebenezer Perkins has known him for eight years; knows his intellectual faculties are very poor and much impaired.

Cyrus Smith has known him for fourteen years; considers his faculties very poor toward getting a living.

E. B. Dennison has known him about sixteen years; says his intellectual faculties are and have been very poor, and his memory very treacherous.

Samuel Sleeper has known him well for more than forty years; that before he enlisted in the Army he had a good, fair intellect; that after his return from the Army he was wounded and feeble; his constitution and health very much impaired, his intellect enfeebled, and his memory poor, and has been ever since his return from the Army.

John S. Ruter has been acquainted with Reuben Clough for fifty-three years; knew him when a small boy; up to the time he entered the Army was considered of a strong constitution and fair intellect; on his return he had been wounded in the face and was very feeble; his constitution seemed much impaired and his intellect shattered; his intellect has remained very much impaired to the present day.

David Sleeper has been well acquainted with Reuben Clough since 1808; previous to his entering the Army in 1812 he was considered a smart young man, and of good intellect. Soon after his return from the Army in 1815 he came to my father's; he was then very feeble; appeared to have been severely wounded in and about the mouth; several of his teeth missing, his constitution quite broken down, his intellect greatly impaired; he has never recovered in either body or mind.

John W. Smith has been acquainted with him for more than thirty years; knows that he made several efforts to get his testimony prepared within the last twenty years, but failed on account of his extreme poverty and great deficiency of intellect. Once he procured his testimony in part, but his case was neglected and the testimony lost. Said Clough is very poor and quite the wreck of a man, both in body and mind.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time and passed.

JOHN GORDON.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 464) for the relief of John Gordon. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John Gordon, late of company G, ninth United States infantry, upon the pension-rolls at the rate of eight dollars per month, to continue during his natural life.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. When this bill was previously before the Senate it was objected to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] on the ground of its being alleged that a fever sore had ensued from a fever, the man had a deformity from that, and was discharged in consequence. On looking at the report and evidence afterward I found that that matter was really of no consequence, as the sore itself occurred while the man was still in the service, and the deformity ensued, and he was discharged honorably from the service in consequence of the deformity. I have, nevertheless, desiring to be enlightened, looked into the nature of these fever sores, and I find from Worcester's Dictionary that "fever sore is the common name of a species of caries or necrosis;" that "necrosis is mortification, particularly mortification or lifeless state of a bone." Caries is "ulceration or rottenness of a bone; cariosity." Webster says "fever sore" is "the popular name of a carious ulcer or necrosis," and that "necrosis" is "among physicians, mortification, the dry gangrene; among surgeons, an inflammation of a bone, terminating in its death." I have also a letter from a physician in this city, which was procured for me by Dr. Evans, Senator-elect from Colorado, saying:

"Fever sore is defined to be a popular name for a carious ulcer, commonly caused by the death of bone. The parts of the body where such a condition occurs are upon the bones, hands, the feet, and the legs. The causes which produce such a malady are injuries, bruises, and any cause that will seriously depress the vital forces. Contractions and deformities of the part invariably ensue after such a disease, injuring the usefulness and strength of the part."

I think the case was entirely satisfactory except as to this one point; and I presume that if these definitions have not removed the difficulty on that score, the fact that the sore occurred while the man was still in the service and in the line of his duty, and that he was discharged from the service in consequence of his being unable to render military service, will be sufficient to satisfy all.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

HOPESTILL BIGELOW.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up Senate bill No. 359 for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 359) for the relief of Hopestill Bigelow, of New Market, New Jersey, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Hopestill Bigelow of \$710 93 $\frac{1}{2}$, in full for pension due him from the 17th day of April, 1837, to the 26th day of June, 1848, at the rate of \$5 33 $\frac{1}{2}$ per month, which pension was improperly suspended and not paid to him, and to which he was entitled during that period.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY A. STOCKS.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 358) granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy A. Stocks was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its purpose is to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Nancy A. Stocks, widow of Reuben Stocks, late a private in company K, eighteenth regiment Illinois infantry volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 11th day of June, 1863, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRAHAM LANSING.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 366) granting a pension to Abraham Lansing was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Abraham Lansing, late a master's mate in the United States Navy, on the pension-roll at the rate of ten dollars per month, to commence from the passage of the bill, and to continue during his natural life; the pension to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the bill by striking out in the seventh line the word "bill" and inserting "act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. PATRICK.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 495.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 495) for the relief of Mary A. Patrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary A. Patrick, widow of Matthew A. Patrick, who was a captain first artillery United States Army, on the pension-rolls at the rate of twenty dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. McMANUS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up House bill No. 684.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 684) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. McManus, widow of Captain Andrew McManus, late of the sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior will by its provisions be directed to cause the name of Mrs. Mary A. McManus, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, widow of Andrew McManus, late a captain of the sixty-ninth regiment of Pennsylvania infantry volunteers, to be placed on the pension-rolls at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood, and the pension is to go to the child or children of Andrew McManus until they arrive at the age of sixteen years, in the event of the death or marriage of Mary A. McManus.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DRUSEY A. LAYMAN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 376) granting a pension to Drusey A. Layman was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Drusey A. Layman, of Palatine, Marion county, West Virginia, widow of Eugenius E. Layman, deceased, late a private in company C, seventeenth regiment West Virginia volunteers, at eight dollars per month from the death of her husband, on the 13th day of January, in the year 1865, to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN PYLE.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 390.

The motion was agreed to; and bill S. No. 390, granting a pension to John Pyle was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is, under its provisions, to place the name of John Pyle, late a sergeant in company B, one hundred and fifth regiment Indiana militia volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

JOEL FARLEY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 704.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 704) for the relief of Joel Farley. The Secretary of the Interior is under it to place the name of Joel Farley, late a private in company F, eleventh Iowa volunteer infantry, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLOTTE E. REED.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to take up House bill 702.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 702) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte E. Reed, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is an authorization to the Commissioner of Pensions to issue to Mrs. Charlotte E. Reed, widow of John D. Reed, late of Falls Church, Fairfax county, Virginia, a pension certificate, and place her name on the roll of pensioners, with the pay and under the conditions and limitations of a widow of a private of infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. If I understood the reading the bill says "the Commissioner of Pensions." I move to strike out "Commissioner of Pensions" and to insert "Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOHN W. JONES.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 700) for the benefit of John W. Jones. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John W. Jones, late a private in company K, seventeenth regiment, Ohio volunteer infantry, on the pension-roll, and pay him a pension at the rate now allowed by law to pensioners who have suffered the loss of the right arm; and if the pension allowed to that class of pensioners should hereafter be changed by law, he is thereafter to be paid a pension according to such change.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES L. PERHAM.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 699) for the relief of James L. Perham. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to pay to James L. Perham, late of company G, tenth regiment Maine volunteers, a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from February 4, 1863, to November 17, 1864, amounting to $171 36.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL FRANK LYNCH.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 703) for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Lynch. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Frank Lynch, late of the twenty-seventh regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of pension allowed to a lieutenant colonel, to which rank he was commissioned, and pay to him at that rate in lieu of any other pension to which he may have been entitled.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MERCIE E. SCATTERGOOD.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mercie E. Scattergood. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to cause the name of Mrs. Mercie E. Scattergood, widow of Edward Scattergood, to be placed on the roll of naval pensioners, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood, and to be continued to the children of Edward Scattergood who are under sixteen years of age in the event of her death or marriage; the pension, thus granted to be in lieu of that now received by her.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. B. KELLEY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 398.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of W. B. Kelley was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to W. B. Kelley, late a second lieutenant in company F, first regiment Kentucky cavalry volunteers, a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, from the 31st of July, 1863, to March 13, 1865, amounting to $291 50.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHILDREN OF SALVADOR ACCARDI.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 742.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 742) for the relief of the minor children of Salvador Accardi, deceased. The bill proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the names of Adrian J. P. Accardi and Lavinia M. E. Accardi, minor children of the late Salvador Accardi, a musician in the United States Navy, on the pension rolls, and to pay, out of the naval pension fund, a pension of eight dollars per month to their legally appointed guardian, until the youngest of the children shall attain the age of sixteen years. This act is to take effect from the 1st day of January, 1864.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment to the bill, which was in lines four, five, and six, to strike out the name "Accardi" and insert "Accardi."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read the third time. The bill was read the third time and passed. Its title was amended so as to read, "A bill for the relief of the minor children of Salvador Accardi, deceased."

SAMANTHA RADER.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 739.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 739) for the relief of Lemantha Rader was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Lemantha Rader, widow of John Rader, late a private in company K, seventeenth regiment Ohio infantry, on the list of pensioners, and pay her the sum of eight dollars per month during her widowhood; and in the event of her marriage or death, then to the minor child or children of John Rader, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, in lines four and nine, to strike out the word "Lemantha" and to insert "Samantha."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction in the name will be made if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed, and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill for the relief of Samantha Rader."

EDGAR T. HARRIS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move now to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 179.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of Edgar T. Harris was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Edgar T. Harris, of the first West Virginia infantry, upon the list of pensioners, at such a rate of pension as the laws allow for full and permanent disability.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. BUSH.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move now to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 705.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 705) for the relief of George W. Bush. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to George W. Bush, of the city and county of New York, late a sergeant in company G, ninetyeth regiment New York volunteers, a pension of eight dollars per month from August 29, 1863, to March 3, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. EMERANCE GOULER.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move now to take up House bill No. 743.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 743) amendatory of an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend an act approved April 18, 1866, granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler, so as to continue the pension granted to Mrs. Gouler, in the event of her death or remarriage, to her minor children under the age of sixteen years, had by her late husband, Charles Gouler, a private of company F, ninth New Hampshire volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATILDA J. MONROE.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move now to take up House bill No. 740.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 740) for the relief of Matilda J. Monroe was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Matilda J. Monroe, widow of David B. Monroe, late a sergeant in company A, sixty-second Ohio volunteers, on the pension-rolls at the rate of eight dollars per month, and continue during her widowhood, commencing on the 16th of March, 1863, and in the event of her death or remarriage, then to the minor children of David B. Monroe, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JONATHAN W. BEACH.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 741.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 741) granting pension to Jonathan W. Beach, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing upon the pension-rolls the name of Jonathan W. Beach at twenty-five per month during his blindness.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment to the bill, in line six, after the words "twenty-five" to insert "dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

SARAH BACON.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up Senate bill No. 403, which was reported adversely.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 403) to place the name of Sarah Bacon on the pension-list.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move the indefinite postponement of that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' PENSIONS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 692, increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first section proposes to extend the provisions of the pension laws so as to include provost marshals, deputy provost marshals, and enrolling officers, who have been killed or wounded in the discharge of their duties; and for the purpose of determining the amount of pension to which such persons and their dependents shall be entitled, provost marshals are to be ranked as captains, deputy provost marshals as first lieutenants, and enrolling officers as second lieutenants.

The second section provides that the pensions to widows of deceased soldiers and sailors, having children by such deceased soldiers or sailors, shall be increased at the rate of two dollars per month for each child of such soldier or sailor under the age of sixteen years; and in all cases in which there shall be more than one child of any deceased soldier or sailor leaving no widow, the pension granted to such children under sixteen years of age by existing laws shall be increased to the same amount per month that would be allowed under this provision to the widow if living and entitled to a pension; but in no case is more than one pension to be allowed to the same person.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill by inserting after the word "widow," in line seven of section two, the words "or where his widow has died or married again."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. By instruction of the committee I move to amend that amendment by adding to it these words, "or where she has been deprived of her pension under the provisions of section eleven of an act entitled 'An act supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions,' approved June 6, 1866."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment of the committee was to add as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, are hereby, so far as applicable, extended to the pensioners under previous laws, except revolutionary pensioners.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 6, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, the Indian appropriation bill, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the bill with the amendments was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that by unanimous consent the morning hour of to-day be dispensed with.

Mr. McKEE. I object.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the House to grant me a few moments for personal explanation. I will not occupy more than a few moments.

No objection was made.

Mr. STEVENS. On looking at the Globe now a week or two old, I observe some remarks made in my absence relative to my views of secession, which perhaps ought not to pass without comment lest in future they might be taken as true.

The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HARRIS,] with a boldness which showed great moral courage, whatever may be thought of its prudence, avowed himself the advocate of secession, and defended those who through it attempted to dissolve the Union. This was no new doctrine. It was held by the whole slaveholding South before the rebellion, and was sustained by their northern allies. But it has become less respectable since they were subdued; and their northern friends, now turning upon those in misfortune, choose here to disclaim the doctrine and to disavow the responsibility of the principles of their more candid, sincere, and brave colleagues. While repudiating it, they thought to divide the odium by attributing the same doctrine to certain Republicans. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] said it was the same doctrine held by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] with great clearness and truth, immediately corrected his error, for which I thank him. I had so often defined my position on this point that I had hoped that no one was so stupid as to misunderstand it, or so unprincipled as to misrepresent it. I was mistaken; and again, I think for the fifth time, will restate it.

I ask any gentleman who doubts to examine every word I have ever uttered on this question, and I challenge him to point out a single word to sustain the gentleman's assertion. I have always denied the right of secession, and denounced it as the highest crime known to the law. Secession means a withdrawal, a separation from the Government of the Union while such secession exists. I have held, and still hold, that the belligerent called the confederate States of America did commit this crime of secession; did for some four years separate and divide themselves from the Government of the United States, and established and maintained a separate and distinct government de facto; that while they maintained that position—defending it with large armies and well-balanced victories; issuing commissions, both by land and water, which were respected even by ourselves as sufficing to protect those acting under them from the penal consequences of their acts; holding one half this continent in their separate and exclusive possession; marching armies of more than one hundred thousand men into the territories of their enemy; carrying on all the machinery of a well-organized government, and conducting municipal governments in eleven well-organized States, united under one general confederation, more powerful than was ever our revolutionary government, and possessing three times as many citizens; and while for five years said confederate government renounced all connection with the United States, and claimed to be an independent and foreign Power—I hold that during all this time, after they had risen from the condition of insurgents, the law of nations declared them to be a belligerent engaged in a public war; and that all the rules of war, regulating their rights and liabilities, applied to them; and that we stood upon the same footing as two foreign nations engaged in open war, the only difference being that if the parent Government conquered she could elect to punish for violated sovereignty as well as for an unjust war. It cannot be denied that the civilized world treated the confederate States as a belligerent, and it is worse than falsehood to deny that we so acknowledged them.

It is a well-recognized principle that a public war between acknowledged belligerents severs all the ties, obligations, treaties, and compacts that existed between them; and that such obligations are not revived or renewed by peace without express stipulations to that effect. How, then, can any man of common judgment deny that these two belligerents were separate Powers, and that the conqueror had a right to dictate terms to the vanquished; that without the conqueror's consent and his terms there could be no reunion. I have said more than once that if my wishes could prevail, instead of justifying secession I would punish the conquered belligerents by the forfeiture of sufficient of their property to pay the expenses and damages of the war. Because I have declared that the confederate States had by their acts and declarations placed themselves outside the Union (at our election) gentlemen have asserted that it admitted the right of secession. He is a very stupid man who cannot discern between the existence of a crime and its justification. I have never been able by any process of reasoning to form any other theory of the status of the States. I have been sometimes charged with holding that the States were dead, their carcasses lying about in the Union. I never held such absurdity—others have; and I have said that it made no difference, as the power to reconstruct in either case lay in Congress alone. The doctrine of "suspended animation" seems to me equally ridiculous.

There never was an hour when the eleven States were not in full and active life—no suicide; no suspended animation. They had a perfect organization fitted with every officer necessary to execute all the legislative and municipal functions of a civil government. But while they were thus active in their organization, it was an organization outside the Government of the United States, and in no sense of the word forming a part of the same. To say that during all this time they were States in the Union, entitled to all its privileges whenever they chose, is a consummation of folly which could have been conceived but by a single government upon the face of the earth—a government made up of patches, thrown by a convulsion into the executive chair. Here are two mighty nations, raising billions of money, and commanding millions of armed warriors, charging in deadly strife; now victorious and now defeated; seizing each other's dominions and laying them waste, and we are told that all that time they were one people; one Government; one united fraternity! And an official, whose station is more exalted than that of kings, lately seizes a most awkward and inopportune occasion to send down to Congress a slunk stump speech in a most imperfect state of gestation, and informs us that there are "eleven States excluded from representation, although they have been entirely restored to all their functions as States in conformity with the organic law of the land." Restored by whom? By one Andrew Johnson, who fancies himself the depositary of all the legislative and executive power of the Government.

After so thorough a discussion of the law and the reason of the question, which has but one side; after Congress by a two-thirds vote had three times declared that his interference to reconstruct those States was mere impertinence; after the conclusive argument of the senatorial chairman of the committee on reconstruction to the same effect, who would have expected any sober man to be reiterating such folly?

But I have gone beyond my purpose. I rose simply to deny any belief in the right of secession, and incidentally to deny the idea, no less absurd but much less injurious, that during the existence of the confederate government the eleven States were in any sense in the Union or have since got in, and also to express my inability to comprehend the idea of a State partly in the Union and partly out of it—a kind of Egyptian mummy with "suspended animation," close wrapped in cements, stiff and motionless, but ready to leap into action when some kind deity shall open the sarcophagus.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the regular order of business.

PENSIONS FOR THE WAR OF 1812.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the reception of reports of a private nature from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the pending bill is the bill (H. R. No. 665) reported on Friday last by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] to grant pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

The bill was read. It provides that each of the surviving officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, who shall have served in the regular Army, State troops, volunteers, or militia, for a term of three or more months, or shall have been engaged in active battle with the enemy, in the war declared by the United States against Great Britain on the 18th day of June, 1812, be authorized to receive, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount now paid, according to the same rank, but not exceeding in any case the pay of a captain of infantry, such pay to commence from the passage of this bill and continue during his natural life.

The second section provides that each of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, who shall have served in the regular Army, State troops, volunteers, or militia, for the space of three or more months against any of the Indian tribes during the time of the war of 1812 with Great Britain, or who were engaged in any battle fought by the United States against any Indian tribe during the aforesaid war with Great Britain, shall be entitled to all the benefits of the first section of this act.

The third section provides that if any of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, or privates, have died, leaving a widow, such widow shall be entitled to receive the same pension to which her husband would have been entitled under this act for and during her natural life.

The fourth section provides that the pay allowed by this act shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be paid to the officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, private, or his widow, or their authorized attorney, at such places and times as the Secretary of the Interior may direct; and that no officer, non-commissioned officer, private, or his widow, shall receive the same until he furnish the said Secretary of the Interior with satisfactory evidence that he is entitled to the same in accordance with the provisions of this act; and that the pay hereby allowed shall not be in any way transferable, or liable to attachment, levy, or seizure, by any legal process whatever, but shall go unencumbered to the possession of the officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, private, or his widow.

The fifth section provides that the officers, non-commissioned officers, and marines, who served for the said term of three months in the naval service, or were engaged in actual battle with the enemy during the war with Great Britain aforesaid, and their widows, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act in the same manner as is provided for the officers and soldiers of the Army of the war of 1812.

Mr. COFFROTH. After the very decided vote given on last Friday in favor of granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, I will not make any extended remarks in favor of the bill, and I will call the previous question at this time, explaining that if any gentlemen upon the other side of the House desire to discuss it, I will yield them a part of my time after the previous question shall be seconded.

Mr. PERHAM. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a few minutes before the previous question is seconded.

Mr. COFFROTH. I prefer to have the previous question seconded first.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. COFFROTH. I will hear the suggestion.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I perceive, upon looking over this bill that there is no exclusion of disloyal persons who served in the war of 1812, of which there are perhaps large numbers in the southern States. Yet under the provisions of this bill they would receive a pension equally with the loyalists. I ask him to consider that matter, and exclude that portion of them from the benefits of this act.

Mr. COFFROTH. If the gentleman will indicate the amendment he desires, I will yield to allow him to offer it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have not prepared the amendment, but I will do so in a moment.

Mr. COFFROTH. While the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] is preparing his amendment, I will yield to hear what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PERHAM] has to say.

Mr. PERHAM. I discussed at some length a few days since the proposition to pension the soldiers of the war of 1812. That discussion was with reference to the bill presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER,] which provided only for pensioning those who are in necessitous circumstances. I do not know that I need to repeat the proposition which I presented on that occasion. I am quite certain that under that bill the expense would not be less than what I stated at that time; and under this bill it would be about one third more. The calculation which I then made was based on only the number who served for three months or more, which I believe was the basis upon which that bill was founded. If the House is desirous to pass a bill for the soldiers of 1812, the Committee on Invalid Pensions are not disposed to interpose special objection or long debate. I am instructed by the committee, however, to ask the House to substitute for this bill one similar to that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER.] His bill was recommitted to us with instructions to report favorably upon it. The committee have prepared some amendments to it, and have directed me to move it, so amended, as a substitute for this bill.

Mr. COFFROTH. I do not yield for anything of that kind.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. COFFROTH. For a few moments, yes.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to discuss at length the bill which is here introduced, and which is laid upon our desks this morning for the first time. It has been in my hands for perhaps three minutes; and that is the only opportunity I have had for examining its provisions. I have the honor to represent a district which probably has to-day within its limits more men and widows who will be entitled to pensions should this bill pass than in any other district in the United States. My district is a frontier district, lying upon Lake Champlain, the whole population of which capable of bearing arms served during the war of 1812 in repelling the repeated attempted invasions of the British on that frontier. I apprehend that to-day the same style of men are abundant in that district. And I have yet to hear the first application from those fighting men of my constituency for the passage of such a bill as that now under consideration. I have yet to learn that at this time, when the country is burdened with such a weight of debt, with the heavy expenses which must necessarily continue for many years to come, they are prepared to ask for pensions to an extent which will involve an annual expenditure of not less than $10,000,000 a year for some years to come; and, as I believe, not less than $15,000,000 a year.

The cry is raised that these soldiers of the war of 1812 should be put upon the same footing as the soldiers of the late civil war. Now, I call upon members to bear in mind that without this bill they stand upon precisely the same footing. Those who were disabled in the service of the war of 1812 and the widows of those who lost their lives in that service are now entitled to precisely the same bounties and to all the privileges that are conferred upon the soldiers of the war through which we have just passed. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] if he proposes to do equal justice to the officers and soldiers of the last war, the war through which we have just passed. Is he prepared to report a bill which shall give to them the same liberality, make for them the same provisions that this bill makes for the soldiers of the war of 1812?

Mr. COFFROTH. I will say that I am; and that in forty-nine or fifty-two years from this time I hope that every man who represents the people in this House will vote to place upon the pension-roll every man who fought in this war.

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to hear it. It comports with my idea of the liberality of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Profusus alieni—liberal with other people's money. Sir, I come here in no such spirit. I do not believe that it becomes us to talk even of giving pensions to every soldier who served in the late war. Why, the gentleman knows, and every man endowed with an ordinary share of common sense knows, that we might as well talk about buying the moon as pensioning the million and more of soldiers who served in the late war. This proposition, if it be meant as an entering wedge to a proposition of the kind which the gentleman from Pennsylvania now suggests, is certainly a proposition for nothing more nor less than national bankruptcy. No man believes that we can pension the soldiers of the late war, giving a pension to every man who has served in the armies of the United States, and survive, or begin to survive, the expense entailed by it. If we are not prepared to follow it out logically, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes, why in Heaven's name begin with these soldiers of the war of 1812? The gentleman's argument has at least the merit of consistency. If this bill passes, we ought, in justice, to pension everybody else who served in any war, or smelt powder anywhere. If the sentiment of this House is that we should at once pass a bill that will involve an expenditure of from $100,000,000 to $500,000,000 a year for pensions, let us do it boldly and directly, and not come at it in this circumlocutory fashion.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the passage of such a bill as this through this House would be such a sign of, to say the least, easy virtue in regard to the administration of the finances of this country that it would tend greatly toward unsettling the credit of the nation; and if we are to adopt it upon the terms proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on the understanding that it is to be followed by such a bill as he proposes, then I submit we ought at once to avail ourselves, as a nation, of the advantages of the bill which was proposed and advocated during this session by the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. JENOKES,] and which has passed this House. We shall need to avail ourselves of a bankrupt law; and I fear, sir, we shall not show assets enough to entitle ourselves to a first-class certificate. For one, I trust this measure will be defeated squarely, and therefore I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] is entitled to the floor until he surrenders it. After that the motion to lay on the table will be in order. The gentleman has yielded only for remarks.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to cut off debate, but I give notice that I will, when the opportunity shall arise, make the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. COFFROTH. I would like to hear the amendment suggested by my colleague on the committee, [Mr. BENJAMIN.]

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line nine, after the word "twelve," insert the words, "and who now are, and have been at all times, loyal to the Government of the United States."

Mr. STEVENS. Through my own negligence I failed to hear the bill read. I would like to know whether it is confined to indigent persons.

Mr. THAYER. No, sir; it takes in everybody.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish to know whether the bill of my colleague [Mr. MILLER] is confined to indigent persons.

Mr. MILLER. This is not my bill.

Mr. COFFROTH. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for granting a pension to all the surviving soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812. As long ago as eight or ten years a bill of this kind was reported and passed by the House of Representatives. The first section of this bill is well guarded. It is provided that pensions shall be granted only to those who were in the service three months or more, or were actually engaged in battle. The bill contains all the safeguards necessary to protect the Government from imposition or squandering of the money of the people.

I will not now, sir, make any extended remarks in favor of the bill. Forty-nine years after the revolutionary war Congress, with unprecedented unanimity, passed a bill placing every surviving revolutionary soldier upon the pension-roll. It is now fifty-three years since the termination of the war of 1812, the second war of independence, and will the Representatives of the people in the Thirty-Ninth Congress say to the soldiers of that war, the men who then went out to defend the country in its infancy, that they shall not have the same justice done to them as was to the revolutionary patriots? I admire the spirit in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] spoke of my liberality. I only request him to be more liberal to the old soldiers of the war of 1812 before he votes to squander millions of the people's money for objects by no means as worthy.

Mr. HALE. One word. My congratulation on the gentleman's liberality he did not perhaps entirely comprehend. I only complimented his liberality with other people's money.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will reply that the gentleman has been liberal in many other instances with other people's money.

Mr. HALE. If the gentleman will specify the bill I will give him a cognovit. Specify the instances where I have voted to squander the public money.

Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman voted over nine million dollars for freedmen—I mean the appropriation for the Freedmen's Bureau.

Mr. HALE. I confess to having voted for appropriation bills reported by the committee.

If the gentleman has voted against them I am sorry for it.

Mr. THAYER. Will my colleague let me ask him a question?

Mr. COFFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to ask my colleague why, inasmuch as the bill proposes to compensate every one who has had anything to do with the war of 1812, he has omitted the sailors; why he has omitted to provide compensation for those who achieved glories on the sea transcending anything done on the land during that contest.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask the gentleman to read the fifth section of the bill.

Mr. THAYER. It only refers to marines. It does not embrace sailors.

Mr. COFFROTH. It has been an accidental omission; and I move to insert the words "sailors and" before "marines."

Mr. Speaker, I have received a great many letters from the surviving soldiers of the war of 1812, asking me to bring this bill to a vote at the earliest day. I do not desire to consume any further time; I demand the previous question.

Mr. HALE moved that the bill be laid upon the table; and demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 84, not voting 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Baxter, Boutwell, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Hulburt, Kasson, Ketcham, Ladlin, Longyear, Marvin, McRuer, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Sawyer, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Elithu B. Washburne, and William B. Washburn—46.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Barker, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Cullom, Dawson, Delano, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Hogan, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Julian, Kelly, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Marston, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Niblack, Neill, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Phelps, Radford, Samuel Neill, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Phelps, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Spaulding, Stevens, Stilwell, Taber, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—84.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Banks, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Bover, Brandegee, Broomall, Chanler, Conkling, Cook, Culver, Darling, DeForest, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Goodyear, Harris, Hill, Hotchkiss, Hakeel W. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Jencks, Jones, Lynch, Marshall, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, Morris, Newell, Nicholson, Pike, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Taylor, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Ward, Warner, Whaley, Williams, Windom, and Wright—52.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ANCONA stated that his colleague was absent on account of indisposition.

The result having been announced as above recorded,

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. KELLEY. I rise to a point of order. Pending this motion would it be in order to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

The SPEAKER. Not during the pendency of the demand for the previous question. If the previous question should not be seconded, then that motion would be in order.

Mr. ROSS. I call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] to the fact that he has omitted the soldiers of the Black Hawk war. [Laughter.]

On seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—yeas 26, nays 75.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. KELLEY. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HALE. I hope the gentleman will yield a moment.

Mr. KELLEY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I ask the gentleman to allow me to move as an amendment to recommend with instructions to report next Monday.

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir; the very object in sending it to the committee is that they may consider the various amendments and substitutes that are proposed and bring in a better-considered bill.

Mr. PERHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to present a substitute which the committee have already considered and acted upon?

Mr. KELLEY. I decline to yield.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I ask my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] to incorporate in his motion "with leave to report at any time."

Mr. KELLEY. There are various amendments and substitutes proposed, and I want the committee to have ample time to consider them all and bring in a well-considered and fully-matured bill. I therefore decline to yield.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It is for the purpose of killing the bill. That is the object.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 67, noes 37.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. COFFROTH. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 74, nays 47, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McKuer, Mercut, Miller, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rousseau, Scofield, Taylor, Thayer, Trowbridge, Tyson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, and Stephen F. Wilson—74.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, DeForest, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Garfield, Goodyear, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Lynch, Marshall, McClurg, McInroe, Morris, Moulton, Newell, Nicholson, Radford, Schoenck, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Strouse, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Ward, Warner, Whaley, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—61.

So the bill was recommended to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommended; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERHAM. Mr. Speaker, it will be recollected that one week ago to-day the House referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions a proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] to grant pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812 who were in necessitous circumstances. The committee have considered that subject and are now ready to report, and would be glad to report on that proposition now.

Mr. HALE. I beg leave to ask if that bill provides for doing the same justice to the soldiers of the late war for the suppression of the rebellion as to those of the war of 1812.

Mr. PERHAM. It does not include them.

Mr. HALE. I object to the reporting of any bill which does not extend the same rate of pension to the soldiers of the late war as to the soldiers of other wars.

Mr. PERHAM. Then I ask the unanimous consent of the House that some time may be fixed when the committee may make the report.

Mr. TAYLOR. I object.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call the committees for reports of a private nature.

JAMES C. COOK.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill for the relief of James C. Cook; which was read a first and second time.

The bill grants leave to James C. Cook to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of the letters-patent which were issued for the term of fourteen years from the 27th of July, 1862, for an improvement in machines for forming button backs and affixing the eyes thereto, in the same manner as if he had filed his petition at least ninety days prior to the expiration of his patent, and authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to consider and determine the said application in the same manner as if it had been so filed.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. This is an improvement in the machinery for forming button backs. There is not much money in it. Mr. TAYLOR. I call for the reading of the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, when, the morning hour having expired,

The SPEAKER stated that the bill would go over until next Friday.

COMMUTATION OF PRISONERS' RATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 5, 1866.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 14th of June, calling for information relating to the commutation of rations allowed to Union soldiers who were prisoners of war, I have the honor to report:

1. That by a general order of February 14, 1862, rations to Union soldiers held as prisoners of war in the rebel States, were commuted at cost price during the period of their imprisonment. The sum paid on this account is reported by the commissioner at about two and a half million dollars. This commutation has not been considered as an ordinary claim of allowance under existing laws and no specific appropriation has been made to meet it, but it was allowed from the necessities of the case, to provide for those who were undergoing the calamity of prisoners in the rebel States.

2. After hostilities had terminated, and the prisoners were all released, it became manifest that commutation claims were becoming the subject of speculation and traffic by agents, brokers, and persons engaged in that class of business; and, in the absence of any specific appropriation, the order for payment of commutation was suspended until Congress should make an appropriation, if deemed proper, and provide regulations that might secure the money to the persons properly entitled and protect them against fraudulent speculation. The outstanding claims requiring appropriation, principally in the hands of agents, assignees, brokers, &c., are estimated at $3,400,000.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,

Secretary of War.

HON. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOTFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, the following clause being under consideration:

On corktree, bark of, unmanufactured, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after that clause, "on cotton and machine cards, forty-five per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On eyelets made of brass or other metal, eight cents per thousand; on felt, roofing, and patent adhesive, for ships' bottoms, made wholly or in part of hair, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. In the last clause I move to strike out the words "made wholly or in part of hair."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On fire-crackers, per box of not over forty packs, not exceeding eighty to each pack, (and in the same proportion for any greater number,) $1 25 per box: Provided, That no fire-crackers shall be admitted at a less rate of duty than sixty per cent. ad valorem.

On fulminates or fulminating powders, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On gloves of all kinds, except gloves made wholly or in part of silk, not herein otherwise provided for, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On gold and silver plate, and on plated, German silver, argentine, platina, and alabata, or white metal ware or manufactures, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On hair-brushes and tooth-brushes, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on paint-brushes and brushes of all kinds, not herein otherwise provided for, forty per cent. ad valorem.

On hair-cloth, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend the last clause by striking out "forty" and inserting "forty-five," so as to make the duty on hair-cloth forty-five per cent. ad valorem. All those persons who are engaged in making sofas, chairs, and other furniture, and preparing this hair-cloth to be used, are interested in the duty on hair-cloth. At the rate at which it comes in here it is utterly impossible that they can compete with the foreign manufacturer. I hope the committee will consent to add five per cent. to the duty.

Mr. MORRILL. It is true, as the gentleman says, that the manufacturers of sofas, chairs, and other articles of furniture are interested in the article of hair-cloth, but they are interested in not having the duty raised. We admit the raw material free, and although it is a difficult manufacture, requiring some skill and machinery, yet I think the duty is sufficient, and ought not to be raised.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to make the duty forty-seven cents. It is very unpleasant to rise here and discuss the merits of any amendment proposed, because the arguments are always the same in reference to every article which is imported from abroad. I am in favor of protecting those American manufactures which are struggling in their infancy for existence. This item of hair-cloth is one of vast interest in the locality where I reside. And I know that in other sections of the country American manufacturers are struggling to introduce the home-made article into the American market, to the exclusion of the foreign-made article. I do hope the House will permit my amendment to pass irrespective of the argument used against it by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL,] who, it seems to me, never wants any item in this bill to be increased one penny, while he is generally willing to allow it to be decreased.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman should be aware that we already propose an increase of ten per cent. upon this article. It certainly is enough, and I do not know of any very special reason why it should be raised at all.

Mr. O'NEILL. The very reasons which have induced the Committee of Ways and Means to recommend an increase of ten per cent. should be an argument for the Committee of the Whole to raise it still more. In the argument of the gentleman, it is of course admitted that the present rate of duty is too low, because the committee have seen fit to recommend an increase of ten per cent. Now, I do not see why the Committee of the Whole should not put on five per cent. more, so that the American manufacturer can drive out of the American market the foreign-made article. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] to accept the following in lieu of his amendment: to strike out the words "on hair-cloth forty per cent. ad valorem" and insert in lieu thereof "on hair-cloth of the description known as hair-seating, forty-five cents per square yard; on hair cloth other than seating, fifty per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. O'NEILL. I will withdraw my amendment to allow that to be offered, as it reaches the object I have in view.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I now offer the amendment I have just read. I agree very generally with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] has said upon this subject. This matter of hair-cloth and hair-seating is not a very large interest. Until a very short time since this article was made chiefly in England and Germany. But there are now some two or three moderate-sized factories in this country; one in Rhode Island, one in New York, and, I think, one in Pennsylvania. But it is impossible for them to continue the manufacture of this article in competition with foreign manufacturers of it at the present low rate of duty. I trust the Committee of the Whole will agree to the amendment I have proposed, for I am satisfied the public interest will be served thereby. I believe this is the first time during the progress of this bill that I have suggested any increase of duty on any article. But I do it in this instance because, as this subject has been represented to me, I am satisfied that the interests of this manufacture require it.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] for several reasons. One reason is that this article is of very different qualities, some of which are worth at least double what other qualities are worth. And I believe the constituents of the gentleman are as much interested in keeping this article at a reasonable rate of duty as the constituents of any other gentleman here. To my own knowledge a very large amount of manufactures in which this article is largely consumed are made either in Boston or its immediate vicinity; and they are made there not only for consumption in the United States, but also for export. The increased duty proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, in consequence of the pressure brought to bear upon them by manufacturers, who complain of the dearth of labor, of ten per cent., is certainly as much as is reasonable, and I trust no more will be granted by this committee.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, and upon a division there were—ayes 80, noes 87; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICE of Massachusetts, and Mr. GARFIELD, were appointed.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 49.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On India-rubber shoes and boots; and all manufactures of India-rubber not herein otherwise provided for, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment was offered.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the paragraph last read the following paragraphs:

On fabrics of India-rubber and other materials combined, three inches wide or over, six cents per lineal yard, and forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On all other fabrics of India-rubber and other materials combined, not otherwise provided for, twenty-five cents for every one hundred and forty-four yards, and fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On braces and suspenders made of India-rubber and other materials combined, thirty-five cents per dozen, and fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On umbrella and parasol elastic ties, six cents per dozen, and fifty per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert the following paragraph after the amendment last adopted:

On manufactures of gutta-percha, and on all manufactured insulated telegraphic or electric wires or cables used for submarine, telegraphic, or other purposes, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On marble, white statuary, brocette, Sienna, Verde antique, in block, rough or squared, one dollar per cubic foot, and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem; on veined marble, and marble of all other descriptions, not herein otherwise provided for, in block, rough or squared, one dollar per cubic foot; on marble polished, finished, or partly finished, marble chimney-pieces, and all other manufactures of marble, seventy per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend by striking out in the forty-seventh and forty-eighth lines the words "one dollar" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy cents;" so that the clause will read, "on veined marble and marble of all other descriptions not herein otherwise provided for, in block, rough or squared, seventy cents per cubic foot." I offer this amendment because, in my judgment, it allows a sufficiently liberal increase upon an interest which I think is adequately protected now; while the new rate proposed in the bill will exclude an article which we cannot produce in this country. The present duty amounts to one hundred per cent. Italian marble sold in the market at auction—and it is all sold at auction—sells at from sixty-three to sixty-five cents per cubic foot; and the present duty is fifty cents per foot and twenty per cent. ad valorem, making a duty of about sixty-three cents.

The Italian marble does not compete with our American marble. It is needed for such work as that before you, Mr. Chairman, requiring a high polish and sharp lines, and for monuments which are exposed to the weather. Our American marble—and we produce it in the township adjoining my district—is too porous. It will not bear exposure to the weather. It absorbs liquids and is tarnished by them. It is easily affected by acids. It is not suitable for monuments. And now, at a period when a grateful people all over our broad country are striving to erect monuments which shall be enduring to the brave men who have died to save their country, the legislation proposed will either prevent the making of those monuments of marble or constrain their construction of an article not durable, an article easily defaceable, an article which, exposed to our variable climate, will scarcely live through the generation and preserve the lettering upon its face.

There is in this whole bill no item in reference to which such a duty as this is proposed. Upon kid gloves the duty is but fifty cents. Upon various manufactured articles the duty ranges from fifteen to fifty cents. Yet here upon a raw material, which really does not come in conflict with any of our own products, we propose to put a duty of one hundred and fifty per cent. I say that it does not come in conflict with any native product, because our American marble is bought before it is quarried. It is bought in the quarry. It never has to find its way to auction or to public sale. In our Pennsylvania quarries and in those of Vermont, strata are now, I venture to say, marked with the owner's name, having been bought as they lay where nature placed them, and now waiting to be gotten out. The duty on this article is now, as I have said, about sixty-three cents, or one hundred per cent. Seventy cents, an increase of seven cents, will compensate for the prevailing high prices and derangement in labor, and will leave our American marble adequately protected against Italian competition for any purposes for which marble is fit.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I believe that Italian marble, Verde antique, &c., may be as properly classed among the luxuries of the country as anything upon which we assess a duty.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman will permit me to say that my amendment does not apply to Verde antique.

Mr. SPALDING. I understand the gentleman as proposing to reduce the rate of duty named in the bill upon Italian marble; and the gentleman says that we must make this reduction because we have monuments to erect over the graves of our faithful soldiers who have fallen in the country's defense. Sir, if a monument of Italian marble is to be erected over the grave of any of our soldiers let it be done; but, my word for it, the fund which raises that monument will pay the duty upon the marble. Sir, this marble is not wanted for the soldier's grave. It would be honorable to the nation if our soldiers' graves could be adorned with monuments of American marble. Who of those within the sound of my voice has friends or relatives whose names are commemorated in Italian marble? Soldiers' representatives, the survivors of soldiers, do not expect it. It is only an appeal made to our sympathy on this and every other occasion. I say this marble is wanted to decorate the palaces of the rich in our country, men who are able to pay for this and all other articles of luxury. If we raise the duty on any one we should raise it on those who are rich and able to erect palaces and decorate them with Italian marble and Verde antique. The committee have acted wisely, in my judgment, in putting this duty upon this importation. I would not abate one particle of it.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move to strike out "seventy" and insert "seventy-five." Mr. Chairman, there is perhaps no section of the country more interested in this question than my district. The marble the gentleman [Mr. KELLEY] speaks of is, as to the marble of Vermont, a satyr to Hyperion. This is a question of facts and figures. It is said the people of Vermont who are interested in the marble quarries have become rich. It is not true, sir. Up to the present day there has not been as much derived from the marble quarries of Vermont as has been invested in developing them. The marble region of Vermont is almost entirely in my district. Marble quarries are being opened at great expense, and unless there is adequate protection afforded the work will have to cease. Let us see what the effect will be. This is a question of revenue with fair reference to protection. Before 1864 the duty on Italian marble was forty cents a cubic foot. The duty derived under that tariff was, in the year ending June 30, 1864, $43,390 40; and when the duty was increased from forty to fifty cents a cubic foot we had the dealers in Italian marble here saying if we increased the duty, it would stop entirely the importation of Italian marbles. What was the result? During the year ending June 30, 1865, the revenue on Italian marble rose from $43,390 40 to $81,764 20.

Look still further to see what the effect of the present tariff has been, whether or not it has prevented the importation of Italian marble, as importers of Italian marble then predicted. The number of feet in eleven months after the tariff of 1864 over and above what was imported the previous year was forty-five thousand five hundred and eighty, and the increase of duty was $32,937, for eleven months after the tariff was raised from forty to fifty cents, and when Italian marble importers said they would be ruined against twelve months when the tariff was forty cents a cubic foot. From June 30, 1863, to June 30, 1864, the duty was $43,340 15; and from July 1, 1865, to June 9, 1866, eleven months after the duty was increased, it was raised from $43,340 15 to $114,079. In other words, in spite of what these gentlemen said before the committee and the House, there was an increase of revenue in eleven months of $71,000. What is the cost of Italian marble? I have it from the gentlemen who came here interested in the article in 1864. The price, delivered by lighters from the quarries at Carrara, is sixty-five cents a cubic foot, and the whole cost of freight and all reduced to gold is only $2 11 per cubic foot.

Mr. KELLEY. I oppose the amendment and insist upon seventy cents. My distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] is pained at the very suggestion that any American should have a monument of Italian marble. Sir, he cannot point to polished marble in any of our large cemeteries that is not Italian. And does he mean to say that our soldiers shall have monuments that are neither enduring nor polished? Does he mean to say that henceforth all such work as embellishes our cemeteries shall be excluded? There are certain things that we cannot construct of American marble so that they shall vie with foreign art or develop our own art genius from our own marble. I do not ask that we should interfere with the market for Vermont marble. It has its place in the market, and Italian marble cannot interfere with it. It is more easily worked for indoor embellishments. Where polish is not required it is more elegant than Italian marble. In this whole vast structure you find the Speaker's, Clerk's, and Reporters' desks, some few slabs in the Marble Room, some of the subbases, and some of the steps of the extension, where the hardest stone was needed, made of Italian marble. Further than that it does not compete with American marble in this great structure. Nor would it in our markets. You do not find Italian billiard-table tops. They are made of Vermont marble.

I do not want to dispute the excellence of Vermont marble. It is vastly superior to that which is quarried in my immediate neighborhood, and superior for all these uses. It has its own distinctive character, and that character is known to the trade. Vermont marble men will not sell one cubic foot less with a duty of seventy cents than they would with a duty of one dollar. I appeal to the gentleman himself to say whether there is any stock of quarried marble on hand for sale to-day, and whether there is not always an active demand for all the marble that can be quarried. It is for the American artists, it is for the men who deal in marble in our cities that I am pleading, that they may have an opportunity of buying the small quantity they require of the stone in which they can embody their skill in art, so that their work may endure as that of the ancients has done.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move, pro forma, to make it eighty. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I ever heard that Vermont marble was not durable or not fit for monuments. I am quite sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has been misinformed by those who have presented their claims in favor of Italian marble. There is no marble in the world which endures time and the weather more perfectly than the marble of Vermont.

Now, sir, at Carrara they employ labor at from eight to twenty cents a day. The cost of their marble per cubic foot, delivered on board the vessel from the lighter, is sixty-five cents. The freight is three dollars, but for the purpose of being liberal I will admit it may be $3 50. Labor in the quarries of Vermont is from two dollars and a half to three dollars a day, and there are employed there to-day perhaps five thousand men, and I assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that to be consistent with himself he is the last man to ask us to pass a law which operates directly against the great laboring interest, an interest which he has harped upon from the time this session began until the present moment. The freight on a ton of marble from the quarries in my district to New York is greater than from Italy to New York.

And, sir, owing to this immensely increased importation Italian marble is sold at a profit, and a large profit too, at $3 25 per cubic foot, when it costs nearly fifty cents more than that to lay a foot of marble from Vermont in the markets of New York and Boston, not quite so much in Boston, for the freight is less.

I tell gentlemen who wish to protect the laboring interests of the country that the marble business, which is one of the leading interests of my district, is now languishing, and marble numbered two and three cannot be sold in New York because of the vastly increased importation of Italian marble at prices so low, on account of pauper labor and cheap freights. Sir, I go for protecting the labor of this country, like my friend from Philadelphia, and in doing that, I go for protecting the marble interest, which is not a manufacturer's interest but a laborer's interest. It is simply a question involving the protection of the poor and laboring man. If this amendment prevails, one of the most important interests in the northern country will certainly languish and die. I am sorry that the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants the graves of our soldiers marked with foreign marble. No, sir, let us put a reasonable protection upon marble, and then it will be sold at a fair price and of a kind that will endure as long as time lasts, so that every patriotic soldier may have a little tombstone at his head where for generations to come those who descend from him may go and shed a tear over his grave, and let them be proud to see that above his head is reared a monumental stone from his own land. Sir, I hope the report of the committee on this subject will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate upon this subject.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the tariff bill, in relation to marble in the rough, be terminated in ten minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the same.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend the motion so as to terminate the debate in five minutes. The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL's motion was then agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to add in line forty-eight the words "twenty-five per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in relation to this article, as in the case of most others that came before the Committee of Ways and Means, we had information upon the subject from parties interested; and perhaps there was no gentleman who appeared before the Committee of Ways and Means who was more entitled to our respect for his intelligence and integrity than the gentleman who appeared in behalf of this interest, and the rate that he demanded was considerably higher than the rate found in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, in relation to this matter there need be no apprehension but that the revenues of the country will be increased rather than diminished by the proposed change of the tariff. Under the existing law it is fifty cents per cubic foot and twenty per cent. ad valorem. And it is found practically that the ad valorem duties upon marble are of no consequence whatever; that the article, although sold in our market at three or four dollars per cubic foot, is yet valued abroad at sixty-five cents per foot or less. It is only proposed to drop the ad valorem and to substitute therefor an increased specific. The most of the value of this article consists in the immense labor there is in obtaining it from the quarries. It is not Vermont alone by any means which is interested in this article. Tennessee, Missouri, New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and California are all interested in it. And the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] struck me with peculiar delight; it was a new song from that source. But I discovered that in repeating his argument he showed a very faithful memory of what has been told him. The argument repeated hereby that gentleman was almost verbatim et literatim the same that has been presented to us by a distinguished importer now in the galleries, and who has been here for the last ten days watching this interest.

Now, in relation to this article, we have not reported a higher rate of duty upon it than upon many other articles of a similar character in the bill. It is not so large by any means in proportion to its value as we have reported upon free-stone, soap-stone, and other stone of a like character. If the argument of the gentleman is true, which I deny, it would follow as a logical sequence that we ought to have more protection upon this article. If this Italian marble is of so very much finer quality than any that can be produced in this country, then it is an article of luxury, consumed by the wealthy, and they can well afford to pay the tax. I trust that the bill will be allowed to remain in this respect as it was reported. I have nothing further to say, and will yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DODGE] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] to be divided between them as they please.

Mr. KELLEY. I merely desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that if I have used the language of the importer, for once the importer and the manufacturer use the same language. I have uttered the instructions given me by every marble-worker in Philadelphia; and it was in their behalf that I spoke.

Mr. DODGE. I hold in my hand a petition signed by the working men of New York city who are engaged in manufacturing Italian marble, complaining of the excessive duty on that article. I know nothing particularly upon this subject. But as the petition is very short, I will ask the Clerk to read it as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The petition of the undersigned, dealers, workers, and artists in marble, respectfully sheweth:

That your petitioners cannot but regard the tariff of one dollar per cubic foot on foreign marble in the block or rough, as prohibitory and oppressive to all engaged in the manufacture of this article.

That there is not quarried in Vermont, or elsewhere in the United States, any marble adapted or that can be used for the principal purpose that the marble of Italy is applied.

That the tariff of 1864 has driven Italian marble out of use for the many purposes to which the marble of Vermont is now so extensively used.

That the proposed tariff therefore would be prohibition and not protection.

That the tariff now proposed would be a virtual exclusion of Italian marble for its principal use, namely, monuments.

Your petitioners, therefore, hope that your honorable body will so modify the bill now before you as not to increase the high tariff of 1864.

NEW YORK, June 30, 1866.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I merely desire to say in relation to this petition, which claims that the importation of Italian marble since the passage of the tariff of 1864 has been greatly decreased, and may entirely cease, that the figures which I have from the custom-house of New York city, and which I have read to this committee, show that since the passage of the tariff of 1864 the importation of Italian marble has been more than doubled.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend so as to make the duty seventy-five cents. It is manifest from the line of the discussion which has been had upon this subject that there is a divided interest here. And we are bound to look at both sides of the question in determining the rate of duty to be assessed on this article. The gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] who is thoroughly acquainted with the business of quarrying marble, has very ably presented that side of the question. The other interest is that of the workers of marble, who represent a very important branch of manufactures in this country. They may be supposed to speak with a great degree of impartiality, because their labor is upon both the marble of this country and the marble imported from Italy. Now, while it is true that we use the marble of this country for the uses to which it can be applied, we ought not by onerous assessments upon the foreign article to prohibit its importation altogether for those uses to which it is adapted, and to which the native marble is not suited.

Now, sir, I do not see any injustice or hardship to any interest in allowing this marble to come in at a fair rate of duty. I trust that the Committee of the Whole will not adopt the rate of one dollar per foot, but will agree to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and insert seventy cents. I call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to the fact that if the rate of duty proposed in the bill be adopted, it will be very strongly prohibitory to the introduction of the rough marble in blocks and cubes, and will favor the introduction of the manufactured marble, thereby throwing the labor and the profit of working this foreign marble out of our hands into the hands of the Italian workers. I withdraw my amendment, trusting that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be adopted.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. KELLEY, and it was not agreed to, there being—ayes twenty-eight, noes not counted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by striking out "seventy," in the fiftieth line, and inserting in lieu thereof "fifty-five;" so that the clause will read, "on marble polished, finished, or partly finished, marble chimneypieces, and all other manufactures of marble, fifty-five per cent. ad valorem." The amendment which I propose allows an increase of five per cent. ad valorem upon the rate established by the present law, and it seems to me that this is sufficient.

The bill before us is remarkable in a great many of its features. It touches almost everything, from the necessities of life to articles of luxury and taste, with a heavier hand than has ever been placed on them before. Now, sir, I am, for various reasons, opposed to these excessive duties upon articles of this character. In the first place, a great deal of this marble comes into the country in a partially finished state. In that state it passes into the hands of the workmen of this country and is by them completed. If we now attempt to exclude it by a duty prohibitory as this we shall interfere with a very large trade in this marble—a trade that is now very remunerative to the workmen of this country. It is cheaper to transport the Italian marble in this partially finished state than in the rough form; so that, the transportation being cheaper, there is practically a protection to the workers of this marble in this country who receive it in the partially finished condition.

Again, sir, I am opposed to placing all these articles beyond the reach of the middle classes. I was opposed to the high duty which we adopted upon books; for I desire to see a library placed in every dwelling in this land. I believe that articles of decoration, such as are embraced in the paragraph under consideration, should not be placed beyond the reach of the middle classes. I desire that all persons who have homes and homesteads of their own shall be permitted to enjoy to some degree these articles of luxury in common with the wealthier classes of the country. I hope, therefore, that my amendment will be adopted, and that those engaged in this trade will be willing to put up with the advance which I propose.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, other nations have honored their artists. They have been proud of their skill in sculpture. And does any gentleman believe that it has become a crime to make fine work of enduring marble? Does he mean to say if there be genius of that kind in America it must go abroad for its training, its development? We have just placed a most onerous duty upon the raw material upon which the scientific sculptor works, and now it is proposed to reduce the rate upon finished fabrics. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is in the marble-yard that the boy begins to develop his genius. It is in fashioning the things included in this paragraph his hand is trained to obey his eye and execute his fancy in marble; and in view of that we have legislated on the raw material. Now, let this clause stand with fifty or fifty-five per cent. ad valorem, or less than one hundred and twenty-five, and it would be a declaration of this House that it does not feel the American youth should engage in that high branch of art.

Mr. HOGAN. I move to increase it to one dollar. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is entirely mistaken in reference to this whole feature of this bill. This part of it is the only part that looks to the advantage of the laborer. The mechanic who has spent seven years of apprenticeship in learning to cut marble and fashion it to make monuments, is he now, sir, to be deprived of all opportunity of following that trade by the introduction of the Italian finished monument?

It is a matter of fact now that there is hardly any one man in this country who as a mechanic is working in marble, for the simple reason that the importer of monuments can send out his models and drawings to Italy and have them made there and brought back at the present duties at a rate that would not pay the mechanic in this country for cutting them. I want to know whether gentlemen of this House are so much opposed to the interests of the laborer that in this simple matter for the interest of labor only, exclusively for the interest of labor, they will cut it down to this extent. I know that monuments are now made in Italy. Orders are going out to Italy for monuments that would be made in the United States but from the fact that the foreign article can come in at such a rate finished that the mechanic here cannot live on. It is the interest of the mechanic I look to. I have in my town over twenty-five hundred men who have been engaged in working marble who are now out of employment. It is not because the employers would not give them work, not because there are no more monuments being erected, but because monuments can be obtained and delivered at St. Louis, thirteen hundred miles from the sea, cheaper than any mechanic could afford to make them. I want to prevent all that kind of thing. If our mechanics, who have served an apprenticeship, are to be deprived of their business because of the discrimination made in favor of the pauper labor of Italy, let us know it.

Sir, the mechanical labor that is employed on monuments is the first inception of the sculptor. Our greatest sculptors have risen from the beginning of working in marble. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has so beautifully depicted this, I will not go into it further than to say that many of the men who make these monuments are the men who will supply us with our Powers and Hosmers and celebrated sculptors, and in order to afford their labor protection I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HOGAN.] I have always been a protectionist. I have been educated in that school, and I hold to that doctrine yet. But, sir, I have been so far outdone by the gentleman from Missouri, who, I have understood, belongs to the free-trade party, that I am disposed to withdraw my amendment. Now, sir, I do not suppose the gentleman from Missouri believes in the opposite theory, but that his tendency is all toward free trade. That was the argument he made when the internal revenue bill was under consideration—that these taxes bore too heavily on the people, who should be allowed to sell where they could sell dearest and buy where they could buy cheapest. But now, when the interest of his own district is concerned, we find him taking a different position when it touches an interest that his people are connected with. He then is willing to stand by the side of those who have been demanding the highest rates of protection for the iron of Pennsylvania, the woolen fabrics of New England, and the salt interest of Syracuse and Saginaw.

Now, sir, inasmuch as I have been mistaken in this matter, as appears from the argument made by the gentleman from Missouri, I desire to withdraw my amendment, although I suppose the gentleman desires a vote taken upon his, which is to increase the duty from seventy cents to one-dollar. Seeing, therefore, that I am so far behind that branch of the free-trade party, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment being withdrawn, the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri falls with it.

Mr. HOGAN. I renew the amendment to strike out "seventy per cent." and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred per cent." In reference to the remark of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] as to my being willing to go with the protective party when it suits my convenience, being myself a free-trade man, I wish simply to say this: I am for a fair tariff in reference to everything, but if we must have a high protective tariff at all, then I want the laborers of my portion of the country protected just as much as the laborers of any other portion. That is my doctrine. I cannot sit here and see an effort made in the interest of free trade or any other trade to cut down the mechanical interests of my district without vindicating the rights of my constituents and endeavoring to advance their interests. That is my position in reference to this bill. I do not say that I shall support this bill as an entirety; but I want it to be as near perfect as it can be in covering the general interests of the country, not mine only, but all of them. I am opposed to many features in this bill, and I am utterly amazed to find some gentlemen opposed to the interests of labor and seeking to build up the interests of capital. I am for labor first, because labor is the means of elevating capital, and I am for the interest of labor all the time. I hope the committee, in view of the fact that this is exclusively to inure to the benefit of the mechanic, will adopt the amendment which I propose, to make the duty one hundred per cent.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, not pro forma, but seriously, by making it one hundred and twenty-five per cent. In the interest of the marble-workers, the laborers in the marble-yards, and the skilled workmen, I resisted the increase upon the raw material. It is not an article of which we can increase the supply, because we have not the article. It is not manufactured; it is a natural product. Now, I ask that the increase of duty on the fabricated article shall be made relatively as high as the increase on the raw material. One hundred and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem will not be quite so high, for with the addition we have made on marble in the block the tariff is now equal to one hundred and fifty per cent. I hope that those who feel that American labor in American yards ought to have an equal chance with foreign laborers on foreign soil will equalize this bill, or make it approximately equal by striking out seventy per cent. and inserting one hundred and twenty-five per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise in order to terminate debate upon this paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had indefinitely postponed bill of the House No. 540, in relation to claims for horses turned over to the Government.

TAX BILL.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the tax bill, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 513) "to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 32, 53, 59, 60, 80, 109, 118, 121, 130, 150, 154, 197, 198, 215, 219, 221, 223, 226, 227, 253, 267, 259, 289, 301, 312, 317, 318, 324, 326, 349, 352, 354, 355, 362, 363, 368, 393, 379, 415, 416, 427, 428, 437, 447, 419, 450, 466, 472, 476, 479, 480, 487, 509, 523, 532, 542, 552, 556, 557, 569, 592, 606, 611, 612, 618, 635, 649, 650, 652, 656, 658, and 659, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments to the bill numbered 153, 155, 156, 162, 163, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 292, 302, 303, 309, 315, 320, 322, 323, 357, 375, 377, 438, and 475.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out the words proposed to be inserted and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen months."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: add at the end of line one, page 24 of the engrossed bill, the words "and whenever the word 'duty' is used in this act, or the acts of which this is an amendment, it shall be construed to mean 'tax' whenever such construction shall be necessary in order to effect the purposes of said acts."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-seventh amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "and twenty-five cents for each permit granted for making tobacco, snuff, or cigars."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the one hundred and eighth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments to the matter proposed to be inserted, namely: in line two, page 10, strike out the words "this act" and insert the word "law," in line twenty-three, page 11, strike out the word "such," and insert in lieu thereof the word "any," after the word "aforesaid," in line three, page 12, insert "reciting the facts set forth in the said certificate," in line nine, page 12, strike out "this act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "law," in lines three and four, page 13, strike out the words "by this act," and at the end of line eleven, page 14, add, "Provided, That the word 'county,' whenever the same occurs in this act, or the acts of which this is amendatory, shall be construed to mean also a parish, or any other equivalent subdivision of a State or Territory;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the one hundred and thirty-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "except as samples;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the two hundred and fourteenth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line two of said Senate amendment, strike out the words "for each license;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the two hundred and eighteenth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line two of said Senate amendment strike out the words "for each license;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the two hundred and twenty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out the word "only" inserted by the Senate, and also all after the word "that," in line twenty-seven, page 73, down to and including the word "team," in line one, page 80, and insert in lieu thereof the words "persons owning and employing not more than one vehicle;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the two hundred and seventy-sixth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line one of said Senate amendment, after the word "and," insert "until the 30th day of April, 1867;" and also in line seven of said Senate amendment, after the word "manner," insert "and for the same period;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line three of said Senate amendment strike out the words "retail price" and insert in lieu thereof the word "value;" and also in line five of said Senate amendment strike out the word "cents" and insert in lieu thereof the words "per cent.;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and twenty-first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out the word "enameled," proposed to be inserted, and after the word "tax," in the sixth line, page 100, insert the words "or duty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and twenty-ninth and three hundred and thirty-first amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: strike out all of line nineteen, page 111, including the word "ten," proposed to be inserted by the Senate, to the word "thousand" inclusive, in line twenty, same page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on all cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, the market value of which is over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand, and in addition thereto twenty per cent. ad valorem on the market value thereof;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and forty-seventh amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows: after the word "shall," in line three of said Senate amendment, insert "until the 30th day of April, 1867;" and at the end of said Senate amendment add, "and whenever the addition to any fare shall amount only to the fraction of one cent, any person or company liable to the tax of two and a half per cent, may add to such fare one cent in lieu of such fraction; and such person or company shall keep for sale at convenient points tickets in packages of twenty and multiples of twenty, to the price of which only an amount equal to the revenue tax shall be added."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and fifty-first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out, "and of the amount of notes of persons, State banks, or State banking association paid out by them for the previous month."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and fifty-eighth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "and notes of persons, State banks, and banking association paid out."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and sixty-first amendment of the Senate so far only as it proposes to strike out words, and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and sixty-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows: after the word "due," in line five of said Senate amendment, insert "wherever," and after the word "depositors," in line seven, page 40, of said Senate amendment, insert the words "or parties whatsoever, including non-residents, whether citizens or aliens."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the three hundred and sixty-sixth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line eleven, page 42 of said Senate amendment, after the word "stockholders," insert the words "including non-residents, whether citizens or aliens;" and after the word "whenever," in line seventeen, insert "and wherever;" and in the same line, after the word "payable," insert the words "and to whatsoever party or person the same may be payable, including non-residents, whether citizens or aliens;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the four hundred and twenty-third amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line two, page 49, of said Senate amendment, after the word "except," insert the words "playing-cards."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the four hundred and fortieth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line twelve, page 55, of said Senate amendment, strike out the word "or," where it first occurs; and in lines fourteen and fifteen, same page, strike out the words "shall use the bills of such State bank or banking association;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the four hundred and fifty-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: at the end of said Senate amendment add: "mounting and machinery of telescopes for astronomical purposes."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the five hundred and tenth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line nineteen, page 64, of said Senate amendment, strike out the word "aforesaid" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the district;" and in line twenty-three, same page, strike out the words "be equal to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not be more than;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the five hundred and forty-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in lines eight and nine, page 70, of said Senate amendment, strike out the words "in day or night while such distillery is in operation."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the six hundred and twenty-third amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: before the word "and," in line one, page 79, of said Senate amendment, insert the following: "and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall allow upon all sales of such stamps to any brewer, and by him used in his business, a deduction of seven and one half per cent.;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the six hundred and forty-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line ten, page 100, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "assessor, collector;" and strike out in line twelve, same page, the word "or" where it last occurs, and insert in lieu thereof the words, "and any assessor, collector, inspector, or revenue agent who shall hereafter become interested directly or indirectly;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the six hundred and forty-eighth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line five, page 83, of said Senate amendment, after the word "thereof," insert the word "respectively;" in line eight, same page, after the word "promised" strike out the word "or," and after the word "given," in the same line, insert the words "accepted or received;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the sixty-third amendment and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: insert in lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out the following:

SEC. 67. And be it further enacted, That in any case, civil or criminal, where suit or prosecution shall be commenced in any court of any State against any officer of the United States, appointed under or acting by authority of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or of any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer on account of any act done under color of his office, or against any person holding property or estate by title derived from any such officer, concerning such property or estate and affecting the validity of this act or acts of which it is amendatory, it shall be lawful for the defendant, in such suit or prosecution; at any time before trial, upon a petition to the circuit court of the United States in and for the district in which the defendant shall have been served with process, setting forth the nature of said suit or prosecution, and verifying the said petition by affidavit, together with a certificate, signed by an attorney and counselor-at-law of some court of record of the State in which such suit shall have been commenced, or of the United States, setting forth that, as counsel for the petitioner, he has examined the proceedings against him, and carefully inquired into all the matters set forth in the petition, and that he believes the same to be true; which petition, affidavit, and certificate shall be presented to the said circuit court in session, and if not, to the clerk thereof, at his office, and shall be filed in said office, and the cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of said court, and shall be thereafter proceeded in as a cause originally commenced in that court; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court, if the suit were commenced in the court below by summons, to issue a writ of certiorari to the State court, requiring said court to send to the said circuit court the record and proceedings in said cause; or if it were commenced by capias, he shall issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, a duplicate of which said writ shall be delivered to the clerk of the State court, or left at his office, by the marshal of the district, or his deputy, or some person duly authorized thereto; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the said State court to stay all further proceedings in such cause, and the said suit or prosecution, upon delivery of such process, or leaving the same as aforesaid, shall be deemed and taken to be moved to the said circuit court, and any further proceedings, trial, or judgment therein in the State court shall be wholly null and void. And if the defendant in any such suit be in actual custody on meine process therein, it shall be the duty of the marshal, by virtue of the writ of habeas corpus cum causa, to take the body of the defendant into his custody, to be dealt with in the said cause according to the rules of law and the order of the circuit court, or of any judge thereof in vacation. All attachments made, and all bail and other security given, upon such suit or prosecution shall be and continue in like force and effect as if the same suit or prosecution had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the State court; and if, upon the removal of any such suit or prosecution, it shall be made to appear to the said circuit court that no copy of the record and proceedings therein in the State court can be obtained, it shall be lawful for said circuit court to allow and require the plaintiff to proceed de novo, and to file a declaration of his cause of action, and the parties may thereupon proceed as in action originally brought in said circuit court; and on failure of so proceeding, judgment of nolle prosequi may be rendered against the plaintiff, with costs for the defendant: Provided, That an act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports," passed March 2, 1833, shall not be so construed as to apply to cases arising under an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, nor to any case in which the validity or interpretation of said act or acts shall be in issue: Provided further, That if any officer appointed under and by virtue of any act to provide internal revenue, or any person acting under or by authority of any such officer, shall receive any injury to his person or property, for or on account of any act by him done under any law of the United States for the collection of taxes, he shall be entitled to maintain suit for damage therefor in the circuit court of the United States in the district wherein the party doing the injury may reside or shall be found. And all property taken or detained by any officer or other person under authority of any revenue law of the United States shall be irreprehensible, and shall be deemed to be in the custody of the law, and subject only to the orders and decrees of the courts of the United States having jurisdiction thereof. And if any person shall dispossess or rescue, or attempt to dispossess or rescue, any property so taken or detained as aforesaid, or shall aid or assist therein, such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to such punishment as is provided by the twenty-second section of the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, approved the 30th day of April, 1790, for the willful obstruction or resistance of officers in the service of process.

Sec. 68. And be it further enacted, That the fifth section of an act passed June 30, 1864, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed: Provided, That any case which may have been removed from the courts of any State under said fifth section to the courts of the United States shall be remanded to the State court from which it was so removed, with all the records relating to such cases, unless the justice of the circuit court of the United States in which such suit or prosecution is pending shall be of opinion that said case would be removable from the court of the State to the circuit court under and by virtue of the sixty-sixth section of this act. And in all cases which may have been removed from any court of any State under and by virtue of said fifth section of said act of June 30, 1864, all attachments made, and all bail or other security given upon such suit or prosecution, shall be and continue in full force and effect until final judgment and execution, whether such suit shall be prosecuted to final judgment in the circuit court of the United States or remanded to the State court from which it was removed.

Sec. 69. And be it further enacted, That whenever a writ of error shall be issued for the revision of any judgment or decree in any criminal proceeding where is drawn in question the construction of any statute of the United States, in a court of any State, as is provided in the twenty-fifth section of an act entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," passed September 24, 1789, the defendant, is charged with an offense bailable by the laws of such State, shall not be released from custody until a final judgment upon such writ, or until a bond, with sufficient sureties in a reasonable sum, as ordered and approved by the State court, shall be given; and is the offense is not so bailable, until a final judgment upon the writ of error. Writs of error in criminal cases shall have precedence upon the docket of the Supreme Court of all cases to which the Government of the United States is not a party, excepting only such cases as the court, at their discretion, may decide to be of public importance.

The committee of conference further recommend that the words "by the collector," in line thirteen, page 140, in the text of the engrossed bill, be stricken out.

P. G. VAN WINKLE,
JAMES GUTHRIE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. HOOPER,
W. B. ALLISON,
C. H. WINFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If any gentleman wishes to make any inquiries I will endeavor to answer them.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask whether anything was done with the very important provision giving the right of trial by jury in the cases of charges of fraud. There is no way now provided to try the parties except by the Commissioner.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The Senate struck out the provision and the House receded from its disagreement to the Senate's amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, sir, that was one of the most important provisions in the bill, a most vital one as regards the justice of the bill, and I am astonished that the House should recede from it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Upon consulting with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the committee thought there was sufficient provision on that subject in another part of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Are you prepared to have that part of the section which the Senate struck out read? All now depends upon the examination and decision of a single man.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The opinion of the Senate committee—and the House committee concurred with them finally upon explanation—was, that if these cases were all to go into the courts they would be so crowded that we would never get along with them at all; the cases would never be decided.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask to have the portion proposed to be stricken out read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And in addition to other provisions of law, whenever fraud has been or shall be alleged as to any list or return, and the party charged with fraud shall make denial of the same in writing and shall demand a hearing thereon, and shall tender to the assessor of the proper district a bond with two or more sureties payable to the United States in a sum not less than double the amount of the tax assessed because of such alleged fraud, and conditioned that such person will abide by the orders and judgments of the court before whom such case shall be heard, and will pay whatever sum may be adjudged against him, for tax, and also all cost that may be adjudged against him, and upon the approval of such bond by such assessor it shall be the duty of such assessor to transmit to the district attorney of the United States for the district within which such collection district is situated all the papers in the case, and it shall also be the duty of said district attorney to immediately institute in the proper circuit or district court of the United States a suit for the recovery of the tax assessed because of such alleged fraud, and the same shall be prosecuted to judgment as in other cases; and such cases shall have precedence over other civil cases on the calendar of such court. And until final judgment all proceedings by the assessor and collector shall be suspended; and in case of seizure of property, the property seized shall be released upon the approval of the bond herein provided for; but nothing herein contained to affect in any manner proceedings by indictment as provided by law.

Mr. ALLISON. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] I will say that this provision was inserted by the House with a view to transfer a class of cases to the courts of the United States before the tax was collected, which is a novel provision in our revenue system, there being no provision in any State law or Federal law by which the tax-payer, before the tax is collected, can go into the courts and litigate these questions. Parties aggrieved now have their remedy by appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and also have their remedy against the Government of the United States, or against the proper officer. I believe that that was a just and proper provision in cases of fraud, and I supported it in the House; but the Senate insisted that if that provision was incorporated into the law we never could collect the taxes, and the result would be that in the course of six months or a year the courts of the United States would be lumbered up with these cases of fraud so that no cases could be tried in our courts under our present judiciary system. Yielding to the Senate in that view, we consented to strike out this provision because of the difficulties in its administration.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman is mistaken in supposing that there is no provision now for trying questions before the tax is paid. I had one last summer—a case of a bank which claimed the right to one sixth of one per cent.—which I appeared to defend. The court decided that the decision of the officer here was wrong, and the banks saved that much. It is only in cases under the revenue law that there is the provision to which the gentleman refers. Now, how does the matter stand? A man is charged with fraud in his return, say of distilled whisky. Who tries him? The assessor. The law, as it now stands, puts the whole adjudication of the question in the power of the assessor of the district, without remedy and without appeal. I know a case in my own district where the assessor took evidence on both sides and surcharged a distiller some sixty-two thousand dollars. Since the death of the man who was thus charged, it turns out that three of the witnesses were guilty of perjury. But he had no remedy. I asked the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, "What is the remedy?" He replied, "Against the United States." "Must not his property be first seized and sold?" "Undoubtedly." "Then when the man brings his suit for damages, if he succeeds, does he recover the full amount of the property seized and sold, or only the amount of the tax?" "Only the tax." I know a case where property was seized of the value of $130,000 for a tax of $41,000, and sold for the amount of the tax. Now, not a dollar can be collected beyond the $41,000. In other words, a fraud is charged, the assessment is made to any amount that the assessor chooses, it is decided by him without appeal, and the only remedy of the party is to sue the officer after the property is taken from him and sold.

Now, no gentleman can deny that that is exactly the condition of the law as it now stands everywhere. I have taken some pains to examine this subject, and I find nothing but what I have stated. I say it is an outrage upon the rights of the people of this country, for it is taking from them their property without trial by jury. The provision which the House put in the bill, and which it is proposed to strike out, provided that bail should be given to double the amount, not only of what should be found against him, but for all the costs that might be incurred; and only in that case should the proceedings be suspended. In my judgment, to leave the law as it is now would be one of the greatest outrages ever committed upon a civilized people. I cannot believe that the people of this country will endure such legislation as that. If it be in order I would move that the report of the committee of conference be rejected.

The SPEAKER. The same object would be accomplished by voting to non-concur in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. If the report is non-concurred in, can the House ask for another committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. That would then be in order.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I hope the report will not be concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say simply that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue appeared before the committee of conference and stated that the case referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] was the only case pending in the revenue department where such a difficulty existed; that they had had no difficulty in adjusting all the other cases at the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. For that reason the committee of conference assented to striking out this provision, not desiring to embarrass the collection of the revenue for the purpose of protecting the one, or perhaps two or three cases in as many years.

Mr. STEVENS. If there were only one or two cases, what becomes of the difficulty of lumbering the courts with cases?

Mr. ALLISON. This provision permits any person assessed to transfer the case at once to the courts of the United States, without going to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the Secretary of the Treasury. It places it in the power of the men who are compelled to pay taxes to transfer these cases at once to the district or circuit courts of the United States for the very purpose of delay and no other. It is the abuse of the provision by making up fictitious cases that would burden our courts with this class of suits that could be settled in an hour by application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose duty it is to revise the acts of his subordinates.

Mr. STEVENS. Let me say to the gentleman that it is provided that the party shall go before the assessor and present bail to his satisfaction before he can ask to have the case transferred.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.]

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Speaker, a revenue bill of this sort, in order to be efficient, must necessarily provide stringent measures; for without them it will not accomplish the object which is sought. The committee of conference, as I understand, have reported in favor of an amendment striking out the provision under which a party deeming himself overtaxed could, on giving bonds, have his case transferred at once to the courts for adjudication. It must be apparent to the House that if we should insist upon retaining that provision, our courts would be overburdened with suits growing out of tax assessments, and the collection of the revenue would be greatly embarrassed. The party is not without a remedy as the law now stands. Though he may be forced to pay, he can bring suit afterward to correct any error or fraud that may have been practiced upon him. I think it would be exceedingly bad policy, as a revenue measure, to adopt the provision which was inserted by this House and which has been stricken out by the conference committee.

Mr. STEVENS. I will ask the gentleman, with his permission, a question. Under the present law, if a property is seized and sold under an erroneous and excessive assessment, can the party recover the value of the property or only the amount surcharged?

Mr. DELANO. Well, sir, I of course would not undertake, without reflection, to answer a question of that sort with absolute confidence; but my opinion is that he could recover the value of the property.

Mr. STEVENS. The opinion of the department is that he can recover only the amount surcharged, and that is my opinion, too.

Mr. DELANO. I do not see in that suggestion of the gentleman anything that detracts from the force of the considerations which I was presenting in reference to the propriety of agreeing to this report. I think it would be fatal to our tax law as a revenue measure to embarrass it by the provision which was adopted in this House. I do not think that our citizens can suffer any serious injury under the law as it will be if the report of the committee should be adopted. It is suggested to me, and I desire to bring the point to the attention of the House, that our law in reference to the collection of customs is in precise analogy to the present internal revenue law. Under the law for the collection of customs we have experienced no difficulty; and I apprehend that we shall not in this case.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman will allow me to say that in reference to customs the money is always paid beforehand. If the party believes that an illegal duty is charged, he makes the payment under protest, and brings his suit for the recovery of the money. The proceeding is very different under the internal revenue law.

Mr. DELANO. I cannot see how the statement of the gentleman affects the question we are now discussing. In the case of which he speaks the money is paid in advance, and in a case arising under the internal revenue law the money is paid in advance, but at a different stage of proceeding.

Mr. STEVENS. There is a very great difference between a merchant paying duties under protest and a man having his property sold for the non-payment of tax illegally exacted.

Mr. ROSS. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] what action has been taken by the committee of conference in reference to exempting $1,000 instead of $600 from the income tax.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The Senate had stricken out everything inserted by the House in reference to the income tax. The view of the Senate was that as the income tax has already been assessed for this year, and as any amendment of the present law in reference to that subject would not affect the tax for this year, there is no necessity for any action upon the question at this session. The members representing the House in the committee of conference concurred in that view, and agreed to recommend the striking out of all the provisions relating to the income tax.

Mr. ROSS. I have only to say that I hope the House will not concur in the action of the committee of conference on this subject.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to say a word or two on this subject, chiefly because of the remark which fell from the lips of the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] as I came into the Hall. He seems to assume, in opposing the report of the committee of conference, that by their report there is some invasion of the right of the citizen under the Constitution of the United States that he shall not be deprived of his property without due process of law, and that to take his property for payment of taxes, without a jury trial, is a deprivation without due process of law. I wish to say in this connection that if the assumption of the gentleman be accepted and acted upon as broadly as he seems to have stated it, it will break up your whole revenue system. The adoption of the gentleman's rule would be a total departure from the practice of the Government from the day of its organization up to the present hour. The compulsory collection of the revenues of the Government through its own executive officers, and without the intervention in the first place of a court or jury has always been the practice. Hence it is, sir, in relation to the collectors of your customs, who are required to give bonds for the faithful performance of their duty. If they are found in default in the Department of the Treasury, instead of having the intervention of a court or the intervention of a jury to determine the liability, the account is stated in the Department and the Treasury warrant is issued by the Department for the seizure of his person and his imprisonment, and for the seizure of his own lands and the lands of his security and for their sale at public outcry to the highest bidder. It has been ruled solemnly by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of McMillan's Lessees, that such proceeding was in complete accordance with the Constitution and was not a deprivation of property without due process of law. Holding this view of the subject I cannot agree with the gentleman at all that the collection of the revenues of the country is to be interrupted at every step by everybody through the intervention of a court and jury. So to legislate would be to provide that your whole revenue may be put in a state of suspense and made to await final trials in courts of justice before juries. It seems to me that the gentleman's proposition is most unsafe and most extraordinary, without anything in the past history of the country to sustain it or to give it the least color of support.

Mr. STEVENS. I know of six cases where they have been tried. The gentleman is behind the times.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman know any case where the decision has been different from that I have referred to?

Mr. STEVENS. This system is entirely different from that of the customs, wholly different in its parts. Here a man may be robbed of his property at the mere fiat of a single assessor without appeal. It is monstrous; and I had no idea that any good lawyer would be found to advocate it.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is an appeal.

Mr. STEVENS. There is no appeal.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is an appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. STEVENS. I say there is no appeal.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have prosecuted an appeal of that sort myself during the present session and reversed the action of the local assessor. I repel the gentleman's statement, therefore, that there is no appeal. I ask when and where the case of McMillan's Lessees was ever challenged, much less reversed, in any court in America—a case where property was seized without the action of court or jury.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In regard to incomes, as there would be no action until next May, after the meeting of the next session of Congress, the Senate deemed it expedient to postpone action to the next session, when there would be more experience of the operation of the law. The House agreed with the Senate in striking out all affecting incomes, leaving it as it is at present. In regard to the tax on cotton, the House receded from five cents and the Senate from two cents, and we have fixed it at three cents.

Mr. EGGLESTON. What has been done in reference to gas?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. A compromise was made to continue the provision of the Senate until the 30th day of April next, in order to give the companies affected by it an opportunity to get redress from their different Legislatures. The provision, therefore, continues only until the 30th day of April next.

The same question arose in regard to horse railroads, and the same course was taken upon it, allowing the provision of the Senate to continue until the 30th of April next, but with some amendments by which the railroads are required to sell package tickets of not more than twenty with only the tax added. After the 30th of April next these provisions will expire, and both the railroads and the gas companies will be left in the same condition as other parties who are affected by the tax bill. These are the most important provisions of the bill about which the two Houses differed, but if any gentleman desires to make any inquiry in regard to any other article I shall be happy to explain it to him.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman what has been done with the bank tax.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. There was nothing to be done by the conference committee in relation to the bank tax. The House concurred in the material amendments of the Senate on that subject. The Senate also receded from their amendment in regard to tailors and shoe-makers and concurred with the House, so that work not exceeding $1,000 in value will be exempt, exclusive of materials. Another amendment inserted by the Senate concerning "mead," which my friend from Philadelphia [Mr. O'NEILL] was so anxious about, is concurred in with an amendment adding to it "mountings and machinery of telescopes for astronomical purposes."

Mr. O'NEILL. I am glad the committee thought the article of "mead" of such importance as to associate it with telescopes.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EGGLESTON.]

Mr. EGGLESTON. I am very sorry that I have not an opportunity to vote upon the report of this conference committee on each proposition by itself. The report is about as I expected it would be. The great monopolists of the country have, and will continue to have, the advantage over the poor young men who are working for salaries and trying to maintain themselves and their families honestly and doing what they can to support the Government. The committee tell us that only $600 can be exempted from taxation to the man who gets a salary, and that over $600 he must fork over to the Government. They could not bear to make the exemption $1,000 as was proposed in the House. They tell us that the great monopolists, the gas companies that have repeatedly violated their contracts with the citizens, and have charged the manufacturer's tax on each and every bill, are to be permitted to continue to do so until the 30th of April next. I feel thankful that the committee has got this saving clause in their report. If it is adopted, we are to tell our constituents that they are only to be taxed by these monopolists until the 30th of April next, and then these companies are to get relief from the several State Legislatures.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot stand up before the people of this country with this kind of legislation. If you legislate against the people and in favor of corporations, no matter what party or what organization does it, you cannot stand before the people. These gas companies have no right, where they have contracted to furnish gas at $3 50 per one thousand feet, to charge the manufacturer's tax in the face and eyes of that contract, and there is not a lawyer in this House who will stand up and say that it is legal. This Congress may authorize such a tax to be laid, and you tell us that the individual has his remedy in the courts of law. How long will it take him to get through the courts? If you put the seal of Congress upon such an enactment, individuals will hardly dare to stand up and face the community which is against them. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this report will not be concurred in, and I shall vote against it. I hope another committee will be appointed and that we will stay here until the 1st day of December next rather than submit to such an iniquity.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I yield now to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word in vindication of the committee against the assault of the gentleman from Cincinnati, [Mr.

EGGLESTON.] I believe that the committee is no more in favor of monopolies than the gentleman is; but we found this difficulty in the case: these gas companies and railroad companies are local corporations, chartered by the different municipal authorities and State Legislatures, and we have imposed an additional burden upon them since those charters were granted; and when the House adopted the provision by which this tax was not allowed to be charged over to their patrons these companies came here and said to the Senate that they had been before their several Legislatures asking relief, but were remanded back to Congress, because Congress by legislation heretofore had allowed them to add the tax to their charges. Therefore it is that the committee have provided that until April, 1867, these corporations may add the tax, but after that time Congress would give them no relief, because in the meantime they could go to their municipal corporations and State Legislatures and ask the relief which they sought at our hands, and if just would probably receive it, and at all events after that time Congress would refuse to allow them to charge over these fares.

It is not the purpose or design of Congress to interfere with local or State legislation; either to impose upon the people burdens or to take off burdens imposed under State legislation where such legislation is not required by the necessities of the General Government; and those who are not in favor of interfering with the rights of the States will not desire to interfere with local charters or corporations unless the necessities of the revenue imperatively require it. Therefore it was that the Senate insisted that this provision should apply until the 30th of April next, and the committee on the part of the House finally yielded the point, and in the mean time if the State Legislatures do not give relief, these companies must incur as we do the taxation imposed by Congress without diminution however onerous it may be. Besides that, it was shown that many gas companies are so limited at this time by local charters that they cannot pay these heavy burdens unless they are permitted to charge the burden on the consumers of gas. It is so in the case of one corporation in the city of New York where their charges do not pay the cost of the production of the gas at this time; and when we have placed by our legislation here an import tax of $1.50 per ton upon coal, I doubt very much whether the gas companies can live at the existing rates which the municipal authorities have authorized them to charge for their product. I wish the House particularly to mark that this whole provision expires on the 30th of April, 1867, when these gentlemen will be remanded to their States; in the mean time all railroad companies are required to keep for sale at convenient points packages of tickets of not more than twenty with the tax only added, thus repealing an obnoxious provision in the existing law.

One word upon the subject of the income exemption. The House revised the income tax so as to exempt $1,000 instead of $600, as now provided by law; but the Senate refused to consider this question of income at the present session for the reason that any law passed now could not affect the collections for the present year, as they are all assessed and are now being paid; and it was hoped that at the next session, which must end before another assessment of income can be made, still further exemptions might be made, so as to relieve further those having small incomes. Therefore, with the hope in view of extending further relief the House committee receded from its non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate upon that subject.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would ask the gentleman one question before he takes his seat. I understand him to say that those members of the committee who believed that Congress had not the power to interfere with this matter in the States differed from the rest of the committee in the final conclusion they came to.

Was it the determination of the committee that Congress had or that it had not the power to control this matter in the States?

Mr. ALLISON. The gentleman entirely misapprehended my remark. The committee all agreed that we had the power.

Mr. LE BLOND. The committee came to the conclusion that Congress had the power to regulate contracts made between companies and individuals.

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all; that question was not before the committee.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will yield now to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, contained in it two features, similar in principle, against which I voted throughout. They are involved in this present controversy. One was that gas companies should be permitted to charge over against their consumers the taxes imposed upon them. The other was that railroad companies should be permitted to charge the taxes imposed upon them over against their passengers. Now, I regard this as a pretense to tax the gas and railroad companies, when in fact it is but taxing the people more. Indeed, in the case of the railroad companies, it has gone further, and where the tax was one eighth, or one sixteenth, they have charged one cent in addition to their fares, and thus have actually made money out of being taxed. Gentlemen defend this principle, which has been conceded here by the committee of conference, on the ground that if you did otherwise it would be interfering with contracts. Now, I regard this matter in an entirely different light. You charge office-holders five per cent. upon their fixed salaries. Are they permitted to charge it over against somebody else? Do not the States pass laws fixing the interest on promissory notes at six per cent., and do you not tax the income arising from that limited interest? What is the object of all this? That these taxes shall be paid out of the profits and not be paid by the public.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to explain to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] that we required these railroad companies, after the passage of this bill, to provide packages of tickets, not more than twenty tickets to the package, to which they shall add only the tax, and not the full cent for each ticket or fare.

Mr. SCHENCK. That obviates one of the difficulties; but it still leaves the principle that you do not tax at all the railway company or the gas company, but you tax the passenger and the consumer, the public, the people, and under the pretext of taxing these corporations it is proposed to let them go free of the tax. Now, I say all this talk of interfering with contracts is a mere fallacy. You seized upon fixed incomes everywhere; you seize upon them whether they are in the shape of salaries or otherwise. Why? Because your object is to take so much out of the profits, out of the receipts, out of the property of the person or corporation, and apply it to the public benefit; you take such a contribution from them for the support of the public authorities. Now, in this case of the railway company or gas company, instead of taking so much of their profit or property for the support of the Government, you propose simply to take away with one hand, and with the other you allow them to charge it over against somebody else. Your pretense of taxing them is thus a mere fallacy; you do not tax them at all; it is a mere mockery to say so. And therefore, from the beginning to the end, I have opposed as erroneous in principle, as an outrage upon right, every attempt to relieve these railroad and gas companies from contributing anything for the public good and benefit, because of the allowance made to them to collect that tax from somebody else. And if this principle is sustained by the report of the committee of conference, as I understand it is, even if there was no other objection to the report, I should oppose its adoption.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to me that this is a very great heat over a very little matter. In the first place, our law does not reach but a very small number of railroad companies and but very few in number of the gas companies, as only a few are restricted by State laws or by charters as to the charges they shall make. The report of the committee of conference, as I understand it, merely postpones the action of the House until next April, in order to give these gas and railroad companies that are now prohibited by their charters from increasing their rates, time to obtain relief from the Legislatures of their respective States. If they do not obtain that relief between this time and next April, then the action of the House goes into force. I think the proposition made on the part of the Senate and accepted by the conferees is a proper one. I think it is a fair proposition, and one which ought not to meet with any opposition from any reasonable man in this House.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to repel the unworthy assaults made upon the corporations of this country. I refer particularly to the assault made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EGGLESTON] representing the Cincinnati district. Corporations are organized and chartered by the laws of the different States for the purpose of accomplishing objects for which individuals are not competent. And when individuals are thus associated together for the purpose of accomplishing a particular object, the capital which each individual puts in that corporation is just as much entitled to the protection of this Government as if it remained in every respect individual and private capital. But the gentleman gets up here and claims that these corporations, these great over-towering corporations, shall be stricken down as unworthy of protection, so as to protect the people against the assaults of these corporations, even if they be destroyed. He would destroy everything of a corporate character, everything for which these corporations are authorized, and in which they are engaged. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] on my right is entirely in error, I think, in the position he has taken here, that this Government has no right to relieve the corporations from the tax imposed upon them.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, there being—yeas 68, nays 32.

The main question was ordered; which was upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ROSS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand that if the negative side should prevail on this question it will enable us to have another committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. A vote against agreeing to the report will either cause the defeat of the bill or the appointment of a new committee of conference, if the House should ask for it and the Senate agree to it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 71, nays 57, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bundy, Cobb, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Hooper, Asahel H. So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I am further directed by the committee of conference on the tax bill to present the following report:

The committee of conference further recommend that the words "by the collector" in line nineteen, page 140, in the text of the engrossed bill be stricken out.

This is merely a verbal correction.

The SPEAKER. A message from the Senate has been received, announcing that that body has unanimously agreed that this change shall be made. It requires the unanimous consent of both Houses to change the text of a bill after it has passed. Is there any objection to the change being made as recommended by the committee of conference?

There was no objection.

HOLDING EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House take a recess at half past four o'clock this afternoon, to meet again at half past seven o'clock, for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 69, noes 35.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate on the pending paragraph terminate in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. KELLEY to the amendment of Mr. HOGAN; and that all further debate had been limited to one minute.

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to say the object is to make the duty on the manufactured articles equal to the duty on the raw material. We have increased the latter, and I wish now to make the former commensurate with it. If the raw material of Italian marble is to be imported into this country, I want the labor of manufacturing it done here and not abroad.

The CHAIRMAN stated that debate was exhausted.

Mr. KELLEY's amendment was disagreed to. The question recurred on Mr. HOGAN's amendment.

Mr. HOGAN. I will modify my amendment so as to make it one hundred per cent. The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOGAN. The committee agreed to seventy-five per cent. instead of seventy. I believe that is universally conceded.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this paragraph has been terminated.

Mr. HOGAN. I move to make it "seventy-five" instead of "seventy."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOGAN. I move to add the following: On marble slabs and tiles one dollar per square foot, and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. Strike out "square" and insert "cubic."

Mr. HOGAN. I accept that modification. The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On nickel, forty cents per pound; on alloy of nickel with copper, and on zaffer, forty cents per pound; on nickel matte, speiss, or oxide, thirty cents per pound; on manufactures of nickel, or of which nickel shall be a component material of chief value, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on ores of nickel and cobalt ores, ten per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I move to strike out "on nickel forty cents per pound."

Mr. Chairman, I want to understand how it is that the duty on this article has been quadrupled by the report of the committee. It is here proposed to make it four times what it is in the existing tariff. I do not know that I am in error in regard to this article or the interest of the country in the subject. If I am the chairman of the committee can correct me. The tariff at present is fifteen per cent. ad valorem, and the article during the last year has paid a large revenue to the Republic. It has contributed its full share of the $170,000,000 in gold that we have received from the present tariff. Now, I find from fifteen per cent. it is proposed to increase it to forty cents per pound. If this increase be adopted it will be entirely prohibitory, and we cannot expect to receive a cent of duty on the article of nickel hereafter. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that eighty per cent. of this article used in this country comes from abroad. It is used extensively in making white metal or German silver. If this tariff be adopted, thousands of individuals who are engaged in the manufacture will be driven out of employment. I would like to have the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means say why the duty on this article has been increased fourfold?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not respond to the gentleman because there are others who wish to take part in this debate.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I presume it is proposed to increase the duty on this article to the extent of prohibition, in order that some interest in Pennsylvania may be protected. I do not believe that the interest of the Republic generally requires such an increase of duty on this article.

Mr. KASSON. I have the floor, but I feel bound to give way to a member of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to offer an amendment before the question is taken on the motion to strike out. I propose to insert "on nickel, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem." There is only a small district of country in the United States where nickel is produced, namely, one or two counties in Pennsylvania and a small part of New Jersey. Not more than two or three parties have ever produced it in this country. It enters into the manufacture of German silver and white metal wares generally. The manufacturers of articles made chiefly of nickel have paid into the Treasury during the past year $200,000 of internal revenue. They ought to be cared for as well as the original producers of the raw material. I call attention to the history of the legislation on this subject hitherto. In the tariff of 1842 nickel was free. In the tariff of 1846 the duty was five per cent. ad valorem, and continued so for eleven years, when, under the tariff of 1857, it was reduced to four per cent. That rate was continued until 1861, when it was again made free, and continued so until 1864, when a duty of fifteen per cent. was put upon it. And now, by this bill, the duty proposed is forty cents per pound, which is about forty per cent. ad valorem, the article being purchased in foreign ports at about one dollar a pound.

Mr. STEVENS. It costs two dollars here.

Mr. GARFIELD. The cost here is about one dollar and seventy-five cents, which sum includes the duty and cost of transportation; but at the foreign ports it is valued at about one dollar and five cents per pound. A duty of forty cents per pound is therefore about forty per cent. ad valorem, and it is an increase of the present rate of nearly one hundred and seventy-five per cent. There is another fact to be considered. The producers of nickel have an exclusive monopoly of the business. They supply the United States Mint with nickel for coinage, and have recently had a very lucrative contract with the Government to supply the metal for the one, two, and three cent coinage. A few days ago we passed a law to authorize the coinage of a five-cent piece, composed partly of nickel; so that these men will have a further continuance of Government patronage. I think we should have some regard for the large manufacturing interests which are obliged to use this article as raw material. The amendment I have offered will give adequate protection to the producer, for it is an advance on the present duty of sixty-five per cent. and it will also be in fair proportion to the duty on the products of nickel.

Mr. HOGAN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether the United States Mint instead of using American nickel does not import English nickel to make the coins of, paying no duty thereon.

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe the officers of the Mint have contracted with the parties in New Jersey and Pennsylvania to supply the Mint with the metal they need for coinage, and they have been using American nickel exclusively for seven or eight months past.

Mr. HOGAN. I understand the reverse to be the fact.

Mr. KASSON. I shall not be very much surprised if my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] should be led into sundry other errors besides that which he has unintentionally committed now in his statement touching this subject, from the fact that he and I differ from the very foundation on the question of this tariff. As I stated the other day, whenever there is a new, struggling industry in this country that cannot compete without help, there is an object, and then is the time for the exercise of our right to discriminate in favor of industry.

Now, sir, this is peculiarly a new and struggling industry. As chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I have had to examine this subject in connection with a bill which I introduced in regard to coinage. I find there is but one manufacture of nickel in this country now. There have been two or three previous attempts made to establish manufactures, but they have failed at the outset from inability to compete with the foreign product. The best nickel perhaps in the world is produced in Prussia, and that has been used to a great extent in the United States Mint as a part of the ingredient of our coin. Labor in Prussia is cheap, fuel is cheaper, and chemicals are so much cheaper abroad, that when the question comes as between the industry of Europe and this country—for there are some six or eight large producers in England and Germany, and I believe one or two in Sweden—the necessity for some considerable protection is manifest if we would establish this new industry in this country.

Nickel is obtained from an ore which yields from two to six per cent. It is found in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Missouri, and some other States, I believe; but there is but one man who has possessed the genius and the will to develop and establish the manufacture of this product. That man deserves the thanks of Congress and of the country, for it has cost him from $100,000 to $200,000 to establish it on a permanent basis. And, sir, he has done what I would urge other capitalists to do who are clamoring for excessive protection from us. He has gone to Europe and brought the laborer here to his mill in order to be enabled by the skill and experience of that laborer to reduce the cost of the product and bring it in competition with the foreign article. He has got one of the most experienced artisans from Europe to aid him in the development of this industry.

Now, I say this is one of those infantile industries of the country which needs to be developed. The question of the production of German silver depends upon it. It advances the cost of German silver about six per cent., and better would it be to enhance the price of German silver six per cent., which partakes of the character of a luxury, than to destroy the only factory where nickel is produced in this country. Recollect that the ore yields only from two to six per cent. of the metal. It first goes through the smelting operation and is reduced to a concentrated ore which is sent to England where it is reduced to nickel. Then that is brought back to this country, paying a duty of fifteen per cent. It is cheaper to do that than to reduce it to a metal here. Under these circumstances I consider this as a peculiar case where protection is needed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move, pro formâ, to strike out "forty cents" and insert "fifty cents." I hope the report of the committee will be adopted, and I only make this motion for the purpose of replying to my colleague on the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. GARFIELD.] I was very much surprised at two propositions he introduced here, and the first and most astonishing one was to change the report of the committee from a specific to an ad valorem duty. I have been exceedingly anxious, being in favor of protecting American manufactures, to change our system from ad valorem to specific duties. In the old countries where they have had a tariff for very many years they have almost entirely abolished ad valorem duties. I am told that in France, out of fifteen hundred items there are but about twenty that have ad valorem duties put upon them, while about forty per cent. of our own tariff is ad valorem.

The other proposition, or rather statement, that the gentleman made was that he should go against an ad valorem on minerals that we produce in this country. Sir, whenever you can develop from the bowels of the earth anything and turn it into gold, nickel, or anything else, so much is clear gain; all the labor, everything connected with the development of an article and the bringing it into commerce is so much clear gain to the community. It is not necessary, therefore, to say much more; I will only ask to have read, as a part of my remarks, a portion of a letter addressed to me recently by Joseph Wharton, Esq., of Camden, New Jersey.

The Clerk read a portion of the letter, as follows:

"I have now been struggling for more than three years to establish this important industry here, but for two reasons my efforts have hitherto produced little but vexation and loss. These reasons are, first, that though I succeeded in making some pretty good nickel I found it impossible with such light and aid as I had to bring this most difficult manufacture within any reasonable time to the same point of excellence and economy which by long experience the Europeans had reached; second, I was obliged to buy my chemicals and other materials at the high rates brought about by the high general scale of tariff, and was obliged to sell my product at the low rates which foreign nickel (subject to a tariff far below the general scale) could be sold here at. I had to give up the fight of course, and to stop my works, but as my means and resolution were not exhausted, instead of abandoning the enterprise, I cast about in every way to get at the best processes, by means of research and inquiry and sending my chemist on a tour to England and Germany.

Having satisfied myself that Dr. Theodore Flirtmann is the ablest man in the world in this business, I have induced him to come over here and has formed a partnership with him, which I believe will entirely do away with difficulty number one. The nickel firm of Flirtmann & With, of which Dr. Flirtmann is the head, is, I believe, the second in the world in magnitude, and the first in the world for excellence of product.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I wish to say that the gentleman who has written this letter, and who is developing the production of nickel in this country, sent to Prussia and obtained the services of a most distinguished gentleman, who is now in partnership with him in developing this new industry. I hope it will not be crushed out by the action of this House. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I wish to notice for a moment some of the objections which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] raises. The first is that I have proposed to change the duty from specific to ad valorem. Now, I am perfectly willing to make this duty specific. I agree with the gentleman that generally that is the better way. I only made it ad valorem because I did not know exactly what the corresponding specific duty was. But I would like the attention of the gentleman for one moment. I recollect to have seen a man attempting to bale out a boat that had no bottom to it; and for every pail full he poured out of the boat of course another pail full came right into the boat again. Now, when people propose to protect the production of an article by putting the duty upon it so high as to crush out its use in other manufactures, they are but pouring the water out of the boat to come right in again. Now, what is the use of our producing nickel in this country at all unless we have manufacturers to make use of it? But if every manufacture in this country that uses nickel is broken down, what is the value of its production?

Mr. MOORHEAD. Then I would ask the gentleman what was the use of developing the iron-producing interests in this country when we could at that time purchase it cheaper from abroad than we could make it. Yet we can now cope with the world in its production.

Mr. GARFIELD. We use nickel in this country for making white metal and other manufactures. And the only object of protecting the nickel-producing interest is to supply to this country the raw material for our manufactures. But if the gentleman breaks down our manufactures which use this article, then his nickel mines will not be worth a twopence. The manufactures in which this article is used will be brought in from England, Prussia, and other countries where they are produced, and that will be the result of his policy. Now, if the gentleman's Pennsylvania friend could for eleven years run his nickel mines without the protection of any duty whatever, he will probably be able to run them with the protection of a duty of twenty-five per cent. If he was enabled to run them before 1864, without having a duty of more than five per cent., then he can surely run them now with a duty of twenty-five per cent. If he could run them under the tariff of 1864, with a duty of fifteen per cent., I suppose he would not be crushed out and ruined with the advantage of a duty of twenty-five per cent. Now, I do not propose to be led off into this fallacy of running up the duty to such an exorbitant extent as to ruin everything else connected with it under the plea of protecting this particular interest, but eventually to ruin it entirely. Now, if the gentleman would rather have the duty at twenty-five cents per pound, instead of twenty-five per cent. ad valorem, I will not make much objection to so modifying my amendment, though that is raising the duty eighty per cent. over the present rate.

Mr. THAYER. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] a question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well.

Mr. THAYER. Is there any other industry or interest which is opposed to a high protective duty on nickel except the German silver manufacture?

Mr. GARFIELD. Only the German silver manufacturers, and every person who uses German silver ware.

Mr. THAYER. I want to ask the gentleman whether the German silver manufacturers

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I say there is no nickel ore in this country that is fit to be worked. But there are thousands and thousands of individual common day laborers now embarked in the business of making white metal and the German silver, for which this metal is needed, and which they are compelled to import from abroad. It is not produced in this country. It cannot be produced here. Yet we are called upon by my respected friend from Pennsylvania to protect the interest of one single man who is experimenting in the production of this nickel ore, in opposition to the interest of thousands upon thousands of day laborers who use this material in the manufactures in which they are engaged.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no man can doubt that the duty here proposed is entirely prohibitory. If it be adopted we shall not realize a single dollar of revenue from this source. Under the present tariff, with a duty of fifteen per cent. ad valorem on this article, we have received a large amount of revenue from this source during the last year.

Mr. MORRILL. For the purpose of terminating debate, I move that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DUNDAS PATENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in reply to a resolution of the House of May 26, in regard to the reissue of the Dundas patent for cultivators; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto terminate in seven minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to occupy the time of the committee long enough to give some information which may be necessary for their proper action on this subject. In 1864 we imposed upon nickel a duty of fifteen per cent. A struggle was made for a higher duty. I resisted that effort because I thought it impossible to place a sufficient amount of duty upon German silver ware and Argentine ware to afford compensation. The duty now proposed is forty cents per pound. We have raised the duty upon German silver ware from forty per cent. to fifty per cent. Therefore, in my judgment, this article will be able to bear the amount of duty we have proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I move, pro formâ, to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. This nickel is a very recent discovery in this country. The gentleman from Ohio speaks of what the tariff was on this article five or six years ago. Why, sir, the article had not then been discovered in America. The discovery is but recent. As to the mine which has been referred to, I may state that two companies that have attempted to work it have broken down, and a third company is now working it at a very great expense, for the work requires an amount of labor and machinery greater than would be supposed by one who had not seen the thing in practical operation. It costs between one and two hundred thousand dollars. This man has brought it to perfection or nearly so. The gentleman from Connecticut says it is good for nothing. If it is not, it will not hurt anybody. What the committee proposes is forty cents per pound. The gentleman from Ohio moves instead twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. You do not put any other interest as low as that. Why should this have less protection than others? Show me any interest in which our citizens have been induced to invest their money that has so little protection.

Mr. GARFIELD. Flaxseed has not half the protection.

Mr. STEVENS. Until lately the people of Ohio raised flaxseed more for the seed and threw away the fiber. They had not gone far enough to make it into cloth. I do not know they do so to-day. They sent the cake to Glasgow. I say, that if this manufacture be broken down now it will be broken down forever. Mines have been discovered in New Jersey and some in Pennsylvania and some in Missouri. To strike out the duty as proposed by the gentleman from Connecticut will, as the gentleman from Iowa has well said, break it down forever. You will find no man persevering enough again to embark $200,000 and send to Europe for skilled labor. What has come across the gentleman from Ohio? Has he bought lately some German silver, or has he been where he found them working awit, that he suddenly endeavors to put a less duty on this than it deserves?

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say that I impeach no man's motives on this floor for his advocacy of any measure, nor do I intend that any one shall impeach mine. I have no interest in nickel nor German silver, nor have I, indeed, any nickel mines in my district like the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I only wish to see justice done between the producers at the mines and the manufacturers.

The question recurred on Mr. GARFIELD's amendment to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes sixteen, noes not counted.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. STEVENS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-one, noes not counted. So the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, and Mr. STEVENS, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 54.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. According to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, I move to make it thirty-five cents per pound.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GARFIELD and MOORHEAD were appointed.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On Paris white, dry, one and a half cent per pound; ground in oil, two and a half cents per pound; on whitening, dry, one cent per pound; when ground in oil, two cents per pound.

On pens, metallic, fifteen cents per gross.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to add the following:

On pen-holders twelve cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On pen-holder sticks and pen-holder tips imported separately six cents per dozen each, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to insert the following:

On wood pencils not exceeding six and three fourths inches in length filled with lead or other material fifty cents per gross, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

On wood pencils exceeding six and three fourths inches in length an additional duty of the same amount for every additional six and three fourths inches in length.

The effect of the amendment is not to increase the existing duty on lead pencils but simply to prevent the commission of fraud on the revenue which I am informed is frequently resorted to. The ordinary length of pencils is six and three fourths inches. Pencils are imported twenty-eight inches long and then cut into the ordinary length when they are received here, so that a duty is paid only on one gross when four gross are imported.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out, on page 36, line sixty, "fifteen," and insert in lieu thereof "twenty," so that it will read, "on pens, metallic, twenty cents per gross." I learn that five cents a gross in addition would enable them to make a fair profit, and no more. I hope there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I object to the proposition, and hope it will not be agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish to say that although the duty under the existing tariff is ten cents, there is an ad valorem of twenty-five per cent., and I hope that duty will be added to the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. STEVENS.]

Mr. STEVENS. I think my amendment affords sufficient protection.

Mr. O'NEILL. I am satisfied if my colleague is. I hold in my hand a letter from a leading manufacturer of steel pens in which he tells me that in some custom-houses of the country they count a gross of pens one hundred and forty-four dozen, and he thinks that we should provide what should make a gross.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, the pending question being upon Mr. STEVENS's motion to amend the pending clause, on page 36, by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "twenty," so as to make it read, "on pens, metallic, twenty cents per gross."

Mr. MORRILL. The duty is now ten cents, and we have increased it to fifteen. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. STEVENS's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by adding an ad valorem duty of twenty-five per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will not persist in his amendments in reference to this article. It seems to me that there ought to be some limit and some moderation in proposing amendments to this bill. I have endeavored to vote against all these propositions for extravagant rates of duties, but I find it impossible to keep them from being put in.

Mr. O'NEILL. Allow me to say a word. It must be known to the members of the committee that the district that I represent and the districts represented by my immediate colleagues are, strictly speaking, manufacturing districts. If there are any places in the country where the manufacturers are paying attention to this tariff bill and the proposed amendments to it it is the districts to which I have referred. Hence the frequency of the offering of amendments by myself and my colleagues. I do not apologize to the committee for doing it, for I am here to do my duty, not only toward those I represent, but my duty to my country at large. I intend to pursue the course I have pursued, and that is to offer amendments when I think they are right. Now, to come down to this particular amendment, the manufacture of these pens is limited in my neighborhood to one large establishment; I presume there are other large manufactories in the country. These gentlemen whom I know are largely interested in the manufacture of these small articles of steel pens, and their testimony to me is this: that under the proposed duty, with the ad valorem, they can get along. The duty now is ten cents a gross and twenty-five cents ad valorem. The committee have raised the duty to fifteen cents a gross, and have taken off the ad valorem duty of twenty-five per cent. Now, these gentlemen write to me that under this tariff they cannot continue the manufacture of these pens. We have raised the duty on steel, an article that enters almost entirely into the manufacture of these pens.

Mr. MORRILL. I am always ready to acknowledge an error. I acknowledge that the ad valorem on this article, and also on the article of percussion caps, was accidentally omitted in the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. Then I will be satisfied if the gentleman will put on the ad valorem. I ask also that the number of pens that make up a gross shall be specified as one hundred and forty-four pens to the gross.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to oppose this particular amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL;] but I wish to remind him of the fable of the dog who was carrying meat over water, and not satisfied with the substance let it drop and snatched at the shadow. Now, my constituents are deeply interested in this tariff, but I have not pressed those interests for fear of jeopardizing the whole measure. I would rather have reasonable protection, because that which is reasonable and not high will be more likely to be permanent and to continue for the lasting benefit of my constituents, whereas if it be too high, though it may last through this session of Congress, it may bring down upon my constituents a great reduction.

Now, I think that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would consult the interests of his constituents, and perhaps he will not thank me for telling him what the interests of his constituents are, he would not act upon the resolution which he has announced that he is determined to act upon, and that is to get the highest duties for his constituents whether or no, because that may end in losing everything.

Mr. WINFIELD. If there is any way of protecting ourselves against this perpetual talk I shall insist on that protection.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no protection except under the rules of the House.

The question was taken on Mr. O'NEILL's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend so as to make the duty five per cent. With the consent of the talkative gentlemen upon the other side of the House, I will say that if a stranger were listening to our deliberations he would be solemnly impressed with the deplorable condition of our country. No gentleman has spoken on this subject who has not disclosed the lamentable condition of the manufacturers of this country; many of them are languishing and likely to break up, and unless a high tariff is passed, it appears that utter, irretrievable ruin is to fall upon the manufacturing interests of the country. I have observed during the progress of this discussion that there has been a persistent effort on the part of all those representing the manufacturing interests of this country to club together for the purpose of fastening upon the country a high protective tariff. I have never seen a scheme so adroitly maneuvered for the purpose of filching money from the consumers of this country and bestowing it upon the manufacturers as has been exhibited by the action of this House.

Sir, if there is anything required beyond what this Congress has already done to make the country look with contempt and derision on its action it will be the passage of this iniquitous measure which is now attempted to be fastened upon the people of the country. Gentlemen have openly combined here on the principle that "if you'll tickle me I'll tickle you;" if you will vote to fasten upon the country a high protective tariff for the benefit of the interest that I represent, I will vote for your interest. It is by such corrupt bargains and intrigues as these that it is attempted to fasten this iniquity upon the free people of this country. I tell you, sir, they will spurn it from them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. One of the greatest iniquities in relation to this bill, one of the most preposterous motions that has been made, was a motion made by the gentleman from Illinois himself, which was happily defeated. I move to amend by inserting after the words "per gross" the words "of one hundred and forty-four pence, and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. O'NEILL. I certainly understood the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] to accept my amendment, which is the same as he has moved.

Mr. MORRILL. I am perfectly willing the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] should have the credit of the entire amendment; I only desire to put it in the proper shape.

Mr. O'NEILL. That is just exactly what I want, the credit of my own amendment.

Mr. MORRILL's amendment was agreed to. The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. O'NEILL, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert after line sixty, "on hair pins made of iron wire fifty per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On percussion caps, ten cents per thousand.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this line by adding the words "and forty per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two upon this question of percussion caps. The percussion caps that are now imported from England are worth about $1.80 per thousand, being the best water-proof caps. The French percussion caps are worth about thirty-four cents per thousand. The consequence is that the forty per cent. ad valorem duty amounts to about fifty-two cents on the thousand of the best English percussion caps, and about fourteen cents per thousand on the French percussion caps. And yet this bill, by some mistake as I knew it must be, reduced the whole to ten cents per thousand, far below the present rate.

At the beginning of the late war to put down the rebellion it so happened that the Government was not able to produce percussion caps, other than Navy percussion caps, sufficient for a single regiment. And yet this interest has now been so built up that we have become entirely independent of the foreign percussion caps. And I trust that nothing will be done to neutralize that interest, but that we shall keep within our control that and everything else we may need in time of war. I trust the time will never again come when we shall have to go to Belgium for rifles or to England for percussion caps. I now understand it was the intention of the committee to do what I thought ought to have been done, to increase the tariff upon percussion caps by retaining the present duty of forty per cent. ad valorem, and adding ten cents per thousand, which I think is probably a fair tariff.

Mr. MORRILL's amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On photograph albums, portmanteaus, pocket-books, wallets, cabas, and leather bags, and frames for leather bags and portmanteaus, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment was offered.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to insert after the paragraph just read "on file, or gold or silver spang on silk, worsted or cotton bouillon, and lame, or flat wire, twenty per cent. ad valorem."

That is for the purpose of reducing the duties on two or three articles which come into this country as raw material, but upon which the duty is higher than upon the manufactured article.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On plaster, calcined, one quarter of a cent per pound.

Mr. PIKE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "calcined" the words "or ground."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after the line last read by the Clerk "on putty, two cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On soap-stone, free-stone, brown free-stone, sand-stone, and all building stone, except marble, four dollars per ton of fourteen cubic feet.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend this paragraph by adding "on grindstones, finished, rough or unhewn, four dollars per ton of thirteen cubic feet." I ask that small addition for the benefit of the grindstone manufacturers of northern Ohio and Michigan. We have now to compete with the grindstones from Nova Scotia. The Nova Scotia men can send their grindstones to the New York market, all the way by water, for three dollars a ton, while we are obliged to send ours from Ohio and Michigan to the same market at an expense of about nine dollars per ton. If we put on this duty of four dollars per ton it will still give Nova Scotia two dollars the advantage of us. But with this duty we think we can compete with them in that market and furnish a better article than is now obtained from Nova Scotia.

Mr. MORRILL. We have been in the habit of importing rough grindstones free; and they form a very considerable item in establishments for the manufacture of articles of iron and steel. Some of them contain much more than thirteen cubic feet, large stones which are employed in the manufacture of edge tools and scythes. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] that he can hardly desire to impose this duty on those very heavy articles. The grindstones of Ohio will not be carried to New York or New England whatever duty we may impose. I hope that the gentleman will not propose so high a duty upon rough grindstones, whatever we may put upon finished ones; and the latter form a very considerable item and are usually much lighter in weight.

On the amendment Mr. SPALDING called for a division; and there were—ayes 10, noes 25; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. SPALDING and PRICE.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Mr. SPALDING. I am willing to withdraw the call for a division and allow the amendment to be regarded as rejected, if I can have a vote in the House upon this proposition.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out "four" and inserting in lieu thereof "five," and by striking out "fourteen" and inserting "thirteen," so that the duty shall be five dollars per ton of thirteen cubic feet. I understand that thirteen cubic feet, and not fourteen, constitute the proper measure of a ton.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARSTON. I move to amend by adding to the pending paragraph the following: "and on Bristol stones and Bristol bricks, forty per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. MORRILL. Will not the gentleman consent to thirty per cent.? There is no duty upon these articles now.

Mr. MARSTON. There is a duty of ten per cent.; but I am willing to do whatever the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means says is right.

Mr. RADFORD. I rise to ask the chairman of the committee by what authority these bargains are made in this way. A proposition being made, he offers a compromise right in the face of the House. It does seem to me that if this whole thing is to be farmed out in this way, the gentlemen who have the authority to control this matter had better present at once what they are willing the House shall adopt, and let us be done with the subject, so that we may go on with other business.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman means to intimate that I have made any bargain with anybody, I utterly repudiate such an imputation. I merely asked whether the gentleman would not be satisfied with thirty per cent., believing that to be as high a rate of duty as the committee ought to vote, and for no other reason in the world, and there was nothing of bargain about it and nothing improper.

Mr. MARSTON. I modify my amendment by striking out "forty" and inserting "thirty."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend by inserting after the word "free-stone" the words "grindstones finished;" so that the paragraph will read, "on soap-stone, free-stone, brown free-stone, grindstones finished, sand-stone, and all building stone, except marble, five dollars per ton of thirteen cubic feet." I think that this will comport with the views of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that imported grindstones are never sold by the square foot; and he had better fix the duty at so much per ton. I suggest to him that the article of grindstones finished had better be included in a separate paragraph.

Mr. SPALDING. I modify my amendment so as to add after the pending paragraph the following: "on grindstones finished, five dollars per ton."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On trays and waiters, and all other articles of japanned, gilt, or plated ware, not herein otherwise provided for, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "fifty" and inserting "sixty." I presume that if the Committee of Ways and Means had had proper information they would not have fixed the duty at less than sixty per cent. This branch of manufacture is just becoming established in this country. Under the present tariff the advance in the cost of materials has more than counterbalanced the advantage arising from the duty. The increased cost of varnishes resulting from the advanced price of alcohol will render it impossible for this branch of industry to sustain itself unless additional protection be given.

Mr. RADFORD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "sixty" and inserting "thirty." I cannot see the propriety of increasing these duties, especially when it is proposed to make them prohibitory. I believe that the object is to prohibit the importation of these articles; and for that reason I move to reduce the duty to thirty per cent. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to both the pending amendments for the reason I believe they are too high. I believe the duty is too high even as proposed by my friend from New York [Mr. RADFORD] on my left. I am not a little surprised to find gentlemen moving on all occasions increase of duties and assigning as a reason that the men who are engaged in the manufacture of the particular article cannot live unless there is a higher duty made in order to afford protection. Sir, I have sat here during the entire time this bill has been undergoing examination, and I have yet to hear from that side of the House a single gentleman say that the men who are the consumers of these articles have been before them for the purpose of determining what rate of duty should be levied to raise revenue or to afford them protection in any shape. The time, it seems to me, has come when we should look to the interests of consumers and not alone to the interests of the manufacturers. How does it stand? By the census of 1860 we have to-day about thirty-four million people in the United States; and by the same census we are told of all classes of manufacturers there are some eight million six hundred thousand. Of this number about two millions or less are all that are benefited by the tariff. Here is a proposition that thirty-two million people shall pay a bonus to two millions in the shape of protection, which comes out of the consuming classes of this country.

I am opposed to this bill from the beginning to the end, and for the reason assigned by the gentleman why the committee should pass this protective tariff and not for revenue purposes. Not one gentleman has offered an argument why it should be raised for the purpose of increasing the revenue, not one, but every argument from that side of the House is that increased duty must be laid for the purpose of protecting particular branches of business. When you come down to the article of grindstones, every man comes here who has a manufacturing establishment of that article in his district and asks an increase of duty on that to protect an interest of a few men engaged in it, and yet the large number of men who use these articles, who consume all the articles provided in this bill, are never consulted for a single moment as to their wishes and wants.

I know that in the latter part of the bill they have thrown a tub to the whale, and protected broom corn and the article of corn which has hardly ever been known to be imported in this country. All that to the agricultural interest is a mere blind. Merchants in New York regard this present law as a prohibitory tariff to some extent, and the proposition here is to increase it; and a Republican paper in Chicago, which has given this subject a great deal of consideration, has stated that under this bill we will lose about one hundred and thirty-seven million dollars. I ask whether you are willing to lose that for protection alone.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment of Mr. RADFORD was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to reduce it to forty-nine, for the purpose of saying that the committee raised the duty from forty to fifty per cent. for the reason that we have raised the duty on iron from the present rates. I hope it will be allowed to remain as we have reported it. The gentleman from Ohio says that New York importers declare our existing tariff is prohibitory, when the fact is we have received under it this last year over $169,000,000 in revenue, which contradicts the declaration. I withdraw my amendment.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. GRISWOLD, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On umbrellas and parasols, and sticks, frames, tips, runners, wire, stretchers, handles, or other parts thereof, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to add after the word parasols "seventy per cent. ad valorem." I do this because I see there is no discrimination between the article already made up and the materials that enter into the manufacture of the article. They all pay the same duty by the bill as it stands.

Mr. MORRILL. All the materials used in the manufacture of this article are included, as was done in some other cases, pen-holders, for instance, in order that they should not be imported in separate pieces and then be put together in order to escape the duty. It was for the purpose of taking care of the umbrella manufacture that the materials were all put in at the same rate. I trust the amendment for a further increase will be rejected.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On watches, watch movements, parts of watches, and watch cases, of gold, silver, plated, or other metal, thirty per cent. ad valorem; on chronometers of all kinds, and parts of chronometers, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

On whips, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert as an additional paragraph, "on gun-cotton, fifty per cent. ad valorem." The materials of which gun-cotton is made are arranged for in the tariff, and in order to make them harmonize, or make them about equal, I think it is a fair duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On allspice, oil of, twelve dollars per pound.

On ammonia, alcoholic, spirits of, fifty cents per pound.

On aniline dyes, crystal, seventy-five cents per pound.

On aniline dyes, paste, forty cents per pound.

On aniline dyes, liquid, eight cents per pound.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I believe I have the approbation of the committee in offering to amend by striking out the last three lines, so as to leave the present duty remaining. I believe the committee were under a misapprehension in regard to this business, supposing that it was not conducted on a sufficiently large scale. Now, there are two establishments in England and one in France, and we have two in this country, for the manufacture of this article. I propose, after striking out these three lines, to offer a substitute imposing a duty on the crude article. I submit whether that does not meet the approbation of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not particular in relation to this matter, and if no other person in the House objects, I will not.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I now move to add in lieu of the lines stricken out, "on crude aniline oil ten per cent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On anhydrous boracic acid, twenty-five cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so that it will read, "twenty-seven cents per pound." I find on further investigation and information from scientific gentlemen, that twenty-seven cents is the proper rate in proportion to the duty on borax and boracic acid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to transfer line thirty-six so as to have it come in after the line last read, as follows:

On hydrated boracic acid, twelve cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, in the first place, to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to; and the transfer was accordingly made.

The Clerk read as follows:

On anodyne, Hoffman's, seventy-five cents per pound.

On arsenic, and on arsenous and arsenic acid, ten per cent. ad valorem.

On black lead or plumbago, one cent per pound.

Mr. HALE. I move to add after the word "cent" the words "and a half," so that it will read "one cent and a half per pound." I understand this is assented to by the committee. I move it on the ground of increasing the revenue with incidental protection.

Mr. LE BLOND. That is refreshing to this side of the House, surely. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to insert on page 38, after line fifteen, "on crucibles made wholly or in part of plumbago or black lead, forty per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I desire to inquire of the Committee of Ways and Means the reason for doubling the duty on plumbago.

I move to amend the clause by striking out "one cent" and inserting "one half cent."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On burning fluid, three dollars per gallon.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after that clause, "on carmine, lake, and woodlake water colors, forty per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the clause in relation to burning fluid, I move to strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to make the duty two dollars per gallon. I am under the impression that this provision of the bill must be a mistake. The Committee of Ways and Means could not have intended to put the duty so high. When General Jackson was asked if he was in favor of a tariff, his answer was that he was in favor of a judicious tariff. I am in favor of a judicious tariff. I think some things ought to be taxed and some ought not. I think that luxuries and ornaments ought to be taxed, and taxed heavily, but I think that such things as air and water and light ought not to be taxed. I understand this to be a tax upon light. I recollect that the present chairman of this committee, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] made a very handsome speech in regard to furnishing light to the poor man. I am in favor of furnishing light to the poor man, and I think this is a mistake. I have moved to reduce the duty one dollar in the hope that some other gentleman will feel disposed to reduce it still lower. I do think that we should furnish light in the cheapest manner possible, and I hope that my amendment will prevail.

Mr. MORRILL. The reason for raising the duty on this article is apparent to every one in the House who knows anything about the materials from which the article is made. It is made from alcohol and spirits of turpentine, and the duty on the alcohol if only one half the quantity were used would be two dollars per gallon. As to this article being used by the poor, I suppose it has been obsolete since the discovery of petroleum, a superior article at half the price. Why, sir, instead of reducing the duty on this article, I would rather enact that the man who invented it should be hung, for until petroleum was discovered not a week passed that you did not read in the newspapers of some accidents by which some persons lost their lives by the explosion of these burning-fluid lamps. There was no week when it could not have been properly indicted as a murderer.

The question was taken on Mr. HENDERSON'S amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cloves, oil of, three dollars per pound.

On cologne water and other perfumery, flavoring extracts, essences, tinctures, liniments, medicinal compounds, and mixtures, of which alcohol forms the principal ingredient, $3 50 per gallon, and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On cordials of all kinds, sweet, three dollars per pound.

On ergot, oil of, ten dollars per pound.

On ergotine, ten dollars per pound.

On essence of cloves, three dollars per pound.

On ethers, preparations or extracts, fluid, all not provided for, ten dollars per pound.

Mr. ROLLINS. I call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to that last clause. I presume it is a mistake; the duty should be one dollar instead of ten.

Mr. MORRILL. As the gentleman from New Hampshire is an expert in these articles, I should be disposed to yield to him in regard to this matter, but we took the rate which is inserted here from the report of the revenue commissions.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "one."

Mr. MORRILL. I would ask the gentleman if he knows what material fluid is made of.

Mr. ROLLINS. Alcohol.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, if it is made of alcohol the duty on the alcohol would be four dollars a gallon.

Mr. ROLLINS. I will modify my amendment so as to strike out "ten" and insert "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On glycerine, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend that clause by striking out "forty per cent. ad valorem," and inserting in lieu thereof "twenty-five cents per pound." It is alleged that there is a great deal of fraud practiced in the importation of this article, and I hope the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will allow the duty to be made specific.

Mr. MORRILL. In order to avoid any mistakes in the custom-house, we have enumerated this article by name and imposed a duty of forty per cent. ad valorem. I trust the duty will not be increased. It is made often of burnt flour.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by inserting after the line last read, "on nitro-glycerine or nitro-leum, fifty per cent. ad valorem." Nitro-glycerine is an explosive material almost the same as gun-cotton, with the exception of having glycerine fat as a base instead of cotton. I propose the same duty as on gun-cotton.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On gum benzoin or Benjamin, Senegal, Arabic, tragacanth, Barbary, East India, Jeddah and amber, ten per cent. ad valorem.

On gum copal and other gums and resinous substances used for the same or similar purposes, three cents per pound.

On gum shealac, three cents per pound.

On hydrated boracic acid, twelve cents per pound.

On lead, sugar of, twenty-five cents per pound.

On lead, acetate of, thirty cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "on lead, sugar of, twenty-five cents per pound," and to insert after the words "on lead, acetate of" the words "or sugar of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by inserting after what the Clerk has just read, "on red prussiate of potash, twelve and a half cents per pound; on yellow prussiate of potash, seven and a half cents per pound."

I hope the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] will help me to carry this amendment. Some weeks ago the important interests engaged in the manufacture of these prussiates went before the Committee of Ways and Means and endeavored to show why the duty should be increased. And I understood they went away with the impression or understanding that the duty would be increased. They desired at first to have a duty of fifteen cents on red prussiate and ten cents on the other. They went away with the belief that the committee would recommend twelve and a half cents on the red prussiate and seven and a half on the other. I believe this amendment is just and proper, and I hope the chairman of the committee will consent to it.

Mr. MORRILL. We had a great deal before the Committee of Ways and Means in relation to chemical preparations. But after mature deliberation we came to the conclusion that it was too hot weather to go into the study of chemistry to such an extent as to acquire the knowledge necessary for a proper understanding of these subjects. In order to understand fully any one of these preparations, a great deal of accurate information is necessary, because they are all more or less related to each other, and if you touch one you thereby create a necessity for touching all the other members of the family. I therefore hope the Committee of the Whole will not adopt any further amendment in relation to these chemical and medicinal preparations.

The amendment of Mr. O'NEILL was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On linseed, flaxseed, hempseed, and rapeseed oil, thirty cents per gallon.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, pro forma, to make the duty thirty-five cents per gallon. And I do that for this purpose: the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] last evening handled me rather roughly on the subject of statistics.

And while I have no expectation of changing the present duty on linseed oil, either to increase it or diminish it, I desire to place myself right upon the record, and to show that although I had not recently examined the subject, it is not always safe for gentlemen here to take their statistics second-hand, without investigating the subject to some extent themselves. And I know if the gentleman from Ohio had investigated this subject himself he would not have fallen into the error he did.

Now, to show that I was right in my recollection of what the facts were, I desire to submit some figures in regard to the amount of our importation of linseed and linseed oil, and also the amount of those articles produced in this country. My statement was that we have been in the habit of importing something like three fourths of all that we consumed either in the form of oil or linseed. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] rather scouted the idea that that was the fact at any time, and quoted statistics to show what he said the facts were for ten years past. Now, for the year 1850 I find that we imported 667,369 bushels of the seed and 1,513,117 gallons of the oil. The whole production of the United States for that year, according to the census, was but 562,312 bushels of seed. For the year ending June 30, 1851, we imported 602,074 bushels of the seed and 2,818,340 gallons of the oil. In 1859 we imported free of duty flaxseed of the value of $2,415,243, and paying duty 275 bushels, and of oil 1,210,697 gallons. In 1860 we have the record of our production again. That year we imported free of duty seed of the value of $2,753,411, and paying duty 513 bushels; the amount of oil was —, while the amount of home production for that year was 611,977 bushels. Now, Mr. Chairman, I only desired to state the facts, because when I undertake to represent facts I like to represent them as they are so far as I am able; and I do not mean that my statements shall be successfully impeached.

Mr. SCHENCK. In replying to the gentleman from Vermont I beg leave to remind the House that I said not one word last night about the importation of oil. My whole argument was confined to repelling, not an intimation, but a direct charge, made by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that the whole object of the effort to procure protection for this seed interest was to benefit, as the gentleman said, some "half dozen crushers" in the western States. I replied by showing that those half dozen crushers consisted of more than ninety presses, involving an interest of about eight million dollars. I referred to the production in the six western States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and Kentucky, and I presented some figures, the correctness of which the gentleman does not deny, to show that the aggregate value during the last year of the flaxseed produced in those States was $5,250,000.

The gentleman, evading that point, admitting that he had gone very much too far in speaking of "a half dozen crushers," then spoke of the importation of flaxseed as falling off. On this subject I gave the gentleman some figures, which have nothing to do with what he is now speaking of, and which did not go back beyond 1861. I stated that so far from the fact being that the amount imported was of no consequence, the aggregate importation from 1861 to 1865 amounted, in round numbers, to 1,300,000 bushels. I will now give the gentleman the exact figures, taken from official sources. The importation, gradually increasing from upward of 123,000 bags in 1861, amounted in 1865 to 321,570. Now, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, familiar as he is with all subjects relating to the tariff, must know that each one of these bags contains four bushels; consequently the amount imported last year was 1,286,280 bushels. But, besides this, there was an importation of 58,776 pockets. This eastern flaxseed, making, as it does, two and a quarter gallons of oil to the bushel while ours makes but two gallons, is to a great extent imported in small bags called pockets, containing three pecks apiece. Reducing these pockets to bushels, and adding them to the 1,286,280 bushels, the result shows more than 1,300,000 bushels of this foreign seed imported during the last year. Sir, I did not speak at all of the importation of the oil; I referred simply to the importation of the foreign seed. So far from the fact being that the importation has fallen off, I affirm that it has gone on regularly increasing during the last five years, the amount imported during the last year being three times the amount imported in 1861.

There is among lawyers, I believe, what is called "answering aside." Now, the gentleman makes, as he claims, a triumphant defense by the production of some figures in reference to a matter to which I did not refer; but he takes special care to make no reference whatever to the statement with which I confronted him.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely wish to say that whether my remarks were an appropriate answer to the gentleman from Ohio I leave for the House to determine.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to this article, the withdrawal of the right to a drawback upon the export of the oil-cake will make a difference against the eastern crushers of three or four cents per gallon. The fact that until 1861 we always allowed a duty of nearly twice as much upon the oil as we did upon the seed shows what the idea of Congress has been on this subject for more than thirty or forty years. All I now desire to do is merely to wash my own hands in reference to this matter.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has washed his hands for this time, henceforth, and forever. I hope that hereafter he will let our agriculturists alone and will confine himself to other matters. I have nothing more to say. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the words "linseed," "flaxseed," and "hempseed," respectively, the word "oil." As the paragraph now stands the language is, I think, somewhat ambiguous.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest that it would be better to strike out the word "oil" after the word "rapeseed" and to insert before the word "linseed" the words "oil of;" so that the clause will read "on oil of linseed, flaxseed, hempseed, rapeseed," &c.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I modify my amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Vermont.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On nitric ether, spirits of, one dollar per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to amend by adding "on nitrate of soda, one half cent per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I move to amend by adding the words "and on muriate of potash, ten per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will say "fifteen per cent." I will not object.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. Then I modify my amendment by striking out "ten" and inserting "fifteen."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend by inserting after the amendment just adopted the following:

On soda-ash and silicate of soda, one and one half cent per pound.

On carbonate of soda, exceeding ninety-five per cent. in purity, two cents per pound.

On sal-soda, two and one half cents per pound.

On caustic-soda, bicarbonate of soda, and aluminate of soda, three cents per pound.

It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment embraces the article of soda and its correlatives. I would have hoped to obtain the support of the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means for this proposition, involving, as it does, a very important Vermont interest, if he had not unfortunately prejudged the case by pronouncing upon it in advance. He was pleased to say in his opening speech on this bill that the production of soda-ash, so important an element in the useful arts, and so essential for many domestic purposes, is one of those things in which our step-mother England eclipses all other nations; that the experiment of its manufacture in this country has failed because of the want of corresponding advantages on our part; and that, moreover, he had consented to save the nominal duty of one half of one per cent. on the article of soda-ash, which did not afford any protection, only in the glimmering hope that this beggar's brat, cast out upon the commons to scratch for a living, might win its way to manhood by its own inherent power without the protection of the Government. I am willing to admit—to the shame of the nation be it spoken—that we are entirely dependent upon England for this article so necessary to the arts. We are importing it annually, and paying for it to the extent of five millions in gold sent abroad while we are endeavoring to get back to specie payments, for the purpose of feeding some thousands of English laborers when we have all the elements for the manufacture at home.

It is not true, however, that England has any advantage whatever over us in the production of this article, except it be in its cheaper capital and lower wages. She has the salt, limestone, and coal in juxtaposition at New Castle on the Tyne, at Glasgow, and at other points, and so have we in equal abundance in many parts of this country. Nature has deposited the brine in immediate connection with the other elements, and so wedded them as to indicate the uses we are expected to make of them.

There is, however, one other important element in the manufacture of this article which England is obliged to import from abroad but which we have at home, and that is sulphur. This she cannot import in a pure state, but she gets it from Spain and Portugal in the shape of pyrites, or cheap sulphuret copper or iron ores. It costs her twenty-one or twenty-two dollars a ton, and the proportion of copper contained is, I think, three or four per cent. The same ores precisely are to be found in the Green mountains of Vermont in great abundance, but of so little value for fusion in the ordinary way as to be utterly worthless. Give us the protection we desire and we shall furnish a market for all the ores Vermont can provide. We will give employment to her people, and make that valuable which is utterly valueless now.

Sir, if the chairman of the committee had heard the opinions of those I have the honor to represent before he committed himself publicly in his opening speech on this question, he might have been induced to think differently. We have here a case of juxtaposition without any chemical combination. In Vermont is found the ore which only wants the voice of the potent member from that State to develop it and make it useful and valuable to his people.

Mr. MORRILL. I have heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his colleagues on this subject, and the more I have heard from them the more I am convinced that we ought to abandon even any duty at all on the article. Ever since the foundation of the Government this article has been treated as one that should not be subjected to any considerable tax. The Congress of 1842—and certainly that Congress was sufficiently protective to suit even my friend from the Pittsburg district, [Mr. WILLIAMS]—imposed a duty of five per cent. upon that article. The Congress of 1846 placed upon it a duty of ten per cent. That of 1857 of only four per cent. That of 1861 made it free. That of 1864 put a duty of one half a cent per pound upon it. More than twenty-five per cent. already exists upon it, and there is no probability or prospect that it can be successfully manufactured in this country.

The gentleman appeals to me, to my local feeling, because he says Vermont possesses copper and iron pyrites which afford a sufficient amount of sulphur to manufacture this article. I can tell my friend that we have no coal in Vermont and no salt, and wood is so expensive that the article cannot be manufactured there. Besides, we have no salt there. His appeal is therefore of no force in that regard. Moreover, the experiment so far as sulphur or sulphuric acid has already been tried there. Many thousands of dollars have been expended in order to manufacture these articles, and it has proved a failure. And if we raise the duty to the extravagant rate on the article as he proposes, then, as I have already said this evening, we have got to go through the whole family of the sodas. We shall also have to increase the duty on glass, on soap, and other articles. Now, it does appear to me that if there is one article in the list on which we ought to hesitate about raising the duty it is this one. It presents to me the most cogent arguments in favor of being free. I am content, if the gentleman be so, to let it alone, to leave it as it is; otherwise I would be quite willing to act with any portion of the House to make it free.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Vermont underrates the value of the article in which the State is so rich. I can inform him that in Camden, New Jersey, a single establishment is consuming four tons per day of the ores from his own State, which they are not expected themselves to manufacture into sulphuret. So there is one market for the article if he is willing to furnish it. The gentleman's argument assumes that this article of soda-ash has been protected. The protection given to it, of half a cent a pound, is a mere mockery and delusion, intended to seduce men into the manufacture, but without furnishing the means of compensation for their risk and labor; and so it has happened that the manufacture has struggled along without protection until it has utterly failed; and now some of the manufactures into which that article enters are successfully carried on in this country because they have protection at the hands of the Government, while this important and useful article has no protection whatever. Now, what interest is to be damaged by this increase? It affects nothing. The article, it is true, enters into the composition of glass, soap, and paper to some extent. How much will this affect them? The effect is entirely insensible, and the increase made in the duty on the article of glass last night will more than indemnify them.

Mr. MORRILL. I leave it to your colleague to answer that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Your colleague from New England [Mr. DAWES] happened to be more successful in moving an amendment in regard to the article of glass. But what would be the difference? One fourth of a cent per pound. What would be the difference to the soap manufacturer? One sixth of a cent per pound. Would they complain? They are willing, so far as we at the West are concerned, that the article should be adequately protected, because it would secure stability in prices and abundance of supply.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOGAN. This is rather an important question. I think that if there is any article at all that we ought to make efforts to produce in this country, it is this, for all the materials entering into it are to be found here almost together. The State which I have the honor in part to represent has all the elements out of which to make this commodity. We have pyrites of copper and pyrites of iron; we have sulphate of copper and salt and limestone and coal. We can produce this commodity, if a little effort be made, cheaper than England can produce it, for she has to get copper ore from Spain out of which to make it. Now, why should it not be made at home? Why should not some protection be given to it so that we may make it at home? Every man that makes soap in this county has to send to England to get this soda-ash.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask my friend from Missouri whether sulphur is used to make soda-ash or not.

Mr. HOGAN. Sulphate of copper is used and sulphate of iron is used.

Mr. MORRILL. To make soda-ash?

Mr. HOGAN. Yes, in combination.

Mr. MORRILL. It is used to make caustic-soda, but I was not aware it was used to make soda-ash.

Mr. HOGAN. It is used for that purpose in combination with salt and limestone and other articles. We have in our State an illimitable supply of all these articles; and we have in the city which I have the honor to represent chemical works in which this commodity could be made so as to supply the paper makers there, and the soap makers there, and furnish it in a liquid state, thus saving the cost of first reducing it to powder in order that it may be brought to this country from England. I hope that something will be done by the committee that will tend to open up such sources of national wealth as this is and enable us to be independent of the productions of England, to which country we are now compelled to look for this commodity.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely rise to say that in my judgment, the paper manufacturers, the glass makers and the soap makers can better afford to buy up this man for half a million dollars than have the duty raised on this article.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw my last amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew the amendment to the amendment. And as the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] has just said that the paper makers of this country could well afford to buy off the party that wants this for half a million dollars a year, I will ask to have read a letter from the largest paper maker in the country, the head of a firm that is now turning out wood-pulp for paper; cutting down the trees of our forest and converting them into pulp for printing and writing paper. I ask that his letter be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, June 29, 1866.

DEAR JUDGE: When I last saw you I told you that I was not in favor of increasing the duty on soda-ash, but upon reflection I think that we ought to put sufficient duty on it to induce parties to go into the manufacture of it here. We are now dependent, you may say entirely, on England for the article. That is bad enough in time of peace, but in case of war with that country there are many branches of manufacture here that would be ruined for the time. Adequate duties on other things (sufficient to admit of our making the articles here) have always, I think, resulted in building up the manufactures of such articles here; and in the end, those articles have settled down at prices below what the same article of foreign manufacture was formerly sold at. I shall therefore be pleased to have you do all that you can to have the duty on soda-ash increased to one and a half or two cents per pound, and hope you will see the propriety of doing so, and of doing immediately all you can to bring it about.

Yours truly,

A. D. JESSUP.

Hon. W. D. KELLEY, Washington, D. C.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, there is probably no paper-maker or glass-maker in the country who is so large a consumer of soda-ash as the firm of Jessup & Moore, of which Mr. A. D. Jessup is the senior partner. Now, we know that during the last year our dependence upon England for this article ran the price up from what it used to be, from two and a half or three cents per pound to twelve cents, and at one period of time to fourteen cents per pound. This is an article which is an element of our bread, an element of our soap, an element of our glass, and an element of a thousand and one of our products. But so much are we dependent upon foreign countries for our supply of it that with a long westerly wind, and the wreck of three or four vessels loaded with soda-ash, the price went up from four cents per pound to twelve cents, and touched at the highest point, fourteen cents per pound. Now, if our country should be subjected to vicissitudes of that kind, or should a war with England take place, our manufacturers would have to create soda-ash factories; and that cannot be done in a day. We cannot create soda-ash factories as we create foundries for casting large cannon, on mills for rolling plates for making iron vessels. It takes from fifteen to eighteen months to get one of these factories fairly in operation from the foundation up. Therefore, as my correspondent says, it would be wise to make our country, which contains all the elements for this manufacture, independent of foreign countries, by promoting the manufacture by ourselves.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. For the purpose of terminating debate, I move that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOTFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDOWALL, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, without amendment:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of Edgar T. Harris;

An act (H. R. No. 743) amendatory of an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler";

An act (H. R. No. 740) for the relief of Matilda J. Monroe;

An act (H. R. No. 705) for the relief of George W. Bush;

An act (H. R. No. 704) for the relief of Joel Farley;

An act (H. R. No. 703) for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Lynch;

An act (H. R. No. 700) for the benefit of John W. Jones;

An act (H. R. No. 699) for the relief of James L. Perham;

An act (H. R. No. 698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mercie E. Scattergood;

An act (H. R. No. 684) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. McManus, widow of Captain Andrew McManus, late of the sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry;

An act (H. R. No. 616) for the relief of Lucinda Gates;

An act (H. R. No. 495) for the relief of Mary A. Patrick;

An act (H. R. No. 464) for the relief of John Gordon; and

An act (H. R. No. 461) granting a pension to Ann Sheehy.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 692) increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 702) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte E. Reed;

An act (H. R. No. 789) for the relief of Samantha Rader;

An act (H. R. No. 741) granting a pension to Jonathan W. Beach; and

An act (H. R. No. 742) for the relief of the minor children of Salvador Accadi, deceased.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 79) for the benefit of Peter Anderson;

An act (S. No. 171) for the relief of Reuben Clough;

An act (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Crosswell;

An act (S. No. 358) granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy A. Stock;

An act (S. No. 359) for the relief of Hopestill Bigelow, of New Market, New Jersey;

An act (S. No. 366) granting a pension to Abraham Lansing;

An act (S. No. 376) granting a pension to Drussey A. Layman;

An act (S. No. 390) granting a pension to John Pyle; and

An act (S. No. 398) for the relief of W. B. Kelley.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate on the pending section terminate in three minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOTFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. KELLEY to the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say a single word more in relation to soda-ash, as it is a subject of some importance. The gentlemen who suppose that sulphur is used in the manufacture of this article I would state are entirely mistaken; it is not used in the manufacture of this article. And what motive there can be for the authors of the letter just read at the Clerk's desk to urge an increase of the duty on it I cannot see, unless somebody has offered to supply this article at a certain rate. I do not say that is so, but I do think there must be some interested motive at the bottom. And as we have raised the duty on salt we have placed the manufacture in this country out of the reach of anybody. It can be manufactured only where salt is obtained at a low rate. We have placed the duty on salt so high that it would be utterly impossible to compete with the manufacturers abroad who obtain their salt at a cost of only six or eight cents the bushel.

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "one cent per pound" instead of "one and a half." I am glad the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means at last recognizes there is so large an interest in this matter in my district. He failed to recognize it the other day when he persuaded the House to vote down my proposition to give greater protection to the glass manufacture of that district and the country. I make this amendment because I think the amendment of my colleague from the Pittsburgh district is too high. If this new branch of industry in the United States is not sufficiently protected by one half cent per pound, I hope the committee will recur to the part of the bill which we have passed and afford more protection to the glass manufacturer. At the suggestion of friends I withdraw my amendment to permit a vote to be taken on the amendment of my colleague.

The question recurred on Mr. WILLIAMS's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. MORRILL were appointed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw my amendment, and offer the following:

On soda-ash, silicate of soda, and sal-soda, one cent per pound.

On bicarbonate and caustic-soda, two cents per pound.

On aluminate of soda, and on carbonate of soda over ninety-five per cent. purity, two cents per pound.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 56; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS withdrew his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On red lead, litharge, orange mineral, mineral yellow, and all paints or pigments of lead, not otherwise herein provided for, four cents per pound.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to make it five cents per pound. As by the order of the House debate has closed on those paragraphs I will send to the Clerk's desk a letter from one of my constituents, parts of which, marked by me, I desire should be read.

The letter was as follows:

"You will notice that the new act increases the duty on red lead, litharge, and orange mineral, one cent per pound; this advantage is entirely counterbalanced by the increased duty on pig lead of one cent per pound. In addition to this, dry white lead is increased two cents per pound; but orange mineral, which must first be dry white lead, (being manufactured from carbonate of lead and not pig lead direct,) is only protected one cent, which, as we have said above, is made of no avail by the additional duty on pig lead. This, you will see at once, shows ignorance of the chemical nature of the articles.

"The white lead interest, including orange mineral, needs to sustain it clear three cents per pound duty over that of pig lead, and will, as sure as a sun shines, languish and die out from foreign competition, should gold fall to anything like par, if the necessary protection is not granted. The tax on whisky kills us. If the Government oppress our goods in one way they should relieve us against European markets. Oxides of lead (red lead and litharge) should have at least two cents protection over pig lead. In Europe, as well as probably at the mines in this country, the ore is first smelted into an oxide to obtain the silver before being made into pig lead. What chance have we to compete who have to buy the pig lead at an additional expense to the cost of oxide to the foreigner?

"These points are very important; they do not touch only us but an interest in this country, in apparatus, amounting to nearly five million dollars and employing one thousand operatives."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "orange mineral" and insert "and a half;" so it will read "four and a half cents."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On saltpeter refined, or partially refined, three cents per pound; on white lead, dry or ground in oil, five cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after "oil" "orange mineral."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to increase it from "five" to "six."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That from and after the day and year aforesaid, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned, and on such as may now be exempt from duty, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise enumerated and provided for in this section, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On animals, living, all sorts, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. STROUSE. I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "ten." I have not very actively participated in the debates on this important bill, not because I did not feel as much interest as any one here, but in order to allay the general clamor that Pennsylvania was asking for protection. I have not asked, as a representative of the largest coal and iron region, anything not fair and proper. I think the committee will take into consideration that we ought not to legislate for any section or portion of the country.

This is a most important revenue bill. We should take into consideration the great area and extent of our country. Not because I am a Pennsylvanian, nor because I represent a mineral district, do I ask protection. I am in favor of the protection of American industry for all classes, all sections, and all divisions of our country. We must legislate for the masses of the people and not for the privileged few. We are now paying from twenty-five to thirty-five cents a pound for beef. The laboring man, is the great sufferer. We import cattle from Canada. This is no loss, damage, or prejudice to our agriculturists. We are on the border of the British Provinces, and when we impose a duty of ten per cent. in gold on cattle for slaughter I think we are doing very well. I hope the committee will take a liberal view of this matter and reduce the proposed duty from thirty to ten per cent., in order that provisions, the necessities of life for the poor toiling millions, may be within their reach.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I am glad that the gentleman who has offered this amendment lives in Pennsylvania.

Mr. STROUSE. I do, and I am proud of it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I would like to know what we have not been asked to do for old Pennsylvania. She has asked us to put up everything in the world, because she produces everything. And now the State of Pennsylvania, through her Representatives, asks us to bring her the provisions she wants from Canada—pork and beef, milk, butter, and honey, I suppose—to feed her manufacturing people, while she taxes us for the iron she produces. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I would, as a western man, have liked to have had the tariff on live animals thirty-three and one third per cent. That was about my figure, as a revenue tariff man, for I will now say that I am for a tariff for revenue, but after the amount is fixed for revenue, and we know what we want to raise, then I am willing to discriminate in favor of the protection of domestic industry. My figure was thirty-three and one third per cent. on live animals from Canada, but I was cut down to thirty.

Mr. BINGHAM. You are not cut down very much yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. WENTWORTH. I am talking about the committee, and I object to the gentleman making fun of me. [Laughter.] I hope, indeed I know, that the good sense of the committee will let this duty remain as it is.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend the amendment by making it fifty per cent. That is still below the protection which New England asks for her manufactures. If it is the policy of Congress to build around this country a Chinese wall so as to prohibit the introduction of articles from other countries, the rule should apply as well to agricultural products as to the manufactures of New England. I see no reason why there should not be at least as much duty placed upon the importation of stock into this country as upon manufactures. If the people of New England want to compel us to purchase the products of their looms and factories at exorbitant prices, by putting on them a tariff of from fifty to eighty per cent., I see no reason why they should not be compelled to buy their beef from those who raise them in this country. I am therefore in favor of raising the price upon those articles, and if my amendment is adopted I propose, when we get to the next article, vegetables, to move to strike out ten per cent. and make it at least fifty per cent.

Why, sir, we have been told repeatedly during the discussion that an increase of the tariff decreases the price of the article to the consumer. Now, I want to carry out the principle in regard to vegetables, and see if by putting on fifty per cent. tariff we cannot reduce the price. If by putting on a tariff of sixty per cent. on manufactures the people of the West get them from New England a great deal cheaper, why not try it in regard to provisions?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOORHEAD. I would like to ask the gentleman, if he can get this duty on animals fixed at fifty per cent., will the bill suit him, then?

Mr. ROSS. No, sir; I am opposed to the whole system entirely. I believe in "free trade and sailors' rights." [Laughter.] I would prefer that we should have as near free trade as possible. If we have any tariff it should be merely a revenue tariff. But as one of the representatives of the agricultural interest of the country, I will not stand here and see combinations made by manufacturers for the purpose of fleecing my constituency without raising my voice in behalf of protecting their rights here. If gentlemen from the eastern and middle States insist that we shall buy our manufactures exclusively from them, let them buy their beef and vegetables from us, and let us close our doors against their bringing in beef and vegetables from Canada.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PIKE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] has repeated in five-minute talks some half dozen times that this is a New England tariff and that New England wants protection for her manufactures. Now, that simply shows the inattention of the gentleman to the business of the House. If he had been here and had attended to the business of the House for the last week or ten days he would have known this fact—

Mr. ROSS. Does the gentleman mean to insinuate that I have not been here?

Mr. PIKE. I cannot yield to the gentleman; he will have his turn.

Mr. ROSS. I have been here all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is out of order and will take his seat.

Mr. PIKE. I say that if the gentleman had been here attending to the business of the House—and whether he has been here or not I cannot say—

Mr. ROSS. I have been here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. PIKE. I say he would have seen that, although many gentlemen on the floor have been constantly proposing amendments to increase the duties provided for in the report of the Committee of Ways and Means, but one New England gentleman has risen here to propose an increase, and that was my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] whose proposition was to increase the duty on glassware a quarter of a cent.

Mr. ROSS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PIKE. That is the sum total of the demands of New England.

Mr. ROSS. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not know that New England has the chairmen of twelve of the committees of this House? [Laughter.]

Mr. PIKE. What of that? Very worthy chairmen they are, and very properly bestowed I suppose. I am sure I do not brag of my position on the committees of this House.

Now, I have to say this, that while New England has not asked any increase, she has constantly asked a decrease—constantly. I myself have several times asked a decrease of these duties. Other New England gentlemen around me have asked for a decrease of duties. In no instance, except the one I have spoken of, has any New England man asked for an increase. The gentleman from Illinois knows so little about this tariff bill as not to know that this is a western tariff bill, got up for the benefit of the West, originating in a desire there to protect wool, starting there and sweeping from the West over into Pennsylvania, and going backward and forward between the West on the one side and Pennsylvania on the other. New England is out in the cold. She does not care to-day "one red" whether this tariff bill goes over until December or until March next, or into a distant future.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on Mr. Ross's amendment; and there were—ayes 20, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Mr. ROSS. What is the trouble on the other side of the House? I understood they were willing to give us protection.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I have every reason to believe that the House misunderstood the question. I noticed that the protective gentleman voted against the proposition of my colleague. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The Chair will order tellers.

Messrs. ROSS and DAWES were appointed tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Mr. ROSS. I withdraw my amendment.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. STROUSE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOTFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. ROSS, (at ten o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. FARNSWORTH: The petition of E. B. Gilbert, and others, of De Kalb, Illinois, in favor of a uniform system of insurance.

By Mr. THAYER: Several petitions for an increase of the tariff.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 7, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of J. R. Williams, and others, citizens of New Jersey, praying for an equalization of the bounties to soldiers in the late war; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer a petition from the presidents of the fire insurance companies of the city of Boston, and as it is very brief, I will read it. They say, "In view of the great destruction of property so frequently occasioned by the improper use of India crackers and other imported fire-works, we respectfully petition your honorable body that a law may be enacted prohibiting the importation of the same into any port or place in the United States." I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the remonstrance of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York against the passage of the bill now before the House of Representatives entitled "A bill to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes." Inasmuch as this bill is soon to come before the Senate, I shall take the opportunity to call attention to the subject and to give the views entertained in regard to it by the New York Chamber of Commerce.

In the first place they represent that the title of the bill is mistaken. The enhanced duties it proposes being in many cases so high that they must prove prohibitory; its adoption cannot fail to diminish rather than increase the revenue from imports. The proposed enhancement of duties is chiefly, if not altogether, on imported articles which come directly into competition with similar domestic products, such for example as iron, woollens, worsted, and linen. These are all leading articles in our import trade, and no one familiar with that trade can doubt that the exorbitant duties to which this bill proposes to subject them would greatly diminish their importation, and therefore lessen the revenues of the Government.

It appears to the remonstrants impolitic to lessen the gold revenue of the Government at a time when our gold liabilities are increasing, and it seems especially impolitic to do so coincidentally with the abandonment of many of the existing sources of internal revenue. There is reason to apprehend that the joint effect of the two measures may so reduce the revenue of the Government as to leave the aggregate insufficient to meet its current expenses and maturing interest and thus weaken the public credit.

But the remonstrants object to this measure on other and broader grounds. They believe its adoption would prove injurious to every interest affected by it. It would be especially injurious to commerce, by driving it from established channels, by lessening our foreign trade, and by leaving our large mercantile marine without adequate or profitable employment. It would mar the prosperity of agriculture by increasing the cost of its supplies without enhancing the prices of its products, which are governed, as are those of all exportable commodities, by the foreign market value. It would injure mechanics by increasing the cost of living without enhancing wages. And finally, by its exorbitant protection, it would injure the permanent prosperity of the manufacturing interest itself, which it is specially intended to protect and foster. It proposes to increase the protection of that interest by adding from ten to fifty per cent. to the present high rates of duty at the moment when the amended internal revenue laws relieve that interest from a heavy excise tax. The joint effect of the two measures will be to confer upon that interest a rate of protection ranging from fifty to one hundred per cent.; and this protection will be absolute, with the excise taxes annulled and the premium on exchange and on gold to pay duties compensating to the manufacturers for the adverse effect of a depreciated currency. This degree of protection being at least twice as large as that which this interest has hitherto enjoyed under the revenue laws most favorable to it, we may expect to see engendered a home competition which will ultimately prove fatal to its prosperity. We may also expect to see the people soon become so restive under this unwarrantable boon conferred on a favored interest, as to demand its repeal and the substitution of a tariff strictly grounded on the principle of revenue. This, combined with the effect of home competition, would be liable to involve the manufacturing interests of our country in general bankruptcy. For these reasons the remonstrants respectfully ask that the bill may not become a law. I move that this remonstrance be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

MINORITY REPORT ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, being compelled, by business affecting my State and city, for a period to leave my place in the Senate some three weeks since, and having prepared, in conjunction with two other members of the committee of fifteen, what is denominated a minority report, and it not being copied at the time so as to be in a presentable form, I requested the honorable member from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] to present it in my name; and that was done a few days after I left here. The reception of it was objected to, as I see, by my friend from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] upon, as I understand, three grounds. The first was that it was not presented by myself or by any member of the committee; the second was that reports of that sort are not received at all; and the third was that it was not presented at the time the report of the majority was presented.

In relation to the first, what I have stated I suppose may be considered as a sufficient explanation; but if it is not, the objection is avoided by my asking to present it now. In relation to the second, I find, on looking at the Journals, which I have had examined only so far back as the 10th of April, 1840, coming down to a recent period, that the minority of a committee have been permitted to present what I suppose were their reports, although they are called in the Journal the "views of the minority." That was done on the 10th of April, 1840. It is unnecessary to trouble the Senate with the detail of each of those cases. On the 12th of March, 1856—

"Mr. DOUGLAS, from the Committee on Territories, to whom were referred several messages of the President in relation to affairs in Kansas, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed."

"Mr. COLLMER submitted the views of the minority of the committee; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee."

On the 5th of May, 1858, I find this entry:

"Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom the subject of a national bankrupt law had been referred, stated that the committee had been unable to agree upon the details of a bill."

"Mr. DOOMBS, in behalf of the minority of the committee, submitted a paper purporting to be a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, and moved that it be printed."

"A question of order was raised by Mr. GREEN, to wit, that the minority of a committee had no power to originate or bring in a bill."

He did not object to the minority presenting their report or their views, but only their right to do it in the form of a bill.

"The VICE PRESIDENT stated that it had been usual to receive the views of a minority of a committee."

On the 7th of February, 1862,

"Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the credentials of Hon. Benjamin Stark, submitted a report."

"Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and obtained, leave to submit the views of the minority of the committee."

"Ordered, That the report of the committee, with the views of the minority, and accompanying papers, be printed."

I suppose, therefore, that it may now be considered as the established usage of the Senate to permit the minority of a committee to state the grounds upon which, if they differ from the majority, that difference is founded.

But in addition to that I will state to the Senate, and I have here an extract from the journal of the committee, that on the 28th of April, 1866, when the committee determined upon reporting the measures which are now before the country, there is in that journal this entry:

"Mr. STEVENS moved that the joint resolution and bills adopted by the committee to-day be reported on Monday next to the two Houses of Congress, and that leave be asked to submit at some future time reports to accompany the same."

"The motion was agreed to."

"On motion of Mr. ROGERS, it was "Ordered, That the minority of the committee have leave to submit minority reports."

The matter remained in that situation from the 28th of April until, I think, the 8th of June; and as I knew that the majority desired that the report which was to accompany the bills and resolutions, and which was directed to be made by the entry which I have just read, should be prepared by my friend, the chairman of the committee, the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN], and knowing how his time was occupied in other duties, I doubted very much whether he would be able to prepare a report at all; and if he had not prepared a report, I certainly should have presented none, and as far as I know the minority of the committee would not have presented any. But on the 8th of June, nearly two months after the report was authorized to be made, the honorable member from Maine, as I get from the proceedings of the day reported in the Globe, just at the moment when the vote was about to be taken on the measures themselves, rose and said to the Senate:

"I ask leave to make a report. I have here an extended report from the committee of fifteen, so called, the committee on reconstruction, giving their views and reasons with reference to the joint resolution which they submitted to the Senate and the conclusions to which they arrived. It was my hope that some time in the course of this debate, before the vote was taken, I might have the opportunity to lay the whole report before the Senate and have it read, but it is now so late an hour, and as gentlemen are desirous of taking the vote, and it has been agreed to take it to-day, that I do not feel that it would be right to attempt to have it read in detail. I therefore move that it be laid upon the table and printed."

"The motion was agreed to."

I then rose and said:

"It was understood in committee that if there should be any member who did not agree with the majority of the committee he would be at liberty to make a counter or minority report, and I merely rise for the purpose of saying that as such is the condition in which I stand, and in which two or three other members of the committee stand, I shall avail myself of that privilege at as early a day as possible."

To that there was no objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. When was that?

Mr. JOHNSON. The same day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What day?

Mr. JOHNSON. The 8th of June, the same day on which the majority report was presented and not read, for the very satisfactory reason given by my friend from Maine.

I was quite unwell at the time the report was presented; but as soon as I could prepare the minority report I did prepare it. I did not know and had not the slightest reason to suspect there would be any objection until some eight or ten days afterward, I think, when my honorable friend from Maine said to me that according to the custom of the Senate it was not the right of the minority to present a report except at the time when the report of the majority was presented. Although there was nothing in his manner that should cause me to think he intended it more as a matter of jest than in earnest, I really did, in my simplicity, suppose it was a matter of jest, he and I being in the habit of jesting with each other occasionally; and I went on and finished the minority report.

I can understand why it is proper that as a general rule the report of the minority of a committee should be made simultaneously or as nearly simultaneously as possible with that of the majority; that is to say, it would not be right to put it in the hands of a minority to criticise or to answer in detail the argument of the majority. But that was not my purpose in any way, nor have I attempted to do it. As far as I recollect, there is no reference made in the minority report to the report of the majority except in two particulars. It is not an attempt to answer at all in detail the report of the majority.

Now, I submit, Mr. President, that under the circumstances it would be right to allow this paper to be received—not right to the minority, for that is a matter of little or no moment; it is certainly of little or no moment to me. I do not ask it as a matter of courtesy, for I would not ask the Senate as a matter of courtesy to give me a privilege that was inconsistent with the established usage of the Senate; but upon a subject so important as this, when a report drawn up with the ability which distinguishes the report of the majority is received by the Senate and goes to the country giving the reasons why the measures adopted by the majority should receive the sanction of the country, it is but right that the people of the country should have the views of the minority. It is barely possible that the views of the minority may receive the sanction of the people instead of those of the majority.

The report of the minority, too, was presented in the House of Representatives a day or two, I believe, before my friend from Indiana presented it in the Senate; it was received without any objection by that body, and was ordered to be printed with the report of the majority. I think they ordered some fifty or one hundred thousand copies. I have no personal interest in the matter; but I submit that under all the circumstances it is but right that the views of the minority should go to the country together with those of the majority, be printed either with or separately from the report of the majority. Even if there was any well-established usage to show that such a course would not be proper, I submit that under the circumstances this should be an exception to the general usage, first, because the committee of fifteen authorized the minority to make a report; second, because the purpose of the minority to make a report was made known to the Senate and received without any objection by anybody; third, because the report was being prepared under the belief that it would, when prepared, be received by the Senate without any objection; and fourth and lastly, because I had not the most remote suspicion that my friend from Maine was preparing the majority report at all. If he had told me, or had thought it necessary to tell me—he was under no obligation to tell me—that he was preparing the report and would have it ready on a certain day, and that if the minority desired to make a minority report it should be ready on the same day, the views of the minority would have been presented then; but until he held the paper in his hand, a moment or two before he offered it to the Senate, and told me he was about to offer it, I had not the most remote suspicion that he had put pen to paper upon the question at all—not that he concealed it from me, because that he is incapable of; but knowing how constantly his time was occupied as chairman of the Finance Committee and with the running business of the Senate to which he always gives attention, and fearing that the state of his health would not permit him to prepare a report of this description, I did not suppose that he was engaged in any such work. Certainly, if I had so supposed, the minority report, with his consent, would have been offered on the day he presented the majority report.

The Senate will dispose of it as they may think is right under all the circumstances.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It places me in a very unpleasant situation to object to the reception of the report presented by the Senator from Maryland, and I certainly should not think of doing so if I did not fear that its reception, under the circumstances, would be leading to a very bad practice and establishing a new precedent in the Senate.

The Senator has referred to the practice of the Senate on this subject, and I presume has stated it correctly, which has been not to receive minority reports as reports at all, it being understood that by parliamentary law a committee can make but one report, and whenever a minority of a committee or some of its members have desired to place their views before the Senate it has been done in that form, as "the views of the minority," as the Senator has correctly stated. I think he did not refer to any case where a minority report, technically so called, had ever been presented to the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. In all the instances of it by the memorandum they are said to be "the views of the minority." If that is the objection to the form in which this report is presented, I can alter it in that respect and simply beg leave to present "the views of the minority."

Mr. TRUMBULL. That has always been made a point in the Senate. I have before me the Globe in which that objection was taken to what was called a technical minority report by Mr. Mason, then a member of this body from Virginia. He said that no such thing was known in this body as a minority report. I think none of the Senator's precedents which he refers to upon his memorandum show that a minority report was ever presented in this body.

But, sir, the object is accomplished by presenting the views of the minority and not calling it a report, which the Senator desires to accomplish. Although the Senate has thought it of sufficient importance never to allow hitherto a minority report to be made, I do not see myself any very great importance in what it is called. But the objection to this seems to me to be the time when it is made. However, I ought to say one word in regard to the suggestion which I made the other day that it was unusual for one Senator to represent another. I did not make that as a point, that the paper should not be received on that ground. I spoke of it as an unusual proceeding. I certainly should not desire to make that the ground of a refusal to receive the paper which is presented by the Senator from Maryland.

The objection which it seems to me exists against receiving it is one in point of time. The Senator from Maryland tells us that he was taken by surprise when the Senator from Maine presented his report. It seems that this is an after-thought on the part of the minority of the members of this committee. After the majority have presented their report, and after the measure in connection with which it was presented has passed both Houses of Congress and gone to the country, and Congress has done with it, it is not to be considered here any more—some weeks afterward, I believe, I do not remember the date, when the Senator from Indiana asked leave, in behalf of the Senator from Maryland, to present this minority report, but I think it was some weeks after the majority report had been presented, and after the measure had passed from the consideration of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know what the time was. I left here, I think, on the 16th of June, and the majority report was presented on the 8th. I wrote the minority report in three or four days.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Indiana probably recollects when he called attention to this; it was some days ago; I do not recollect the precise day.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think it was yesterday week or yesterday two weeks; it was while the Senator from Maryland was in Pennsylvania.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was some weeks at any rate; it is not material as to the precise number of days.

Mr. HENDRICKS. My impression is that it was about a week after the Senator from Maine had made his report, but I will not undertake to say within several days of the exact time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Globe will show. It must have been more than a week, because the Senator from Maryland did not leave till the 16th and the majority report was presented a week before that. This was sometime afterward; it was weeks after the majority report had been presented and after the subject-matter had passed entirely from the consideration of the Senate. Now, for what purpose is this? What is the object of presenting a report of a committee? What is the object of presenting the views of the minority of this committee? It is supposed that the object of a report, the office of a report, is to bring to the consideration of the body the reasons which have actuated the committee in the action which they have taken. Surely the Senator from Maryland does not expect to produce any effect upon this body by presenting his views after the measure had passed entirely away and gone for weeks.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I find on examination that I submitted that document on the 22d day of June, yesterday two weeks.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And the majority report I understand was presented on the 8th of June. Two weeks after the majority report was presented the minority report was sought to be presented in this irregular way, a minority report which was prepared after the majority report was presented to the Senate, a minority report which the Senator presenting it says he did not think of writing until he saw the majority report. He supposed the chairman of the committee was too unwell to prepare a report, and therefore he did not think of writing one.

Was ever such a practice as that heard of in a legislative body before to-day? I apprehend not; and if such a practice is sanctioned, the result of it will be that the minority members of a committee will wait until the majority present their views, and will then present a review of the majority report. The Senator from Maryland says he has not done that in this instance. It is not because I have any objection to this particular report that I raised this question, although it was insinuated the other day that there might be an objection to having these views go before the country. Certainly I have no such objection, and it is exceedingly unpleasant to make any objection to receiving the report, even, under the circumstances, and I would not do so except from a sense of duty and from a strong feeling of the impropriety of allowing such a practice to obtain in this body.

The Senator says that he had permission from the committee to make a minority report. Well, sir, that is a matter outside of the Senate. The committee could not give that permission. That is for the legislative body to determine.

Neither could the committee refuse it. The refusal of the committee to allow the Senator to submit his views could not take from him the right to do so if he has that right at all. It was not dependent upon any action of the committee; nor could they grant that right if it did not exist without their action.

Now, sir, I submit to the Senate whether it will not be setting a bad example to allow a minority report—a thing never presented in this body before—to be received under the circumstances. I should be very glad myself to have the minority report received, out of respect to the Senator from Maryland, if it is no violation of parliamentary law and of proper proceedings. I certainly have, personally, no kind of objection to it, and it is only as a matter of practice that I have presented the considerations that I have. I shall be quite satisfied if the Senate, consistently with its sense of duty and its practice, shall feel at liberty to receive the report, under the circumstances; and, on the Senator's account, I should myself be very glad of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course the honorable member from Illinois does not suppose that I consider his opposition to the reception of this report as personally discourteous to me. I am sure he is actuated by what he considers to be his duty to the Senate. I rise only for the purpose of replying to a remark or two that fell from the honorable member. He says that I stated to the Senate that I did not begin to prepare the report until I saw the report of the majority. That in one sense is correct, and in another it is not. I had not seen the report of the majority at all when I commenced preparing it. I saw it in the hands of the chairman, and I heard it presented here, but it was not published in a form in which I could use it until I commenced writing the minority report. Why I did not commence writing that report before was, to repeat it, because I did not think that my friend from Maine would be able to make a report, nor did I suppose that it was deemed necessary, after so long a lapse of time as between the 28th of April and the 8th of June, that a report should accompany the measures themselves.

Now, the honorable member says, and says with some truth, that the object of these reports is to operate on the measure before the Senate to which they relate. That is true. It is supposed that the majority of a committee who may think it proper to accompany any measure that they recommend with a report, do it for the purpose of enlightening the Senate or aiding the Senate in arriving at a proper conclusion. But if it is improper to receive a minority report because the subject has passed beyond the consideration of the Senate, I should like to know from my friend from Illinois why he agreed to receive the report of the majority. It was presented on the 8th of June. It was not read. The honorable Senator from Maine gave his reasons for not reading it. We were about to vote upon the measures to which it related, and we did vote without any member of the Senate knowing anything that was contained in the report of the majority, except the honorable member by whom it was prepared and such members of the Senate as constituted a part of the committee of fifteen. The rest of the Senate knew nothing about it; so that that report was received, not when the measure had passed beyond the control of the Senate, but just as it was about to pass, and just as it did pass in point of fact. And yet, several days afterward, as I see by the journals, some fifty thousand copies of that report were ordered to be printed. What for? Not to aid the Senate in arriving at a proper conclusion, because the matter had gone beyond the control of the Senate. It was, as far as it might be considered as tending to the instruction of the people, for the benefit and instruction of the people. The measures recommended in that report were amendments of the Constitution. The subject, therefore, was to go before the people, to be acted upon by the people of the several States; and the purpose of my friend from Maine—and a proper purpose—and the purpose of those who agreed with him in directing him, if he could, to prepare the report, was to recommend the measures which the committee had adopted to the sanction of the people. The object of the minority report is to lay before the people who are to act on those measures the views of the minority.

But my friend has not accounted for one fact which seems to me to be fairly before the Senate. When the chairman offered his report he did not ask that it be read, for a very satisfactory reason; it was received and ordered to be printed; and I at once announced that the committee had authorized the minority, if there should be a minority, to propose a counter report, and I gave notice to the Senate that at some future day, and at as early a day as I could, such a report would be prepared and presented, and there was not a word of objection from anybody. If there had been such an objection, I should not have prepared the report at all; or, if I prepared any report, it would not have been presented to the Senate; that is very certain.

Now, the honorable member says that it was not my purpose to prepare a report until I saw the report of the majority. That is true, I was perfectly willing that the measures recommended by the committee should speak for themselves; and not believing that my friend from Maine would be able to discharge the duty cast upon him, and not being advised by him that he was engaged in that duty at any time, I acted under the full impression that there would be no report; and certainly, if there had been no report on the part of the majority, it was not my purpose to present a report on the part of the minority. I should have been met, if I had offered a report under those circumstances from the minority; with the objection that there was no report from the majority, and of course one would not have been received from the minority.

But I beg the Senate to understand that I am not asking the reception of the report upon any personal ground. If I were to ask it, and the Senate were willing to grant it because there was no impediment in the way which they thought was one they could not get over, I have every reason to believe, from the courtesy always shown to me by the Senate, that the report would be received. I ask it simply now as what I suppose to be the right of the minority, and what I suppose also to be, perhaps, the wish of a great many people in the United States, to see published what the minority of that committee may think of the measures recommended by the majority.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Maryland is certainly right when he declines to present this case as a personal one. Of course, if it was so presented, if we could regard it simply as a courtesy to the Senator from Maryland, there would be every disposition, I take it, to concede to him all that he could desire. There would be, certainly, on my part. I therefore eliminate that suggestion. There is another one, also, that I will eliminate; it is that there can be any disposition on the part of any Senator to interfere with the entire freedom with which we express our opinions on this floor, either individually or as members of committees. I believe there is every disposition to concede to every Senator and to every committee of this body all parliamentary privileges possible, everything that is consistent with parliamentary law.

Putting those two considerations, then, aside, the question that comes to us is whether, according to the usage of the Senate, or according to parliamentary law as recognized by the Senate, a report from a minority can be received at so late a day as that on which this document has been presented by the Senator from Maryland. On that question I am clearly of opinion with the Senator from Illinois. I believe that the reception of such a minority document—I will not call it a report, because the parliamentary law does not recognize it as such—would not be consistent with the usage of the Senate, nor would it be for the good of the Senate in the conduct of public business. I am sure that it is not according to the usage of the Senate. This is a subject to which my attention was directed many years ago. Certainly more than ten years ago it fell to me to draw up what at the time I undertook to call a minority report on a very important political question then before the body, connected with the administration of the fugitive slave law. The document that I had drawn up was signed by Mr. Seward and by myself. It was presented to the Senate, however, contemporaneously with the report of the majority on the question. Our document was entitled a minority report. Its reception was objected to, in the first place, by Mr. Badger, of North Carolina, who the Senator from Maryland will remember to have been very acute and well versed in parliamentary law. He at once took the ground that there was no such thing known to parliamentary law as a minority report, and he seemed disposed at the beginning even to insist that we had no right to present any minority statement whatever; but finally he settled down upon the conclusion that if we chose to present a statement it should be called the views of the minority. Accordingly the document that had been drawn up was so entitled, "the views of the minority," and it was presented and received at the same time with the majority report, and was printed with it.

That occurred in 1854 or 1855. I refer to it as a case which at the time occupied very seriously the attention of the Senate. It related to a subject with regard to which the country and the Senate were very sensitive; and I believe it may be considered an authoritative precedent. It shows the care, the caution with which the Senate at that time were disposed to watch what was done by the minority of a committee. To be sure, that precedent does not directly decide the question raised by the Senator from Maryland. There was no question there arising from a delay on the part of the minority; but that precedent does show that the Senate was not disposed to concede to the minority any considerable privileges; that its disposition, on the other hand, was to constrain it, and to compel it to act in a very narrow field, and without according to what it did even the character of a report. If the Senator chooses to refer to that precedent, he will find that what was presented by the minority bears the title of "the views of the minority." So it stands in the Journal of this body, and so it was printed among its documents. I believe, therefore, that the precedents of this body will not sustain the Senator from Maryland.

Now, if you go further and look at the reason of the thing, I believe that will be full as strong against him as the precedents of the body. Sir, the reason of the thing is absolutely, if I may so say, against what is now proposed by the Senator from Maryland. Concede to a minority what he now asks, and all minorities hereafter will hold themselves in ambush, if you please, to spring forward, if they see fit, when the report of the majority has been made, constituting themselves into critics and reviewers.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member does not suppose that was done in this instance?

Mr. SUMNER. I make no such suggestion as that at all. I am merely trying to present the danger which I think no one would see casier than the Senator from Maryland. Now, the question is whether at this moment we are disposed, in the first place, to discard the usages of the Senate, and, in the second place, to establish a precedent which, if followed hereafter, may be productive of so much mischief. I think, therefore, whatever may be its bearings on the present case, that the Senate ought to be sure and fix a proper precedent. It ought to bear in mind that what it does in this very important case will be a rule of conduct hereafter, and establishing a rule of conduct is nothing more nor less than establishing something kindred to legislation itself.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member from Illinois—and the same objection has been made by my friend from Massachusetts—objects to the receipt of the paper which I ask leave to present because it professes to be a report. I had supposed that when the views of a minority are presented, it is done virtually as a report, although it may not be called a report in words. I propose, therefore, to present it in this way: "I beg leave to present the views of the minority," striking out the word "report."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Perhaps I ought to say a word in explanation on this subject. I have not the slightest personal objection to the reception of this paper if the Senate think it proper to receive it under the peculiar circumstances of the case. I suppose, as it has been already presented in the House of Representatives and largely printed there in connection with the report made by the majority, there can be no particular purpose in presenting it here except to have the same number printed which was printed of the report itself; and if received by the Senate, I suppose that permission could not well be refused. To that I should have no objection.

I should have much preferred, however, and that is one of the objections, that it had been presented at the time the report itself was presented in order that they might have gone together. Perhaps my honorable friend may think there is a little vanity in my announcing my willingness that the two should be compared; but I beg leave to say to him, I have such confidence in the fact that I was on the right side and he was on the wrong one, that I am sure, even with his acknowledged ability, he could not make the worse appear the better reason. In such a case I should be willing to have them compared together.

I made the proper explanation to the Senate at the time that I reported the resolution. It was my intention to prepare a report to come in with the resolution. Perceiving that the labors of the committee were drawing to a point, I had made up my mind at once to commence the preparation of a report, which I supposed I should be ordered to make, as chairman of the committee; but on the very day that I proposed to do it and had collected some papers with a view to make a drawing of the report, I was seized, as the Senate will remember, with disease which confined me to my room and made me unfit entirely for work until the very last day of the sessions of the committee on the subject of the resolution. I was then sent for; the members of the committee insisted upon it that I should be present at that meeting if possible; and the very first day that I went out of my room I went to the committee-room and staid there for four hours, the Senator will remember, although very feeble at that time, while the committee was coming to its conclusion. It was then moved by some member of the committee that a report be prepared by the chairman. I stated that I had been sick, and it had been impossible for me to do it, and I had no report ready, whereupon a motion was made that the chairman be directed to make it out at as early a day as possible.

Mr. JOHNSON. At a future time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. At a future day, but directed to make the report, so far as the resolution was concerned, immediately. I stated that fact when I presented the resolution to the Senate from the committee. I remember well that at that time a member of the committee requested leave also, in the committee, to present the views of the minority, and the committee made no objection, but acceded to it as usual. Owing to the feeble state of my health and the great quantity of business that was accumulated upon me, I found it very difficult indeed to prepare the report; and such as it was, it was written in my room at odd hours, after the adjournment of the Senate in the evening, or before its meeting in the morning, on such occasions as I could get, an hour at a time, when I could look into the subject, so that I was unable to get it finished until some three or four days before the 8th of June, when it was presented. I then called a meeting of the committee. The committee came together. I read the report, and it was approved, with one or two suggestions for the alteration of phraseology. Within three or four days afterward I made the report.

These were the circumstances. There was no concealment from anybody. Had the Senator or any one of the minority been present at the meeting he would have heard the report read.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator does not suppose that I thought for a moment there was any concealment. That was the last thing in the world that I dreamed of. I did not happen to be present at the meeting now referred to; I was out of town at the time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Ample notice was given to everybody connected with the committee that the report would be made as soon as it could be put in shape. I was obliged to read the rough manuscript to the committee to let them see how it would read. These are the facts.

Now, with regard to the question before the Senate, I have no personal objection to granting the request of the Senator from Maryland, but, situated as I am, I shall not vote on the question. The Senator has alluded to a conversation which passed between him and myself which he supposed was sportive, and to a certain extent it was; but I expressed to him very clearly my objection to this course of proceeding. I said that I did not think it was parliamentary, that there was no precedent for it, and that such a practice afforded to the minority an opportunity to wait until they saw the views of the majority, and then to sit down and review them and make up their report or views in that way. The Senator remarked to me—he will excuse me for repeating it, although I supposed at the time it was sportive—"That is precisely what I intend to do."

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I told him that I should never agree to his doing any such thing, and that I should object to the reception of his views under those circumstances, because I did not deem it a proper or parliamentary course of proceeding.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not do that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I gave no further attention to the matter. I saw afterward that the views of the minority were presented in the House of Representatives, I think very erroneously according to all parliamentary practice; and I think this would be contrary to all parliamentary practice that I ever knew anything about if it was acceded to. I simply repeat the suggestion that so far as I am individually concerned, and so far as the committee are concerned, having made the majority report, I have no personal objection, and they have no personal objection, to this proceeding. I stand just as others do merely on the parliamentary propriety of the thing, of which the Senate will judge.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am so desirous not to seem to object to this report in any way, as my only object is not to adopt a bad precedent, that I will, if it meets the views of the Senator from Maryland, offer the following resolution in connection with the report:

Resolved, That the paper presented by the Senator from Maryland be received as the views of the members of the joint committee of fifteen who have signed the same; but in receiving said paper subsequent to the time when the majority report was received the Senate does not mean to sanction the right to present said paper at this time, nor to establish a precedent for its future action.

That would relieve us of any embarrassment hereafter, and would at the same time allow the paper to be now received under the circumstances of the case.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not the slightest objection to that, and I think the principle is all right. I recognize at once the force of the suggestion made to me.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suggest this as relieving the Senate of any embarrassment about it, if it meets the views of other Senators. I have no desire to suppress the minority report.

Mr. JOHNSON. It meets my views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do I understand the paper now as ordered to be printed as well as received?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no order on that subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Now I offer the motion which I submitted before, that the same number of copies of that document be printed as of the majority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion under the rules will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HENDRICKS. So I understand.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the reorganization of the civil service, and also a bill (S. No. 315) to regulate appointments to and removals from office, have instructed me to report back the bill with an amendment by way of substitute.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the same committee, to whom were referred various petitions from citizens of West Virginia, praying for the establishment of a court at Parkersburg in that State, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of dividing that State into judicial districts and creating the western district of Wisconsin, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom were referred sundry petitions of citizens of Alexandria county, Virginia, praying for the annexation of that county to the District of Columbia, have instructed me to report them back and to ask that they lie on the table, that subject being under consideration in the Senate at this time.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom were referred various petitions praying that means be devised which shall secure to every child born in the United States a competent education without regard to locality, color, sex, or condition, have instructed me to report them back with a statement that while the committee would be very desirous to pass a law that would accomplish that object, we see no practical means of doing more at this time than is already being done by the Government. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions.

The committee was discharged.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom were referred resolutions of the Legislatures of Nevada and Iowa, asking for the speedy trial of Jefferson Davis, petitions for the expulsion of GARRET DAVIS from the Senate, memorials from Sons of Temperance and Good Templars, praying for the enactment of a law dismissing from the public service officers who become intoxicated, a petition from citizens of Florida asking to be relieved from the payment of certain notes, and petitions of sundry citizens praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, have instructed me to report them back and to ask to be discharged from their further consideration.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 62) directing a district court to be held at the city of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 2) to preserve the right of trial by jury by securing impartial jurors in the courts of the United States, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

The report was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 362) to change the times for holding the courts of the United States for the eastern district of Texas, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

The report was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 488) in relation to the courts of Washington Territory, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 50) to amend the fifth section of an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, so as to extend the time within which the provisions of said act shall be accepted and such colleges established, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 363) declaratory of the act approved March 3, 1863, being "An act to amend an act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States, approved February 24, 1865," reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the memorial of Fiske & Dale, Josiah Towle, and Morse & Co., praying to be relieved from the payment of the additional duty of fifty per cent. imposed by joint resolution of April 29, 1864, on goods in bonded warehouses, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 123) in relation the settlement of the accounts of William P. Wingate, collector at the port of Bangor, Maine; which was read and passed to a second reading.

CLAIMS AGAINST NEVADA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back a joint resolution (S. R. No. 84) authorizing the payment of certain claims against the late Territory of Nevada, with amendments. As this is a matter of not very much moment, and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Nye] is very anxious to have the resolution passed, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to have it acted upon now.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay outstanding claims chargeable to the contingent expenses of the executive department of the Territory of Nevada it proposes to transfer so much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation "for compensation and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Nevada" as may be found necessary for that purpose, to the credit of the fund for paying the contingent expenses of the executive department of that Territory, and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, out of the balance so transferred, are to pay "the said claims as adjusted and allowed."

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the resolution by inserting between the words "claims" and "chargeable," in line four, the words "duly examined and allowed, and properly."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was before the word

"claims," in the last line of the resolution, to strike out the word "said," and after the word "claims" to strike out "as;" so as to read, "pay the claims adjusted and allowed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 412) authorizing and directing the sale of the property of the United States at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WILLEY. Some days since the Secretary of War sent in a report, in compliance with a previous resolution of the Senate, in relation to the condition of the public works at Harper's Ferry. I move that that report, with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 124) for the protection of citizens of the United States in the matter of public loans of the republic of Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. No. 222) farther to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes.

MILITARY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I move to postpone all prior orders and take up for consideration Senate bill No. 401.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 401) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States was taken up for consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill at length.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts is not anxious to proceed with the further consideration of that bill to-day, and I move, therefore, that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. GRIMES. Why sit here?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us go on with the bill we had up yesterday and finish that.

Mr. GRIMES. There is hardly a quorum of the Senate here. I do not think there is a quorum in the building. It is Saturday afternoon and the weather is intensely hot.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know it is; but we might as well go on with the bill we had up yesterday and finish it.

Mr. GRIMES. Several Senators are already sick, and there are several more hardly able to sit here, myself among the number.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We had commenced voting on that bill yesterday, and I think we can soon finish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is not debatable; the motion is to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 7, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I wish, with the permission of the House, to state on behalf of the Military Committee the present condition of the bill to reorganize the Army; and also to make a proposition to the House which perhaps will solve the difficulty in which we are situated. I had an interview the other day, upon invitation, with the Secretary of War and Lieutenant General Grant; and I learned from them, and particularly from the Lieutenant General, what I also well understand, the pressing necessity just now of having some action in relation to the reorganization or increase of the Army, with the view of supplying a need for troops. The enlistments have already gone up to the utmost capacity of the present Army, and there are not troops enough for the purposes of the Government. All the white volunteer troops have been mustered out, or have been ordered to be mustered out, and will soon be altogether gone from the service; and there are not now many of the black troops remaining.

The condition of the legislative question on the subject is this. The Senate passed a bill and sent it to the House. A bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, and pending in the House at the same time, was rejected, recommitted, and again reported back to the House, passed by the House, and was sent to the Senate. So there is a bill of the House now in the Senate, and a bill of the Senate now in the House. In the mean time, as we learn by our files, there have been several successive bills brought forward in the Senate, and I believe the other day, and since the bill of the House was passed and sent to the Senate, the fifth bill was produced by the chairman of the Military Committee in that branch. From this I infer an indisposition on the part of the Military Committee of the Senate to take up and pass any bill which is a House bill. It seems to me to be preferred that whatever bill is passed shall be a bill of the Senate. This may be because it is desired to have the credit of the origination of the bill, or it may be something else. I know not what it is, and it is of no consequence in one sense; for I am ready to say, in behalf of the Military Committee of the House, that we do not care where the bill originates, whether in the Senate or in the House, so that it only contains, as its substance, that which has our approval, and which is sanctioned by the action of the House.

There is a means of bringing this matter speedily to some sort of conclusion. I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House to make a proposition to the House; and that proposition is, to ask permission to report back now the Senate bill, to move as a substitute for it the bill which has been framed by the House, call the previous question, and pass the bill and send it to the Senate. Then they will have two bills before them, one a Senate bill amended by the House, and the other a House bill, and each embodying what the House has agreed to after a long discussion. I now ask permission to report the bill of the Senate back to the House, move the House bill as a substitute for it, move the previous question upon it at once, pass it, and send it back to the Senate. The effect would be this, as a matter of course: each House acting upon one or the other bill, no matter which so it be the same bill in each branch, whatever may be the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, would be brought to a committee of conference, and so the matter definitely disposed of.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent for such a purpose.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

REIMBURSEMENT TO NEBRASKA TERRITORY.

Mr. KASSON reported from the Committee on Appropriations a bill authorizing the reimbursement to the Territory of Nebraska of certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KASSON moved that the bill be made a special order for Wednesday of next week after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

BUST OF PULASKI.

Mr. KASSON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Henry K. Kalusowski, asking that an appropriation be made for the purchase of a bust of Pulaski, executed by the late Henry D. Saunders, of Philadelphia, and that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

DISCOVERY OF PETROLEUM.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am directed to move that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of citizens of Venango county, Pennsylvania, asking an appropriation for the discovery of petroleum, &c., and that the same be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. ELIOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate (No. 222) entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to the first amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill; that it agree to the second amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill; that it agree to the third amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill; that it agree to the fourth amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill; that the Senate agree to the fifth amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, with an amendment as follows: "in all cases where the possession of such goods shall be shown to be in the defendant, where the defendant shall be shown to have had possession thereof, such possession shall be deemed evidence sufficient to authorize conviction, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury." That the Senate agree to the sixth amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill; and that the Senate agree to the seventh amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill.

Z. CHANDLER,
JOHN CONNESS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THOMAS D. ELIOT,
JOHN L. THOMAS, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. McRUER. I call for the regular order.

LAND TITLES IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and the House resumes the consideration of the first business of the morning hour, the bill (S. No. 443) entitled "An act to quiet land titles in California."

Mr. McRUER. I desire to consume as little time as possible in the discussion of this bill, and I therefore wish to make this proposition to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands; that on our side of this question not more than twenty minutes shall be occupied, provided the gentleman will consent that the vote shall be taken upon the amendment and the bill before the morning hour expires.

Mr. JULIAN. It is impossible for me to determine what I may deem it necessary to say until I hear the arguments on the other side. I am willing to give the pledge that I will make my remarks as brief as I can consistently with what I believe to be my duty. I am not willing absolutely to say now that I will be restricted to twenty minutes.

Mr. McRUER. We are willing to confine ourselves to twenty minutes and give the gentleman the remaining forty minutes of the morning hour, provided he will consent that the question shall be disposed of to-day.

Mr. JULIAN. I think that I can make all the remarks I have to make in less than forty minutes, so that we may take the vote before the conclusion of the morning hour.

Mr. McRUER. I understand the gentleman, then, to pledge that so far as he is concerned, the vote may be taken to-day; and although I would like to discuss this question at length, still, in deference to the wishes of the House, I propose to make my remarks very brief, so that the question may be disposed of this morning. I now yield to my colleague [Mr. BIDWELL] for five minutes.

Mr. BIDWELL. The question to be decided by the House to-day is one of so much, I might say of so momentous importance to the State of California, that it will be impossible for me more than barely to make an outline of what I ought to say in the time allowed me in justice to the magnitude of the questions involved in the issue. The State of California was entitled under certain acts of Congress to grants of land; no more, however, than other new States. But the condition under which those grants were made required that the lands should be surveyed and brought into market before the selections could be made by the States. But up to the present time the lands never have been surveyed by the United States and brought into market in advance of the settlement, so that it has been absolutely impossible for the State of California to make those selections unless she made them upon unsurveyed lands. Anxious to create a school fund with which to educate the youths of that State she went on, relying on the justice of the Government, and made selections of lands. We ask in this bill nothing more and nothing less than that the Government of the United States shall recognize those selections of land so far only as they do not conflict with any preemption right, or any homestead or other just and valid right.

That is all there is in the bill, and it would be perfectly satisfactory, and we would be ready now, without uttering another word, to take a vote upon the bill were it not for the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to attach to it an amendment which reopens the old Spanish claim which has been settled and adjusted, and that, too, in accordance with the principles of right and justice, as I believe, as our delegation believe, and as every honorable man in the State of California knowing the circumstances and merits of the case believes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word in reference to what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] said the other day in regard to settlers upon that particular tract of land which he desires to provide for in the proposed amendment. The question will arise as to whether those persons are settlers according to the meaning of the preemption laws of the United States. The register and receiver of the State of California investigated the questions and reported that they were not such settlers. That did not satisfy the Land Office, and another register and another receiver were ordered to proceed and investigate the questions. After eight months of patient and deliberate investigation, filling seventeen volumes of eight hundred pages each of testimony taken upon the question, the decision was that the persons who settled upon that grant were not in any sense of the word within the meaning of the laws.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. McRUER. Mr. Speaker, in the very limited time which I propose to occupy upon this subject it is not possible for me to go into the various questions touching upon this matter. This Vallejo grant was made in 1843. It was occupied and cultivated from that time up to 1862 without the title being questioned and without any trespassers going upon it. It was a title that in California was unquestioned. In 1852 or 1853 that claim was presented to the board of land commissioners and confirmed by them as a good and valid title. An appeal was taken by the Government to the United States district court, and they confirmed the decision of the commissioners. Whereupon it was bought and sold, mortgaged and bequeathed, and no man in California doubted that it was as firm and as valid as any title by Spanish grant within the limits of the State.

About the year 1855 it went out of the hands of the original grantees. It was purchased by an innumerable number of people. Most of the city of Benicia was built upon the grant. The United States purchased Mare Island of this Vallejo grant.

Mr. BIDWELL. No.

Mr. McRUER. My colleague says I am mistaken.

Mr. HIGBY. The Government purchased from the Vallejo title the part on which the arsenal and armory are situated.

Mr. BIDWELL. That is so.

Mr. McRUER. The Government bought a portion of the land from that title. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company, employing the best counsel in the State, purchased a portion of that grant upon which to build their ships. The town of Vallejo was built upon this grant. And but a few weeks since Congress as an act of justice to the city of Benicia gave it the United States title to the land upon which that city is founded by virtue of the purchase of the Vallejo title, paying therefor a valuable consideration. The title was considered as valid as the title to any land within the limits of that State. But nine years after the decision of the district court, under an appeal to the Supreme Court, to the surprise and to the regret of the citizens of California, it was rejected upon what I declare to be technical grounds.

It has never been questioned that the Mexican Government would have recognized this title; that they would never have attempted to take possession of this property sold for a valuable consideration. Immediately on the rejection of the title by the Supreme Court, when this land was all cultivated, inclosed, upon which were towns, orchards planted; immediately on the receipt of that news a class of men, not legitimately agriculturists, not preëmptors, thinking this would be a favorable opportunity to filch from their neighbors the fruits of their labor and the rewards of their toil, went on the land and located claims for one hundred and sixty acres. I wish to call the attention of the House to a short report made by the register and receiver of public lands. I ask the Clerk to read extracts from it.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The trial of these cases has occupied the register and receiver constantly every working day, as well as evenings, for near eight months, during which time between two and three thousand witnesses have been sworn and examined, and their testimony reduced to writing; and between four and five thousand deeds, documents, affidavits, and the like, introduced and examined."

A general report of the facts established by said evidence is briefly as follows: when the United States Government took possession of California, Don Mariana Guadalupe Vallejo was in the occupancy of the ranch of Soscol, claiming to own it by virtue of the grant from the Mexican nation, which has recently (December term, 1861,) been declared invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States. His occupancy was the usual one of the country, and in accordance with the primitive habits of the people. He possessed the land by herding stock upon it. General Vallejo, as military commandante of his district, consisting of all Alta California lying north of the bay of San Francisco, was necessarily the leading personage of the country. His influence among the rude inhabitants of the territory was almost monarchical, and his establishment was in accordance with his influence. His residence at Sonoma was the capital of his commandancy, and the people of the country for hundreds of miles around looked to General Vallejo for advice and assistance in business, and for protection and defense in time of trouble. These things are part of the history of California."

"We have, therefore, to report that the possession that General Vallejo had of 'Soscol,' in 1846, was the usual use and possession of the time and the country, and that it was the best and most perfect use and occupation of which the land was capable."

"The ranch was therefore reduced to possession by General Vallejo before the Americans took possession of the country."

"Soon after the American occupation or conquest, General Vallejo began to sell off portions of the 'Soscol,' and continued this practice until about the year 1855, at which time he sold the last of it, and does not appear to have had or claimed any interest since."

"This sale and consequent dividing the land into smaller parcels produced its usual effect in the way of improvements."

"From 1855 to 1860 the 'ranch of Soscol' was almost entirely reduced to absolute and actual possession and control by his vendees, being by them fenced up into fields, surrounded by substantial inclosures, and improved with expensive farm-houses, out-buildings, orchards, and the like, and was cultivated to grain wherever suitable for that purpose."

"It had upon it two cities of considerable importance, namely, Benicia and Vallejo, each of which had been at one time the capital of the State of California."

"No rural district of California was more highly improved than this, and but a very small portion equal to it."

"The title to 'Soscol,' before its rejection by the United States Supreme Court, was considered the very best in California. All the really valuable agricultural land in California was held under Mexican grants, and as a consequence, all had to pass the ordeal of the land commission."

"From 1853 to about 1860 very few had been finally passed upon by the courts, so that during that time the question for the farmer to decide was not what title is perfect, but what title is most likely to prove so by the final judgment of the Supreme Court."

"Among the very best, in the opinion of the public, stood 'Soscol.'"

"One conclusive, unanswerable proof of that fact is this: that there was not a single settler on the grant at the time it was rejected. Not one person on it except in subordination to the Vallejo title. Every resident on the whole tract held his land by purchase from Vallejo, or his assigns, and held just precisely the land so purchased and not one acre more or less. This fact was not even disputed during the whole eight months of investigation through which we have just passed. It is a notorious fact that of the grants in California which have stood the test of the Supreme Court, very many have been entirely in the possession of squatters, and all with more or less of such possessions, and the final patent has alone succeeded in recovering the long-lost possession to the grant holder. There were no settlers on the 'Soscol.' The people had the most perfect confidence in the title. It had been twice confirmed by tribunals of high authority and great learning—first by the United States land commissioners, and then by the District Court of the United States."

"The sales of lands upon the 'Soscol' were made at prices which called for perfect title; they brought the full improved value of the land. Money was lent on mortgage in the same way."

"Thus stood matters until early in the year 1862, when the intelligence reached California that the grant had been rejected by the Supreme Court. The struggle soon began. There was at the time employed upon the United States navy-yard at Mare Island, and also upon the Pacific Mail Company's works at Benicia, a large number of mechanics and laborers. There was also in the towns of Benicia and Vallejo a large floating population. Tempted by the great value of these lands in their highly improved state, many of these persons squatted upon the ranch."

"The land-holders in possession resisted."

"The houses of the great majority of the settlers were erected in the night time, as it was necessary to enter the inclosed fields by stealth. These houses were built of rough red-wood boards set up edgewise, with shed roof and without window, fire-place, or floor."

"They were about eight feet square, sometimes eight by ten feet, and never over six feet high."

"We have no hesitation in saying that they were utterly unfit for the habitation of human beings, and further, that they were never designed for permanent residences. The mode of erecting these shanties was as follows: the planks were sawed the right length in the town of Vallejo or Benicia in the afternoon of the day, and at nightfall were loaded upon a cart. About eleven o'clock at night the team would start for the intended settlement, reaching there about one or two o'clock in the morning. Between that hour and daylight the house would be erected and finished. Sometimes the house would be put together with nails, but when too near the residence of the land-holder in possession, screws would be used to prevent the sound of the hammer attracting attention. Very few of this class of settlers remained upon their claims above a few days, but soon returned to their ordinary occupations in the towns."

"Generally after they would leave the land-holders would remove the shanty from the ground. In some cases they would pull them down with force immediately upon discovering them, and in the presence of the settlers."

"A few of them got settlements near enough to their places of employment to enable them to work in town or at the navy-yard, and to sleep in their shanties—some regularly, others only occasionally. These generally remained longer than the others, but none of this class have remained up to the time of the trial."

"None of the settlers who went on since the grant was rejected have attempted regular improvements or cultivation. A few have harvested the grain planted by the land-holders; as it grew on their quarter they would harvest it, and offer this as evidence of good faith and cultivation."

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing, from the evidence, that these are not settlers within the spirit of the preemption laws, but are mere speculators, desirous of getting the improvements of another to sell and to make money."

"There are on the Soscol a few persons who claim preemption rights, but who occupy a different position from the above. They are persons who, before the rejection of the grant, purchased small parcels of land under Vallejo, of quantity less than one hundred and sixty acres, say from ten up to seventy or eighty acres. This class of persons, with some exceptions, desired to extend their boundaries so as to include one hundred and sixty acres, the amount allowed by the general preemption laws of the United States. This they could only do by taking in the land of their continuous neighbors, who had bought and were holding under the same title with themselves. Those who would lose by this encroachment strenuously objected, and contests and conflicts were the speedy result."

Mr. McRUER. I will consume but a very few moments further. I want to say to this House that it is impossible each individual member will acquaint himself with all the circumstances of this case so as to form a solemn and just opinion. I say it is inevitable that such full information should be confined to the California delegation. Now, this class of vandals, who call themselves settlers, can find no friendly voice to speak in their behalf in the California delegation; and not only this delegation, but the same was the case in the last Congress and in the preceding Congress. They could not find a single voice coming from California representing the people in the various sections to speak in behalf of this class of men. The united voice of the whole delegation is against these men.

Mr. HALE. Allow me to ask a question. As the gentleman has remarked very properly, a large proportion of the members of this House are unable to examine this matter personally. As he has referred to the position of the California delegation, I ask for my own benefit, as well as for that of other members of the House, whether this involves any other than a construction of California law and California grants.

Mr. McRUER. It is nothing else. In regard to this case, it is put into this bill which we have prepared to quiet land titles as a rider. It has nothing to do with this matter. I ask the Clerk to read the paper I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned, of the Committee on Public Lands, beg leave to report that in their opinion the amendment proposed touching the question of the rights of settlers upon the Socol ranch should not be attached to this bill to quiet land titles; but, as it involves questions of a judicial character, should be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

D. C. McRUER,
A. J. GLOSSBRENNER, STEPHEN TABER,
J. P. DRIGGS,
E. R. ECKLEY,
GEORGE W. ANDERSON.

Mr. McRUER. That is a majority of the committee. They say this should not be attached to this bill. Though I feel I have presented the case imperfectly I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] having reported the bill, is entitled to one hour to close the debate.

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, I have been, I confess, a little astonished at the closing statements of the gentleman from California as to what he alleges to have occurred in the Committee on Public Lands of this House. I do not know by what authority he comes here and reveals what occurred in that committee without the license of the committee.

Mr. McRUER. I have not alluded to anything that occurred in the committee.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman denies that he has alluded to anything that occurred in the Committee on Public Lands. He knows that the paper he has had read was presented in the committee, and he has therefore made revelations here unwarranted by parliamentary usage. Now, let me state, since he has broached the subject, some further facts. A majority of the committee voted to adopt the amendment which we have reported to this bill. The gentleman from California [Mr. McRUER] moved afterward to reconsider the vote for the purpose of striking out that amendment. The committee deliberately voted him down. A second time, and at a subsequent meeting of the committee, he renewed his motion to strike out the amendment from the bill, and the committee a second time refused to strike it out; and a private paper which some gentlemen on the committee have signed, under the persistent importunities of the gentleman from California, ought not to have been introduced here, and does no credit to the gentleman who exposes the facts, and could not have been desired by my colleagues on the committee. But what I state is, that the committee deliberately adopted this amendment and deliberately refused, on two occasions, to strike out the amendment from the bill as reported.

Mr. BIDWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman whether what he calls the committee did not consist of five members, three voting in the affirmative and two in the negative, and whether he did not refuse, at the request of six members out of the nine, to entertain a motion to reconsider and omit the amendment.

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer the gentleman. When this amendment was first adopted in the Committee on Public Lands I was not present, being necessarily absent on business. How many members were present I do not know. And in answer to the second part of the gentleman's question I will state that, as chairman of the committee, I never refused to entertain a motion, when made in order by any member, to reconsider the adoption of that amendment, but I put the vote twice and the committee refused to take that action.

Mr. McRUER. I would ask the chairman of the committee if he did not refuse to entertain a motion to reconsider the amendment after I had shown him this paper signed by six members of the committee.

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer that question. I had entertained a motion to reconsider and strike out this amendment twice, as already stated, and the committee had twice voted down the motion. I refused any longer to put an unparliamentary motion, and the gentleman knows that when he made his motion it was not in order. There must be some limit to motions to reconsider, or no business can ever be completed. I hope the gentleman is answered.

Mr. HIGBY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that what is stated upon that paper signed by six members of the committee did not transpire in the committee?

Mr. JULIAN. I have said nothing about it further than already stated in reply to the gentleman from California, [Mr. McRUER.]

Mr. HIGBY. Well, is it a fact? My colleague [Mr. McRUER] asserted that he had said nothing of what was done in the committee. The chairman of the committee, in reply, told him that he knew it took place in the committee.

Mr. JULIAN. I reiterate what I have already stated. He does know that the paper in question was presented in committee.

Mr. HIGBY. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman's colleague will not deny it.

Mr. HIGBY. Then that was the action of the committee.

Mr. JULIAN. The paper was presented in the committee, and that statement of what occurred there comes here in violation of parliamentary usage through the gentleman's colleague. I give the gentleman the benefit of the revelation in connection with what I have said of the refusal of the committee to reconsider its action, as I have properly reported it to this House.

Mr. HIGBY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman desires a vote on the amendment, but if he consumes all my time by asking questions I shall have to extend my time.

Mr. HIGBY. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] say that what was done in committee cannot be brought before the House?

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman understands what I say, that the particular facts transpiring in committee are not proper to be stated to the House. But the gentleman is welcome to all the information he has obtained through the methods employed by his colleague.

The gentleman from California [Mr. McRUER] says that this matter has been agreed upon by the California delegation. And in answer to the question of my friend from New York, [Mr. HALE,] whether this measure concerned anybody but the California delegation and the people of California, he expressly replied that it did not. Now, I have something to say on that point, and it will be to reiterate some facts which I presented here more at length the other day.

In the year 1862, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, this Vallejo Spanish grant was pronounced void, and from that time this ranch of ninety thousand acres became public unappropriated lands of the Government. After that decision scores of preëmptors, as they had a right to do, went upon this public land, built their cabins, made their fences, and asserted their rights under the law.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman for my own information.

Mr. JULIAN. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to inquire whether these persons of whom he now speaks as preëmptors were not purchasers under the grantees of the Mexican Government.

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer the gentleman. The persons I speak of were not generally grantees under the Vallejo title. Some of the Vallejo claimants accepted the terms of the preemption law and acquired rights under it. But the preëmptors generally, of whom I now speak, claimed under the preemption laws of the United States, irrespective of any title under the Vallejo grant. They entered upon those lands as preëmptors, and upon the conflict which arose between them and the Vallejo claimants an appeal was made to Congress to pass a law allowing the Vallejo claimants to purchase the land at $1 25 an acre, to the extent to which they had reduced their lands to possession. That law was passed, procured, as I proved the other day, by false and fraudulent representations of the facts; statements from California speculators who came here and represented that these Vallejo claimants were some three or four thousand small land-holders who had built their fences, erected their houses, and planted their orchards, and desired only to purchase their little possessions at the rate of $1 25 an acre. I proved here the other day that so far from that being true, one of these "small land-holders" owned twenty-seven hundred acres, and resided in South America, never having lived upon the land. I proved here from the records of the Land Office that another of these "small" claimants owned five thousand acres. I showed from the records of the department that seven only of the claimants under the Vallejo title, who were also non-residents of the soil, claimed about fifteen thousand acres of land. Certainly these men, who never resided upon the land, and instead of being "small holders" were large land-owners, had no rights as "settlers" and preëmptors under the law of 1863.

Mr. DAVIS. I would ask the gentleman whether the persons who did not reside on this land were not the grantees under the Vallejo title.

Mr. JULIAN. I have already stated that they were all grantees under the Vallejo title. And I also stated that the law of Congress which they procured to be passed here was passed upon the false and fraudulent representation that they were all small holders and occupants of the soil, claiming simply the right to preëmpt and purchase their small possessions to the extent to which they had reduced them to actual possession.

Mr. BIDWELL. I would ask the gentleman, who made the representation that there were three or four thousand small land-holders.

Mr. JULIAN. That statement was made to the Senate and House Committee on Public Lands. I believe the friend of the gentleman, General Frisbie, was one of those who made it.

Mr. BIDWELL. There is no such thing in the report.

Mr. JULIAN. Well, I will read from the report:

"The Socol ranch is settled upon and occupied by an enterprising body of agriculturists, men who have spent their means liberally in making improvements, claiming their lands under the Socol grant of M. G. Vallejo. In 1847 the town of Benicia was laid out, its projectors and settlers relying on the Vallejo title. It has grown to be a town of several thousand inhabitants, and is among the more important of the interior villages of California. The town of Vallejo is upon the same ranch, was laid out in 1850, and is also of considerable importance, the lands therein being held under the same title. The entire ranch has passed out of the hands of the original grantees into the possession of a multitude of small holders and is covered by numerous small farms and orchards, each inclosed by substantial fences, highly cultivated, and dotted all over with comfortable farm-houses and other buildings."

In the latter part of the report, as the gentleman will see, it is stated that there are three thousand of these "settlers," besides several thousand more. Yet the evidence was produced here by me the other day showing that one hundred and fifty-seven persons, all told, proved up their claims under the act of 1863, seven of them owning fifteen thousand acres and being non-residents of the soil, and ten others owning some thirteen thousand and some hundred acres in large tracts, and which they never reduced to possession as settlers. Mr. Speaker, I submit to the gentleman that if he had read the report, he would not have questioned the statement which I made.

Mr. BIDWELL. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. JULIAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BIDWELL. I desire to say that on this grant there were two cities, the corporate limits of one of them embracing thirty-five hundred acres. Within those limits were small land-holders owning from five to twenty and some fifty acres. But the city limits were entirely excluded from the act of 1863; so that the settlers, the cultivators of the soil mentioned as numbering one hundred and fifty-seven, were entirely outside of the city limits. When the report was made, it embraced all the population, amounting to perhaps six or seven thousand persons, the families and employés of the land-holders swelling the number very considerably. There was a numerous body engaged in the cultivation of the soil under those who held under the Vallejo title.

Mr. JULIAN. I can only say that the gentleman is again mistaken. The report shows that the committee making it believed the story told them that there were three thousand settlers, beside several thousand more outside of any town and on the ranch proper. They refer to these small holders as the reason for passing the act, which excludes the towns. He knows, and I need not tell him and this House again, that that law was procured by false representations, well calculated to mislead the committee and Congress, as it did, into its enactment, which Congress would not for a moment have thought of doing if it had been known that so large a portion of the tract was claimed by fifteen or twenty speculators, a considerable portion of whom did not reside upon the soil, and some of them residents of a foreign country.

Mr. BIDWELL. How can the gentleman reduce one hundred and fifty-seven land-holders to fifteen or twenty?

Mr. JULIAN. I spoke of the fact that a large portion of this land was held by some seventeen land-holders; and instead of three or four thousand persons proving up under the act of 1863, there were only one hundred and fifty-seven.

Mr. BIDWELL. The records show that twenty of the largest land-holders owned some twenty-seven thousand acres.

Mr. JULIAN. Does the gentleman argue that those twenty-seven thousand acres, more than half of it belonging to non-residents—

Mr. BIDWELL. No, sir.

Mr. JULIAN. Does the gentleman argue that that was the land properly understood by the committee as occupied by "a multitude of small holders," who had built their houses, planted their orchards, and reduced their claims to possession?

Mr. BIDWELL. I cannot see how the committee so understood it if it read the memorial and papers. Here is the paper presented to that committee; and from that they could have come to no such conclusion. In justice they could not have passed any law different from what they did.

Mr. JULIAN. That is the opinion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. BIDWELL. I have known this land intimately for twenty-four years.

Mr. JULIAN. He says he has known this land intimately and well. The Land Office having heard the testimony, filing some seventeen large volumes, and decided this case, decided that these Vallejo claimants had no such rights as they set up, and affirmed the rights of the preëmptors which are now sought to be overthrown here.

Mr. BIDWELL. The Secretary has overruled that decision.

Mr. JULIAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Secretary of the Interior has never overruled that decision. I know to the contrary. He did, however, grant an appeal to the Attorney General, and the Attorney General, in his argument, confesses, as I have shown, what the gentleman denies. He admits by his opinion, which is a sort of plea in confession and avoidance, that these men were bona fide preëmptors. But he affirms as law that preëmptors have no rights under the preëmption laws until the completion of their payments.

Mr. UPSON. Was not the opinion of the Attorney General drawn out by reference of the legal questions to him by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. JULIAN. I have said the Secretary of the Interior granted an appeal, giving no opinion of his own. The opinion of the Attorney General, no lawyer on this floor or elsewhere who is not the stipendiary of speculators will say is the law. It is a burlesque upon the legal profession and I say this without the fear of contradiction.

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman will allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. JULIAN. Certainly.

Mr. HIGBY. If that be a mere burlesque of the law, does the gentleman think the courts would pay any attention to it at all in the decision of these cases?

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer the gentleman with great pleasure, and am glad he has called my attention to that point. I think no respectable court would decide as the Attorney General has decided; but the Secretary of the Interior, as head of the land department of the Government, has declared that he will accept the decision of the Attorney General as the rule of his action in regard to the public lands of the country, thus reversing the cases already decided in the Land Office in favor of the preëmptors and virtually ousting the remainder. Hence it is that we have reported this amendment to this bill, quieting titles in California, declaring in effect that the act of 1863 shall not be construed in consonance with the opinion of the Attorney General, and thus saving these people from litigation and strife by leaving them peaceably in their possessions.

Mr. HIGBY. Allow me another question.

Mr. JULIAN. Certainly.

Mr. HIGBY. If the Secretary of the Interior says he is to be controlled by the opinion of the Attorney General, are the parties interested bound by it? Is it conclusive on them one way or the other? Cannot these parties go into the courts just as well?

Mr. JULIAN. Undoubtedly these poor preëmptors, who have no money to spend in tedious litigation, can litigate the question in the courts of California, which have decided against the laws of the United States in more cases than one, as the gentleman knows. It is to save the preëmptors this litigation and hazard that the proposed amendment to the bill has been reported and is now so earnestly urged. We desire to guard their rights by resisting this attempt to unsettle them through a policy which would assail the rights of preëmptors everywhere.

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman alludes to the report of the committee of 1863. I ask what part he alludes to.

Mr. JULIAN. I allude to what has been read here to-day from the Committee on Public Lands.

The Attorney General admits, I repeat, that these were preëmptors under the laws of the United States. The question of fact is no longer in dispute; the question is solely one of law, and the Attorney General having decided against the preëmptors and against the uniform decisions of the courts, I submit that in a bill quieting land titles we should not reject an amendment that shall reassert the settled policy of the country against this revolutionary interference with vested rights now peaceably enjoyed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in whom I have as much confidence as in the Attorney General, has sent to the committee any communication touching this matter.

Mr. JULIAN. We have the rules under which he decided the case of these preëmptors, which I had read the other day. I have also in my drawer a legal opinion of his in favor of the rights of preëmptors which I would be glad to have read to the House if my time would permit.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether the preëmptors who are to be protected by the amendment of the committee still remain on the lands and in the occupation of their preëmption claims.

Mr. JULIAN. That is so. A large number at least are in the actual occupancy of this land, claiming it to-day as preëmptors.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I would inquire whether, if this bill passes without the amendment, under the decision of the Attorney General these men claiming preëmption rights will be ousted.

Mr. JULIAN. Undoubtedly; they anticipate being ousted and will be under the ruling of the department; and it is to guard against that danger that they are so earnestly seeking the adoption of this amendment, which will protect the rights which the land department decides belong to them, and in accordance with the uniform ruling of our courts as to the rights of preëmption claimants.

Mr. BIDWELL. The proposed amendment says, "shall not be so construed as to interfere with the claims of bona fide settlers on the said land." I ask the gentleman if it will not be necessary to institute proceedings in order to determine who are and who are not bona fide settlers, and whether the register and receiver for eight long months have not been taking testimony, and have not made a report deciding that all these persons are not bona fide settlers within the meaning of the preëmption laws of the United States.

Mr. JULIAN. What register and receiver do you refer to?

Mr. BIDWELL. The present register and receiver of the land office in California.

Mr. JULIAN. Does the gentleman pretend that the decision of the register and receiver of the land office in California is paramount to the ruling of the land department in Washington?

Mr. BIDWELL. Not paramount; but they have investigated this case fairly for eight long months, and have made a report that they are not settlers within the meaning of the preëmption and homestead laws of the United States, and in addition that they are a very lawless and bad class of men.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman asks me, if this amendment is rejected whether these settlers will not still have the right to—

Mr. BIDWELL. I did not ask that. My question was whether it would not be necessary to institute investigations to ascertain who were bona fide settlers in case this amendment should pass.

Mr. JULIAN. In answer to that I can state that I have no doubt at all about the mode of settling the difficulty if the opinion of the Attorney General is accepted as law, and I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a specimen of the manner in which land speculators treat preëmtors on the Soscol ranch in California. It is taken from the Land Office, and I believe is uncontradicted from any quarter.

Mr. HIGBY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. JULIAN. After this is read I will yield, or now if the gentleman presses it.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the chairman of the committee if he has not obtained ex parte testimony in this case from the Land Office without giving the contestants of this claim any notice whatever of what he was going to produce here.

Mr. JULIAN. I have produced testimony from the records of the Land Office which I understand is uncontradicted by any other testimony, and which the gentlemen have had all the means that they desire to contradict if they had seen fit. I wish to state to the gentleman that we shall not settle this question this morning if I am interrupted further.

Mr. HIGBY. I cannot help it.

Mr. JULIAN. Very well, then; I will yield to questions.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the gentleman if he did not on Monday last, when the bill was to come up on Tuesday, send a letter to the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of the Land Office asking answers to some thirty-eight questions which he put; and whether he did not receive a letter from the Commissioner stating certain things in reference to what he has produced on this subject; and whether he gave any notice that he was going to produce this testimony before the House.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman asks his question with a good deal of emphasis and an air of significance, as if there was going to be some decided development. But after all I fail to see the point. I did write a letter to the Commissioner of the Land Office asking what the records showed as to certain facts, and I got some answer, from which I selected such facts as bore upon the controversy. I did not suppose this was a case in which I was bound to serve a notice on the gentleman, or that I was bound to do so, as if this were a suit in court. The records were as open to him as to me, and I have no apology to make, certainly, for having consulted them and used the facts I obtained.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. JULIAN. I cannot yield. I can never say what I have to say upon this subject under these interruptions. I ask the Clerk to read now what I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

A Statement of Mrs. Hanson.

On the 25th of November, 1862, we went and settled on the Soscol ranch; we erected a dwelling-house, and lived in it until the 13th day of December; on the afternoon of that day a large body of armed men, about two hundred in number, surrounded my house, when John M. Neville came to my door and demanded possession of my premises; I asked him by what authority; he answered me by the authority of the land-holders; I was then seized by three armed men and violently thrown upon a chest and searched in the most rude and indecent manner; I was then handcuffed and put out. Two of my small children, from fright, went into spasms; I implored Mr. Frisbie and Mr. Neville, in the name of mercy, to remove the handcuffs and let me have my children, when a man told me that if I did not keep quiet he would gag me; the men were all mounted and armed with shot-guns and revolvers; my furniture was then destroyed, my house was torn down and hauled away; I was forcibly removed from the premises and placed with my children on the highway; my clothes were torn from me; I was compelled to dress myself in the open field, in the presence of the armed men; I have never been served with any writs, and am satisfied that no suit has ever been commenced against us; Captain Frisbie and his brothers were present and were cognizant of everything that transpired; I am a married woman and have three children living; my husband, Peter Hanson, is at present, and has been for many years, employed in the navy-yard at this place; he was not present at the time of this occurrence; I was so verely injured that I was confined to my bed for more than six weeks, and have not yet recovered from the injuries sustained; I was greatly abused by being kicked.

ANNE X HANSON.
mark.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, this 8th day of June, A. D. 1863.
CHARLES W. RILEY,
Justice of the Peace, Vallejo, Solano county.

Mr. JULIAN. That is a specimen of the manner in which California deals with preëmtors on the Soscol ranch and with parties whose cases have been solemnly decided by the land department, and in accordance with the laws of the United States giving the right of preëmption.

Mr. BIDWELL. This was all done under sheriff's process.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman says it was all done under sheriff's process. I think he is mistaken.

Mr. HIGBY. It was.

Mr. JULIAN. No, sir; it was done under pretended warrants. Would it justify the outrages recited if there was process?

Mr. HIGBY. It was done by the sheriff of the county.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is not in order.

Mr. JULIAN. I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] will keep as cool as possible this hot weather.

Mr. HIGBY. It is true.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California must preserve order.

Mr. JULIAN. It is to guard against these mobs, this violence and lawlessness, that these poor preëmtors ask the adoption of this amendment, so as to save themselves from the effect of this mischievous ruling of the Attorney General, which has been accepted by the Interior Department of the Government. And now, if the House will give me five minutes' extension of my time I will bring this question to a vote to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. DRIGGS. I appeal to the gentleman to allow me, before he closes, three or five minutes, as reference has been made to my signing a paper.

Mr. JULIAN. I will do so if it is not to be taken out of my time.

Mr. DRIGGS. I think it due to me, as my motives have been impugned with those of five other members of the committee.

Mr. JULIAN. I have not intended to impugn the motives of any member of the committee, and if the gentleman on some other occasion asks liberty to make an explanation I have no doubt the House will grant it. I understand the House to have granted me an extension of five minutes, and I propose to use it in closing this controversy.

If the House votes down this amendment, it votes, in effect, that the ruling of the Attorney General shall be the law, affecting not only the comparatively few preëmtors on the Soscol ranch, but the rights of preëmtors everywhere throughout the land. What we desire by this amendment is to save the land policy of the Government from this indirect, unmanly, and covert attack which has been attempted. We simply ask that the customary and well-settled laws governing the rights of preëmption shall prevail on the Soscol ranch as well as everywhere else, and that these poor men shall not be the victims of fresh and renewed acts of violence, caused by our failure to protect them.

And now, a word on the subject of the "California delegation." It would seem from the remarks made upon this floor that there is scarcely any other delegation in the world than the California delegation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this amendment, which the gentleman from California says affects nobody but California, and no question but the "construction of California law and California grants," affects the right of preëmption in California and out of it, and everywhere. And it is a novel idea that because the California delegation ask a particular thing we are bound to grant it. Why California has shingled the State all over with school-warrants, issued without law, and has undertaken a system of survey and sale and the disposition of her swamp and internal improvement lands and her seminary lands, all in flagrant contravention of the laws of the United States, and in violation of her plighted faith. The gentleman from California knows this and deplores it. Her legislative career in this respect seems to have been a career of systematic recreancy to her most sacred obligations to the national authority, and has thus rendered necessary the bill now before the House. This bill affects the rights of the whole country, since the illegal acts referred to interfered with the rights of purchasers, preëmtors, and homestead claimants on the public domain in California, thus unlawfully disposed of by the State. In view of these facts, I submit that the California delegation should not exact much more than ordinary deference for their wishes. Let me make another observation. I understand the proper mode of Legislation upon this floor to be this: that we present our measures and debate them on their merits, and then vote.

I have not had the time to get the Indiana delegation to go around and implore every member upon this floor in God's name to vote for my amendment. I have not had time to get any Senators from the other end of the Capitol to come here and plead vehemently with members to vote for any proposition in the interest of Indiana. I have not had time to persuade the Committee on Public Lands to unite with me in laying siege to members to carry any measure on grounds independent of its merits, or as a great personal favor, to be duly returned. I have no taste for such work. I know nothing of that kind of legislation; and I therefore have a great deal less of effectiveness and influence in carrying measures on this floor than other gentlemen who have the peculiar gifts and inclinations to which I have alluded. But I submit that after all the paramount question is, whether our proposed measures are right or wrong, and not whether the California delegation ask for them.

Mr. HIGBY. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] will state his point of order.

Mr. HIGBY. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. JULIAN,] in the course of his remarks, speaks of calling Senators from the other end of the Capitol to aid in getting this bill through. I believe Senators have a right to come upon this floor at any time they see fit.

The SPEAKER. Senators have a right to be present in the House at all times; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] of course has the right to refer to their presence.

Mr. JULIAN. I am commenting upon their acts after they come here, and not upon their presence. Of course they have a right to come here, and I claim the right to refer to their business. The gentleman knows that I understand what California Senators have been doing here, and every member upon this floor knows it.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] is not in order in referring to the conduct of any member of the other House while upon this floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JULIAN. The Chair sustains that point of order, and therefore I will refer to some other officials. California surveyors—

Mr. HIGBY. I demand that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] shall take his seat until allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not consider the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] to be a point that requires the member called to order to take his seat. That is only required when a member is called to order for disorderly language.

Mr. JULIAN. I was alluding to California officials; among them to a California surveyor in the pay of the Government to-day, who has been here besieging our lobbies for weeks past in the interest of California land-holders; and another California surveyor has been doing the same thing. I know another fact, that General Frisbie, one of these large land-holders, has been upon the floor of the House, extensively operating with members with uncommon ardor of purpose. I know that the most marvelous assiduity has been employed here in endeavoring to carry through this House this California measure, without the proposed amendment, which can only be done by conniving at the overthrow of the whole land policy of the Government. Now, I protest against this intolerable lobbying in this House at the great peril of honest legislation, and intended, at least, to sway the views of members from a decision of public questions upon their merits. But this House, I know, is eager for other work, and I now demand a vote upon the amendment. In view of the principles involved, I ask the House to give me the yeas and nays upon the question.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation.

No objection was made.

Mr. DRIGGS. As a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and as one of the parties who signed the paper that has been read to the House, I desire simply to state that when this question came up, I considered that it was my privilege to investigate the facts and to decide accordingly, just as much as it was the right and privilege of the chairman or any other member of the committee. When the question assumed the character of great interest which it came to assume in the committee, I felt it my duty when the vote had been taken, and it was decided to report the bill with the amendment, to give it a still further and more thorough investigation. After doing so, I found that the occupants of those lands had acquired a title from Vallejo; that they had gone on and cultivated and improved the Socol ranch, and that they had been sustained in that title by the decisions of the courts; but that after various labors and workings on the part of men interested, the title was set aside by the Supreme Court. Immediately, like so many crows around a carcass, these men who claim to be bona fide preëmptors entered upon this land, cut down the wheat fields, removed the buildings, took possession of the land, and erected their shanties. On this they base their claim as preëmptors. Now, having myself been a register of the United States Land Office, I believe that the law regulating preëmption was designed for the benefit of those who enter upon the land of the United States and cultivate and reduce it to actual settlement, not those who go in and avail themselves of other people's improvements. I think that, considering all the questions of law involved, it would be right that the matter embraced in the amendment should at some future day be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, that they may report upon the legal questions involved. I think that the proposition should not be attached to this bill. For this reason, I with five other members of the committee signed the paper which was read.

Now, it was said by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. JULIAN,] though I do not say that he intended to impugn my motives, that we had been driven or coaxed into signing that paper by the gentleman from California. Sir, I deny this. I affirm that on the questions coming before me as a member of this House I think as independently and act as conscientiously as the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JULIAN. I do not think I made that statement.

Mr. DRIGGS. I understood the gentleman to say that the members of the committee who signed the paper had been coaxed or persuaded into doing so by the importunities of the gentleman from California.

Mr. JULIAN. I said that the gentlemen had been importuned very persistently, but I did not say that the importunity had made any impression.

Mr. DRIGGS. One word more, and I shall conclude, for I do not wish to trespass upon the patience of the House. I will state that, after the chairman of the committee had decided that it was unparliamentary to reconsider the vote which had been taken—after I had made an unsuccessful effort to procure a reconsideration, which the chairman stated could not be done, I with five other members of the committee signed the paper which has been read. When the gentleman says that that paper is not creditable to the members signing it, he is a little like that man on a jury who complained that the other eleven jurors were so stubborn that he could do nothing with them. That is all I desire to say.

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted, as the previous question is now operating.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent of the House to make an inquiry in relation to this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire as far as possible to do what is right in reference to this case, and hence I wish to understand what are the facts in regard to several points on which my vote may depend. In the first place, if I correctly understand, this land is now subject to the disposal of the United States; that is, the title has not yet been perfected in either of the parties claiming it. I understand further that the opinion of the Attorney General is to the effect that the preëmptor has no right which the Government is bound to respect, until after he has completed his purchase. I also understand that these other parties need this legislation in order to perfect their title. I desire to know whether the passage of this bill under this state of facts would not confirm the title in the first claimants and prevent any legislation hereafter for the benefit of the second claimants. I have not heard this question discussed, and I should like to have an answer on the point from some member who has given his attention to the subject.

Mr. JULIAN. I will say in answer to the gentleman's inquiry that there are two classes of settlers in this case—the settlers under the void grant and the preëmptors. The act of 1863 defines and determines all the rights of the Vallejo claimants under the void grant. The preëmptors' claim has reference to land which is not occupied and settled upon at all by the Vallejo claimants. It is their preëmption rights, sought to be overturned by the opinion of the Attorney General, that we desire to save by the amendment of the committee as reported.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to know what effect the passage of this bill will have upon the rights of parties claiming under the Vallejo title.

Mr. BIDWELL. Without this amendment the passage of the bill will have no effect upon them whatever.

Mr. JULIAN. Without the amendment it will expose every one of these preëmptors to the usurpation and rapacity of the Vallejo claimants.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My object in asking this question is to know whether the passage of this bill will so far dispose of the title to the land embraced in the Vallejo grant as to prevent any action on the part of Congress hereafter for the protection of all persons who are claiming as preëmptors. That was my object.

Mr. BIDWELL. It carefully guards the rights of preëmptors.

The question recurred on the following amendment:

Provided, however, That the act of Congress entitled "An act to grant the right of preëmption to certain purchasers on the Socol ranch in California," approved March 3, 1863, shall not be so construed as to interfere with the claims of bona fide settlers on the said lands, who had settled thereon and were claiming preëmptions, in accordance with the laws of the United States, prior to the time of the passage of the said act.

Mr. BIDWELL demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. I appeal to the chairman to consent to a postponement of this question.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by reconsidering the vote by which the main question was ordered.

Mr. BIDWELL. We do not object to postponing the amendment.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 30, nays 91, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bingham, Cook, Eckley, Finck, Abner C. Harding, Holmes, Julian, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Mercer, Miller, Morris, Orth, Paine, Price, John H. Rice, Ross, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stilwell, Thayer, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Elihu B. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Rader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffey, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Griggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Grider, Hale, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McRuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Noel, O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Unson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, Windom, and Woodbridge—91.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Baker, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Chanler, Conkling, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Defts, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Latham, Loan, Lynch, McIndoe, McKee, Moulton, Nicholson, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Francis Thomas, Warner, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. McRUER demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. McRUER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the tariff bill be terminated in one minute after the committee shall resume the consideration of the same.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN stated the pending question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. STROUSE, on page 39, line nine, to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so the paragraph will read, "on animals, living, all sorts, fifty per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On apples, garden fruit, and vegetables, ten per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty." I do this for the purpose of furnishing these manufacturers with cheap products. I do not want them to be dependent upon Great Britain for their vegetables, and by giving this encouragement to our nurserymen and gardeners for a few years they may be enabled to furnish vegetables a great deal cheaper than they have done heretofore.

Mr. THAYER. If the gentleman will add "small potatoes" as a part of his amendment, I will vote for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROSS. I omitted to state that this business will have to be stopped in this country unless we give this protection.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If I remember right, this section is taken from a bill which we had up here some time ago, which was a quasi reciprocity treaty, and was decidedly beaten. Now, I think the amendment of my colleague should be made to correspond to the duty on animals, which is thirty per cent. There is no reason why we should not have the same protection on fruits that we have on cattle. I ask my colleague to modify his amendment by making it thirty per cent.

Mr. ROSS. I suppose my colleague wants to follow the example on the other side, and have an agreement.

Mr. WENTWORTH. No; there is no agreement about this.

Mr. ROSS. Well, in that case I will accept the suggestion, and make it thirty per cent.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I am satisfied with that.

The amendment of Mr. Ross, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On barley, not including pearl or hulled, fifteen cents per bushel.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the previous paragraph in relation to fruits and vegetables, and reinsert a duty of twenty per cent. in lieu of ten per cent.

Mr. ROSS. I raise a question of order. That paragraph has already been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORRILL. I rose before the Clerk read the last paragraph.

Mr. ROSS. The gentleman will not say he rose before the Clerk commenced the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. I rose as soon as the Chairman announced the decision; but I do not care anything about it. It seems to be a tariff that is to be made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Ross.]

Mr. ROSS. I now move to amend by adding after the words "fifteen cents per bushel" the words "and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem." This is following the example in relation to manufactures. Barley is largely used in this country for the purpose of making lager beer, and we could furnish it all from the valley of the Mississippi. There is no necessity for importing it from Canada or any other country; and if we are required to purchase our manufactured articles from our home manufacturers, they certainly ought to buy their barley from us. This is a very small addition in comparison with what the gentlemen on the other side have been putting on other articles; and I hope the House will by common consent give us twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to know whether it does not meet his approbation.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the committee will pay some attention to this bill and try to keep it within moderate bounds. These propositions that come from gentlemen who propose to vote down the bill in any and every shape deserve the careful scrutiny of the committee. Now, by increasing the duty on apples and garden fruits we provoke retaliatory legislation. We, living further south, of course, have earlier vegetables than they have in Canada, which naturally seek their markets, and whatever rate we propose will be enacted in Canada as against us. It is of very little consequence, so far as we are concerned, what the duties are on these vegetables, but it is important that no bad example should be set. Whatever may be adopted by us will be likely to be adopted by the Canadians. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. Ross's amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On barley, pearl or hulled, one cent per pound.

Mr. DODGE. I rose to offer an amendment before the preceding clause was read, but the Chairman did not hear me. I propose now to insert after the last paragraph, "on fruits preserved in brandy or whisky, two dollars per gallon and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem." The object of this amendment is to prevent fraud being perpetrated by the importers of fruits preserved in brandy, intending to import brandy rather than fruits. I understand there are large quantities of fruits thus imported, but a much larger quantity of brandy with them. This amendment is designed to guard the revenue against such frauds by making the duty two dollars per gallon and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. The duty now on brandy is from $3 50 to $4 per gallon.

Mr. MORRILL. No objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to add, "on coffee two and a half cents per pound." The rate established under the existing law is five cents per pound. From that I am informed we derive a revenue of about seven million dollars per annum. I think we are in a condition now to reduce the tax on this article, as we shall have at the end of the fiscal year just closed a surplus of over $100,000,000 to apply to the principal of the national debt. I hope, therefore, the reduction will be made on coffee to two and a half cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. This is rather an important question to be sprung upon the House, and I regret that it has not been considered before in the Committee of Ways and Means. Upon an early occasion the question came up in the committee and we concluded not to disturb the tariff on tea and coffee. We have already got more in the bill than was at first intended. I think, however, the proposition to reduce the duty on coffee to some extent is perhaps reasonable, and that the revenue may be able to bear it, but not so much as the gentleman proposes to do. If the gentleman will say three and a half cents I shall for one be disposed to accept it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Since I have determined to propose this amendment quite a number of gentlemen, members of the House, have spoken to me about putting coffee on the free list. But I think it is a source of revenue that we ought not to dispense with entirely, and the rate which I propose I think is about right in the present financial condition of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. I am reluctant, before we have succeeded in funding any considerable amount of our large floating debt, to reduce to any extent the revenues of the country. I think the reduction to two and one half cents per pound will be too much. I therefore move to amend by making it three and a half cents.

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what, in his judgment, will be the effect of this bill on our revenue; whether it will increase or decrease the revenue from imports. My vote will be governed somewhat by his estimation on this question.

Mr. MORRILL. It is impossible at the present stage of the bill to form any estimate as to what it will produce. We do not know what changes will be made. There are some rates that have been placed on articles in the bill that will inevitably reduce the amount of revenue. But I expect before the bill becomes a law that these rates will be reduced, if not in the House, in the Senate. I have no doubt, on many articles, the increased rates will increase the revenue, and yet that may be counterbalanced by a diminution in other cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MORRILL to make the duty three and a half cents per pound, there were—ayes 42, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Messrs. WILSON, of Iowa, and MORRILL.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 53.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the original amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, to make the duty on coffee two and a half cents per pound, and it was agreed to—ayes 61, noes 35.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now move to amend by inserting immediately after the amendment last adopted, "on tea, twelve and a half cents per pound." That is just one half the present rate, and corresponds to the reduction made in the duty upon coffee.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] a question in reference to a statement he made when he was advocating his amendment about coffee. I understood him to say that it was estimated that the revenue of the Government would during the current year amount to $100,000,000 more than its expenses. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman his authority for that statement. We have largely reduced the internal revenue duties by the bill which we have just passed. We do not know to what amount that reduction will be, nor do we know what will be the effect of the bill which we are now considering.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TROWBRIDGE] understood me as he has just stated, or rather if I made the statement which he has just repeated, then I was in error. I meant to refer to the fiscal year closing on the 30th of June last.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I understood the gentleman as I have stated.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am glad the gentleman has given me an opportunity to make the correction.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the House will not act in haste upon this amendment. I do not know of any article that can more properly have a duty levied upon it than the article of tea, nor do I know an article that can better bear a duty upon it. It is possible that by another year we may be able to make coffee, tea, and sugar free; but as we now have some eleven or twelve hundred millions of debt yet to be funded, I think it is rather premature to reduce the duty now. And if this tariff bill should fail we are not to look for any considerable amount of revenue from our manufacturers. If no relief is granted the business of manufacturing must certainly come to a stop, in a great many instances, throughout the country. It must stop at least until the prices of labor shall be readjusted; and whether that can be done at all or not is a matter of doubt. Gentlemen are making motions of amendment to load this bill down, with a certain prospect of vastly diminishing the revenue, even if the bill should pass. I hope the House will hesitate about adopting this amendment, although we have already adopted one in regard to coffee. However, I would not regret that so much if the duty had been placed at three and a half cents per pound, as I proposed. I hope the duty on tea will not be cut down at all, certainly not one half, as proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. PIKE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "twelve and a half" and inserting "five." There is a reason for having a duty imposed on coffee which does not pertain to tea with the same force. It is well understood that there are many very worthy manufacturers of coffee in this country; they make it of chicory, beans, peas, rye, wheat, dandelion root, and many other things. So there is a reason for retaining a small duty on coffee in order to protect that worthy class of our manufacturers. But there is no such reason for retaining a duty on tea. We do not and cannot manufacture tea. I understand there are no tea manufacturers in this country. I believe there have been one or two attempts to grow tea in this country, but I understand they have not been very successful. So that it is a mere question of revenue, and the question is whether we shall derive our revenue from articles of necessity, such as tea, or from articles of luxury, and from the wealth of the country. It does seem to me very proper, at the earliest possible moment, to relieve the masses of the country from taxation. And it is in pursuance of that idea that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] has taken this opportune moment, when our receipts from revenue are very largely in excess of our expenditures, to remove or to decrease the duty on this favorite beverage. And I hope that, pursuant to the same line of policy, my motion will prevail to put upon tea the merely nominal duty of five cents per pound.

Mr. SPALDING. I rise to oppose the amendment. As I understand these propositions to cut down the duty on coffee and tea, the one from five cents per pound, the other from twenty-five cents per pound, they are merely attempts to render this bill so obnoxious that it will be defeated. The object is to obstruct the ordinary channels for obtaining our revenue, and to throw the whole burden upon particular quarters where it is known it will be obnoxious. The design, it seems to me, is to vote down this tariff in toto. If that be the object intended, let us meet the question at once and save the time of the House. If we are to have a tariff bill, I prefer that we should retain the duties upon the articles of coffee and tea, for I believe that the duty on these is paid as easily as any duty levied in our country. I know that the poor as well as the rich partake of tea and coffee; but they do not consider this tax onerous. The high prices of coffee and tea do not arise from the duty assessed by our Government; they result from the premium on gold. So long as gold ranges at 150 and upward coffee and tea will be high in our market. The duty, whether five cents or two and a half cents, makes very little difference in the price of these articles to the consumer.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PIKE's amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. For the purpose of saying a word or two on this subject, I move to amend the amendment by making the duty ten cents per pound. Sir, I believe that our Government can afford to reduce the duty upon these articles of necessity imported into this country. The total revenue derived from tea during the last fiscal year was only about nine million dollars. The proposition of my colleague will reduce this amount one half. Now, if the effect of this bill will be to increase the revenue derived from imports, then we can well afford to reduce the duty upon these articles of necessity which enter so largely into the consumption of the poorer classes. I trust, therefore, that the amendment of my colleague will be adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I believe that two years hence this country will be in a very different condition from what is now anticipated by many gentlemen who look at things as they are now and have been for the last year. My opinion is that two years hence the internal taxation, instead of amounting annually to three or four hundred million dollars, will not exceed $200,000,000; and our revenue from foreign importations, instead of being $160,000,000 per annum, will not exceed $80,000,000. I believe that the whole business of this country, now inflated in every sense of the word, must come into a narrower compass, and must necessarily pay largely less upon all the articles of taxation.

While I believe that our revenue from internal taxation and from duties on imports will be reduced at least one third, I do not perceive—I wish I could—that we have reached the maximum of our debt. I believe that nearly a billion dollars is yet to be brought into the account which this Government will be obliged to settle. I have no doubt that by the time five years shall have rolled around this Government will be paying an interest upon $4,000,000,000. Yet this must be done with a diminished revenue. Now, how is that to be done? We all know the claims that are coming up to Congress—honest claims, too; claims which this Government must finally meet, as the consequence of the great war which was forced upon us; claims of loyal men from all sections of the country. Those who have looked into this question cannot fail to see that the justice of the country must finally allow many of these claims. Hence they are to be taken into consideration in estimating the obligations which the Government will hereafter be called upon to meet. Gentlemen do not regard this question with alarm. They say this country is able to pay all its obligations. But how will you pay them when you reduce the sources of revenue? How will you be able to pay the public debt if you cut down the very articles on which the money is raised to pay it?

My friend thinks a reduction of four or five millions on a single item is hardly of any account. You have cut down the revenue five millions on coffee, and it is now proposed to cut it down five millions on tea, making ten millions in all. I am told it is a reduction of something like ten or twelve millions on both articles. Now, where will you go to make up this deficit? What item will bear it in addition to the tax already imposed? Besides, sir, I think the great advantage derived from the operation of this tariff is to preclude excessive importation now ruining this country. These importations have inflated the price of everything in the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I renew it; and I do it for the purpose of correcting a vital error made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] who has just taken his seat. I say a vital error because it goes to the country with the indorsement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and thus having a weight and influence attached to it which but very few declarations made on this floor can have. Hence the necessity of correcting it, and having the subject presented in proper shape to the country. The gentleman from Pennsylvania tells the country, for when he says it upon this floor he tells it to the country, that we will be unable at a not distant year in the future to pay the expenses of the Government.

Mr. STEVENS. I have not said any such thing. I said I felt no difficulty about paying our public debt in doing as we do now; but I did seriously object to the reduction of these duties as leading to future embarrassment and difficulty.

Mr. PRICE. If the gentleman will not interrupt me I will quote him correctly. He said we must expect a reduction of the internal revenue, and if the receipts of the Government from this source were reduced to two hundred millions per annum and to one hundred millions on imports, thus making three hundred millions of revenue, we would be unable to meet our expenses, or words to that effect. In this calculation the gentleman does not allow anything for increase in the wealth and population of the country. If I had time I would like to show that the ratio of increase of wealth and population in the United States far exceeds that of any other country on the face of the earth. But I have not time and therefore cannot do that now. But, sir, taking the gentleman's own figures for the standard, and it will be seen that we have revenue sufficient to meet all the expenses of the Government and to provide a sinking fund of $50,000,000 every year. Any good financier who has the interest of the country at heart will tell you that a sinking fund of fifty millions a year, which we can have with a reduction of taxation, is a very healthy state of affairs, and by no means a discouraging view of our public debt.

Mr. STEVENS. Let me interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. PRICE. I would with pleasure if I had the time, but the gentleman very well knows that I have only five minutes under the rules, and that is not long enough for me fully to state my own position. This is a matter which ought to be understood by the country. The gentleman has stated our indebtedness at four billions, or more properly speaking, four thousand millions. I will say, as I had occasion to say more than a year since on this floor, that it was never that amount. It was never four thousand millions since the war commenced, as can be proven by a reference to the books of the Treasury of the United States. It is less to-day than it was three months ago—the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury establishes that fact beyond successful contradiction—and much less than it was six months ago. The power and ability of the nation to discharge its indebtedness have been increasing every day, to the surprise as well as satisfaction of the people. With these facts, then, existing, I do not want the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to go out to the country uncontradicted. The truth is that we are paying our indebtedness to-day more rapidly than any one calculated we would be able to do; and in place, then, of holding up a dark picture for the people to gaze at, and be thereby discouraged, it is a duty incumbent upon us to make the view as bright and cheering as the facts will justify. The conclusion is irresistible that we can reduce the burden of taxation to some extent and at the same time reduce the national debt in a safe and healthy manner. It is a fact beyond controversy, and one of which every true-hearted American is justly proud, that the sun sets every night upon a smaller amount of national indebtedness than it arose upon the morning before.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to two or three points which have a bearing on this subject, and to give the reason why I hope we will not reduce the duty either on tea or coffee. In the first place, it is the genius of our whole revenue system, and the experience of the Government has approved it, that the best mode of raising revenue is to impose duty upon the fewest possible articles. Twenty-five years ago in England there were more than twelve hundred different articles on which duty was imposed, and now they have been so reduced that upon five articles more than one half the revenues of that country are collected. In England, in 1865, $354,000,000 of revenue were raised, and of that sum $189,000,000 were derived from five articles, namely, fermented malt and spirituous liquors, tea, coffee, and tobacco and sugar in their various forms.

I say that those five articles afforded the Government of Great Britain $189,000,000 of its revenue, the total of which was $354,000,000. Thus almost two thirds of the revenue were raised on five articles and two of the five were coffee and tea. Twenty-two million five hundred thousand dollars were raised in Great Britain in the year 1865 on tea alone, and the consumption of that article is steadily increasing in that country. It is now two and seven tenths pounds per capita of the population of Great Britain, whereas in this country the consumption, though increasing, has reached only one pound per capita. I say, then, that we have no article which the experience of all financial nations shows can better bear the duty without reducing the consumption than tea. Furthermore, this is one of the few articles on which we can levy a duty without duplication of taxation and without directly involving other interests. It is a simple and plain question of revenue. There is no other article into which it enters as an element. I shall be sorry if we now add to the vote we have just cast in regard to coffee another which will take $4,000,000 more out of the Treasury. I shall be sorry if we thus show the country that we are having no regard for revenue. I want it understood that we are raising revenue by this bill as well as protecting industry, and I trust that we shall not be guilty of the folly of reversing the whole policy of this country, and ignoring the experience of the leading financial nations of the world, by reducing this duty only to add an equal amount to a score of other interests not so well able to bear it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment proposed by Mr. PRICE, and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred, on the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment so as to increase the duty to thirty cents.

Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that it is very premature for us to act upon this question. We have acted on the internal revenue bill, and yet by the report of the conferees on that bill we find that even there we do not obtain the amount of revenue that was anticipated when the bill left the House. For instance, on the item of cotton there is a reduction of not less than eighteen million dollars. It becomes a question whether the amount of revenue that we propose to strike out from the bill can be spared. I must say that I am somewhat surprised that this subject should be introduced here. It is not in the original bill as reported. I hope the committee will not agree to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman has no right to be surprised. The very reason why I offered this amendment was because these articles were not in the bill as reported. If the committee had reported it in this way, there would have been no necessity for this amendment. Now, as to the effect on the revenue, the gentleman from Vermont very well knows that under the provisions of the recent internal revenue act, $50,000,000 more will be collected on the article of spirits alone than has been collected heretofore. If there be a faithful enforcement of the law in regard to this article alone we will succeed in increasing the revenue fourfold more than it will be diminished by the amendment I have offered. We are, therefore, running no risk as to the diminution of revenue. Now, this is not an article of luxury, as has been said by some, because it has become almost one of the articles of necessity to the people of the country. Gentlemen might as well call pork and beef a luxury as tea or coffee in this country now. But under the present high prices the consumption is not as wide-spread as it would be if prices were reduced. As tea now is consumed in this country, it is to some extent an article of luxury, because the poorer classes are deprived in a great measure of its use. Reduce the price of tea, and you will increase imports, and the increase of imports will keep up the present standard of revenue; and that is all there is in the question. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont will not prevail, and that the same reduction will be made upon this article that we have already made on the article of coffee.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this subject I think we should look to some facts which we have hitherto ignored. The internal revenue of this country in the year 1865 was about two hundred and eleven million dollars and two hundred and twelve million dollars. Of that internal revenue, between forty-nine and fifty per cent. was derived from the taxes upon manufactures. Prices in this country at this time range high in consequence of the condition of our currency. I hope to have a favorable change and to reduce prices to a gold basis. I hope sincerely that that time is not far in the future. But we must remember that as we approach that system the prices of manufactures must be reduced, and incomes from business must be reduced, and therefore we shall materially affect the revenues of this country from the internal department. In this condition of things why should we forego the certain and secure source of revenue in the taxation of these articles which the people will have and the tax upon which is distributed almost universally among the people of this country? I do not believe that it is wise to do it, and therefore I hope that the committee will not consent to so great a reduction as has been proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question being upon the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa,

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WILSON of Iowa, and DAVIS, were appointed.

The committee divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 46.

The CHAIRMAN voted in the affirmative.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On beans, (except vanilla and castor oil,) twenty-five cents per bushel.

On broom corn, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.

On buckwheat, ten cents per bushel.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to amend the last clause by striking out "ten" and inserting the word "twenty," after the word "buckwheat." I propose to submit to the House some reasons why the duty on buckwheat should be increased; and what I have to say in regard to buckwheat applies generally to the agricultural products of the country. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that while I am in favor of a reduction of some of the high rates proposed by this bill, I am not opposed to a tariff for revenue, discriminating for protection. I am an old tariff man. For more than thirty years I have insisted that, in the arrangement of duties upon foreign productions introduced into this country, we should discriminate against those which compete in our markets with the productions of this country; that we should discriminate against those that compete with us and threaten to destroy the industry of this country. And, sir, the reason why I am opposed to this bill is, that I think it outrages the principles of reciprocity and equality. I believe that a tariff to be just should be so arranged as to protect all the interests of the country alike. I am no sectionalist; but I would put such protection upon our agricultural productions as to make it clear and apparent to the people on the other side of the border, in Canada, that their interests are identical with ours. I would remove the necessity of a long line of forts and posts for troops, watch-towers and revenue vessels to detect smugglers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate on the pending section terminate in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. HARDING, of Illinois, to make the duty on buckwheat twenty cents instead of ten cents per bushel.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose that is not a serious amendment, and I hope it will not be adopted.

The question was taken; and there were, upon a division—ayes twenty, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cleaned rice, and on rice commonly called Patna rice, two and a half cents per pound; on uncleaned rice, two cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out after "on uncleaned rice" the word "two" and inserting "one and a half."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to further amend the paragraph by adding "on patty, one cent per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On corn, Indian, or maize, ten cents per bushel.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to insert after the line just read, "on wheat, forty cents per bushel."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On flour and meal, middlings, and mill feed of wheat, corn, rye, or oats, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 40, noes 53.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On hay, one dollar per ton.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "one dollar" and insert "two dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert after the line last read, "on malt, thirty per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On peas, twenty-five cents per bushel.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "fifty."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes twenty-five, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HART. I move to amend by inserting after the line last read, "on peanuts or ground beans, two cents per pound; shelled, four cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On potatoes, ten cents per bushel.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to strike out the line just read.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty."

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "without distinction of size or color." [Laughter.] However, I will not press my amendment.

The amendment of Mr. Ross was then agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On seed, timothy and clover, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On trees, plants, and shrubs, ornamental and fruit, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On tallow, two cents per pound.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "two" and insert "four."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the whole of the twelfth section as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that that motion is not in order. This bill is being read by paragraphs, and not by sections, for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On lumber, hemlock, cedar, and spruce, round, split, or sided, one half cent per cubic foot; when hewn square, three fourths of one cent per cubic foot; when sawed and valued at six dollars or less per thousand feet, one dollar per thousand feet; when valued at over six dollars per thousand, two dollars per thousand feet.

On lumber, pine, ash, butternut, bass-wood, birch, elm, maple, and white-wood, round, split, or sided, three fourths of one cent per cubic foot; when hewn square, one and one fourth cent per cubic foot; when sawed and valued at six dollars or less per thousand feet, one dollar per thousand feet; when valued at over six dollars and not over ten dollars per thousand, two dollars per thousand feet; when valued at over ten dollars per thousand, three dollars per thousand feet: Provided, That when lumber of any sort is planed or finished, in addition to the rates herein provided, there shall be levied and paid, for each side so planed or finished, one dollar per thousand feet; and if planed on one side and tongued and grooved, two dollars per thousand feet; and if planed on two sides and tongued and grooved, two dollars and fifty cents per thousand feet.

Mr. FERRY. I move to amend the last paragraph just read by striking out the words "six dollars or less per thousand feet, one dollar per thousand feet; when valued at over six dollars and;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

On lumber, pine, ash, butternut, bass-wood, birch, elm, maple, and white-wood, round, split, or sided, three fourths of one cent per cubic foot; when hewn square, one and one fourth cent per cubic foot; when sawed and valued at not over ten dollars per thousand, two dollars per thousand feet; when valued at over ten dollars per thousand, three dollars per thousand feet.

Mr. Chairman, were I to consult my own judgment I should resist the ad valorem method of duty, and insist upon a specific duty of three dollars per thousand upon all lumber imported. But in deference to the judgment of others who take an interest in this question, I have assented to a modification and compromise with the Committee of Ways and Means, and propose to strike out the six dollar classification, leaving the remainder of the paragraph to stand as reported by the committee. It comes as near a specific duty as seems to be obtainable, and will make the duty on all lumber valued at not over ten dollars a thousand two dollars, and on all over ten dollars a duty of three dollars per thousand.

Those who are opposed to this proposition claim, I suppose, that they wish the cheaper lumber to be favored, while we on the other hand contend that the lower grades of lumber are in small part furnished by Canada and are supplied mostly by the States. The question, therefore, resolves itself practically into one of revenue. Concurring, by this amendment, with the remark of the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that "the bill is framed to protect our internal revenue and for no other purpose," I cannot believe that the committee will oppose us, and therefore invite them to support the proposition that is now made. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the price of lumber in the States has not been regulated by importations. Let me here quote a remark made by the chairman of the committee in March last, when we had under consideration the bill to regulate trade with the British Provinces. He said on that occasion:

"When we abandoned all duties on lumber under the treaty, the effect was not to reduce the price in the American market, but the value of lumber increased in the Provinces."

When the treaty went into operation, it will be thus seen, the price of lumber did not decrease, showing that the importation had no effect upon the prices in the States. I will now refer to the Chicago lumber market, quoting from the Chicago Tribune of June 30, showing that since the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty the importations from Canada have had no effect upon the markets in the States:

"The receipts of lumber during the week closing to-day have been unusually heavy, and the market for several days past has had a downward tendency; but the decline is noticeable more particularly on common grades, which have fallen in price $1 50 to $1 75 per thousand feet. Prime cargoes, however, are still in fair demand, and but little if any concession has been made; but low grade cargoes are difficult to sell, and prices tend downward."

The same journal states under date of July 3, three days later, that "the market for common and coarse cargoes continues dull and depressed." From these facts it will be seen that this question is substantially one of the States, and resolves itself simply into one of revenue. Now, Mr. Chairman, we can sometimes draw information and instruction from competitors and rivals; and with this view I wish to call the attention of the committee to the report of the minister of finance for the Provinces.

It has not been forgotten that pending the discussion of the bill regulating trade with British America that was before the House last March, a large and very influential delegation of Canadians was present, representing the interests of the Canadas in the measure that was proposed to take the place of the reciprocity treaty which was then so soon to terminate. That delegation so shrewdly managed their interests as to impress the Committee of Ways and Means with the belief that it was much more important for the States than for the Canadas that the measure proposing to regulate trade between the two should become a law. The distinguished chairman had his fears so far invoked as to lead him to warn the House against opposition, and zealously deprecated defeat of so wise and equitable a project. What was that project? It was fixing the duty of one dollar on all lumber valued at seven dollars and under; on all over seven dollars and under twelve dollars a duty of two dollars; and all over twelve dollars a duty of three dollars. And we were told that the Provinces cared but little whether it was carried or not; they were not to realize by its passage, but that the benefits would accrue mostly if not entirely to the States; and the apparent indifference of the delegation to which I have referred was pointed to as a moving reason why we should grasp at so generous a proposition for the States. The British Provinces were represented to have been the losers in the main by the reciprocity treaty, and their assent to the new basis referred to was deemed a great concession on their part.

Now, sir, what does their financial minister admit in his recent budget? He says, "In consequence of the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty it became imperative to rearrange the customs. The estimated falling off in revenue is $1,000,000." Here then is an official admission by the minister of finance that the termination of this reciprocity treaty, so wonderfully beneficial, as stated, to the States, is to work a loss of revenue to the Provinces of $1,000,000 the current fiscal year. In other words, we have the grave and startling concession that the reciprocity treaty instead of being detrimental has been beneficial to the Provinces to the amount of $1,000,000 per annum. We have then out of our generosity, during the existence of that treaty, poured into the British exchequer at least $12,000,000. A most singular reciprocity, and a most significant key to the studied indifference of the Canadian delegation. Is it now again proposed to reproduce this damaging commercial relationship to the States?

Hear this financial minister further and learn wisdom from the mouth of our competitors. After stating that the estimated falling off of their revenue during the coming year will be $1,000,000, he proposes, in order to supply the deficiency, to raise a duty upon importations, a duty of from thirty to sixty cents upon spirits; and upon Indian corn and coarse grains, ten cents per bushel—striking here at the great agricultural interests of the West, especially Illinois, the State that is now clamorous through its delegation for easier terms of interchange with this voracious power.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORELL. I still adhere to what I said on a former occasion, that a moderate duty will not increase the price of lumber. But it is important that in reference to this matter we should not exceed a strictly revenue duty. It must be borne in mind that Canada is at the present time pressed for money. The government has been compelled to issue a legal tender currency, as I understand, to the extent of $5,000,000, and has also been obliged to levy an export duty upon lumber in the log. The article now under discussion is one that we have favored in all our tax bills, exempting it from duty to a great extent, on the ground that building material and fencing stuffs ought to be as cheap as possible throughout the whole country. It is important to the interests of the United States that we should not cut down our forests too rapidly. I am not disposed to consent to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan. It would levy upon ordinary fencing stuff double the amount of duty fixed in the bill. I think that this cheaper sort of lumber ought to come in at a lower rate than that of a better quality, which is sold at much higher prices. I trust that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. COOK. With the view of moving hereafter to place lumber in the free list, I move, as an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the pending section. I should like to be advised upon what principle the manufacture of lumber in this country should be protected. I have listened to the arguments which have been advanced to show the necessity of protecting various branches of manufacture in this country; and those arguments resolve themselves into two. One is the necessity of developing and establishing manufactures of our own. This principle certainly does not apply to the manufacture of lumber. Our forests are limited in extent.

Mr. DRIGGS. Does the gentleman wish to know the reason why the lumber business should be protected?

Mr. COOK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DRIGGS. I will state one very good reason. Canada, stretching along our northern border, is filled with pine forests; and by reason of the cheap labor there and the high price of labor in this country, resulting from the war and consequent taxation, there is a necessity that the American interest should be protected unless we want to ruin it.

Mr. COOK. I was coming to that proposition in a moment. We are not asked to protect the manufacture of lumber for the purpose of developing that manufacture. It has gone on increasing rapidly, and I hope in the future it will continue to increase. The other is a question of protection to American industry. It is to protect American labor against the pauper labor of Europe. But the labor of Europe does not come into competition with the manufacture of lumber. The only competition is that from Canada; and Canadian labor is not much cheaper, if any, than American labor. The result, then, is to make the western country pay this increase of duty. Every dollar paid for the protection of the lumber interest will be paid by every man who wants to put up a new house or to surround his field with a new fence or to make any other necessary improvement. In fine, the lumber men of the country are to be protected at the expense of the agriculturists.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman does not recognize the difference between our system of revenue and the taxation of Canada. There ought certainly to be enough to cover the difference which is against us. Our taxation is five times what it is in Canada.

Mr. COOK. Let me say, in answer to the objection of my friend from Ohio, that he must take into consideration also the difference of premium on gold. My friend from Michigan said the American labor was to be protected.

Mr. DRIGGS. You asked why we needed this, and I said because of the cheap labor of Canada, and because of the high prices and the high rates of taxation in the United States.

Mr. COOK. I think it is a bad policy and wrong in itself to raise revenue by preventing the development of the country.

Mr. GARFIELD. I say that Canadian labor does not have to bear as heavy taxation under their system as the American labor. Now, does not the gentleman think it is necessary to put on the difference?

Mr. COOK. I do not understand that the difference is against the American labor looking to the difference between our currency and gold.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate upon this subject.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate be terminated on the pending paragraph in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in five minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the scale placed in the bill, after consultation with various parties, is about fair. I am quite satisfied that it should not be increased.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. Chairman, I was remarking when the hammer cut me short that the Provinces were protecting their commercial relations with the States by heavy duties on importations and invited the committee to profit by their example. What more have they done? They have levied an exportation duty upon saw logs of $1 25 per one thousand feet. Knowing full well that their cheap stumpage, or value of the timber standing, and cheaper labor and other expenses entering into the production of logs, would drive Americans to their pinceries for stock to compete successfully with them in the lumber markets of the States under even the present twenty per cent. ad valorem duty, which is more favorable to Americans than what is proposed by the pending bill and my amendment, they resort to self-defense, like wise legislators, and impose an exportation duty. They practically say to the generous Americans, with all your generosity we must take care of our own interests first, and if you come to our soil to operate we propose to make you pay for it.

If I were satisfied we should have a correct valuation of lumber when imported I do not know that I would object to the proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means, but the chairman of that committee knows that such will not be the case. The gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee of Elections, [Mr. DAWES,] well said the other day that "the experience of everybody proved an ad valorem duty is the very best possible method in which the tariff can be defrauded." In proof of this let me state a case. A gentleman interested in lumber, an ex-Congressman, has written a letter in which he states that at Chicago a cargo from Canada was recently sold at twenty-four dollars per thousand feet which had been valued only at eight dollars per thousand. This is but one instance in which our revenue is being defrauded. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cook] lays great stress upon the wants of his State for cheap fencing. In regard to fencing I will say that very little comes from Canada. Fencing is cut into one and three eighths inches in thickness. Canadians are too smart to cut their lumber into that thickness and sell it for inch stuff. They are too shrewd to lose in stock not only but the same in transportation. The lower grades of lumber come from Michigan. The proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means does not accomplish their purpose by the low valuation and their low grade of duty.

I have, I trust, sufficiently shown that Canadian lumber does not materially affect the rates of lumber in the markets of the States. When the treaty went into operation the prices did not decrease, and when it terminated prices declined, as quotations prove. The question, therefore, so clearly and undeniably resolves itself into one of revenue and not burden upon American industry and interests, the committee cannot refuse to sustain my amendment. By its adoption the opportunities for fraud are lessened and the system simplified. Instead of two divisions there will be but one; all lumber valued at ten dollars and under to pay a duty of two dollars, and all over ten dollars a duty of three dollars. Your revenue will be increased, the interests of the States protected, and the United States Government saved from being coerced into practical commercial fraud.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOK. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment, and no further amendments are in order. The gentleman can withdraw his amendment.

Mr. COOK. I made it in good faith, and I want to vote for it. But I will withdraw it for the purpose of saying a word or two and renew it when I have done. I want to state that it is bad policy to raise a revenue by crippling the resources of the country. Now, there is no one thing that affects every man in my section of the country like this tax on lumber. We have to depend entirely upon the lumber which we get from the North. I suppose it is not necessary to argue that the supply of lumber will regulate the price. I do not know what circumstances may have occurred in particular instances to depress the price at Chicago in the case cited by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] but assuming that it will be a rule that commands itself to every man that the supply of lumber will regulate the price, it is vital to us that the supply shall be free. And if the committee shall see fit to raise a revenue from lumber to the extent that is proposed, it will have the effect so to cripple the development of the country as to prevent the building up of the towns and fences of the agricultural lands, so that the actual revenue which will be derived will be less in consequence of the duty imposed on lumber.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOK. I renew my amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FERRY, it was agreed to—ayes 61, noes 37.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. COOK to strike out the whole paragraph, and it was not agreed to—ayes 29, noes 70.

The Clerk read as follows:

On lumber, black walnut, cherry, chestnut, and oak, not sawed, and less advanced than boards and planks, not otherwise provided for, ten per cent. ad valorem; when sawed, four dollars per thousand feet.

On ship timber, fifty cents per ton.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "fifty cents" and insert "three dollars."

The amendment was not agreed to—ayes twenty-five, noes not counted.

Mr. PIKE. I move to strike out the words "on ship timber fifty cents per ton," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On ship timber one half cent per cubic foot; on ship knees, one cent per inch; and on hard-wood ship planks, fifty cents per thousand feet.

I think I have the concurrence of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would like to have the gentleman explain the difference between—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 38, noes 59.

Mr. PIKE. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On railroad ties, rough hewn or sawed, three cents each.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "three" and insert "five."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On shingle bolts, hubs for wheels, last blocks, posts and lumber, not otherwise provided for, hewn or sawed only, ten per cent. ad valorem.

On pickets, palings, and lath, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

On rift pine and cedar shingles, seventy-five cents per thousand.

On sawed pine and cedar shingles, fifty cents per thousand.

On spruce shingles, forty cents per thousand.

On pine clapboards, four dollars per thousand.

On spruce clapboards, $2 50 per thousand.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That from and after the day and year aforesaid the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned and embraced in this section shall be exempt from duty, that is to say:

Archilia, archil, or orchilia weed.

Books, maps, and charts for the use of the United States or the Congressional Library, imported by authority: Provided, The price paid the importer does not include the duty.

Mr. MYERS. I move to insert after the word "authority" "and also all books and publications in any of the Slavonic languages."

Mr. Chairman, I have a petition from members of the Slavonic Fraternity of the United States, asking that books and publications in their several languages may be exempted from duty, and I now present it to the House, hoping that their prayer may be granted. There are about twenty thousand of these people in our country, speaking from fifteen to eighteen different idioms, the alphabets differing also. I have now before me newspapers in the Russian, Polish, and Bohemian dialects, which on account of the great heat I will not trouble the Clerk by sending to his desk to be read, [laughter,] but it is sufficient to state that we do not print publications in any of these various languages in this country. Poor immigrants speaking them, who naturally desire to bring a few religious and other books with them, as it takes some time for them to learn our tongue, find the duty amounting almost to a prohibition. I know of an instance where a resident of Washington importing such books, valued at ten dollars, had to pay twenty-one dollars for duties, exchange, and expenses upon them. As we do not print any such publications we need no protection calling for a duty, and the revenue derived from this source is too trifling to speak of. There is no other class of foreign publications in which an exemption from duty is so appropriate, and I hope the House will act favorably in the matter.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate on this section.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the gentleman will let us consider this section without limiting the debate. The House will see at once that there are a great many articles put on the free list that ought not to be there.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SUFFERERS BY THE PORTLAND FIRE.

Mr. HIGBY. I presume I will be pardoned, on account of the extraordinary occurrence, in giving notice to the members of this House that any who feel disposed to contribute to the sufferers by the recent fire in the city of Portland, Maine, can do so by handing in their contributions to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PERHAM,] and he will see that the money is immediately forwarded.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union all debate on the pending section terminate in three minutes.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the gentleman will extend the time.

Mr. MORRILL. I want one minute myself and I want to allow two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but I will modify it so as to allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] five minutes, making eight minutes in all.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] I will say that I consider the policy he proposes a bad one. The same policy was inaugurated in the State of Louisiana. Where we have recognized no foreign language whatever, the population has immediately assimilated and become American. In Canada, on the contrary, where they keep up the French language, there a distinct race has been perpetuated. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, as we proceed, I give notice that I shall move to strike out line nine, "chalk, white, or cliff stone." It was put in the bill under the idea that we had none in the country. I think the chairman will assent to its being stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to this being stricken out.

Mr. KELLEY. I also propose to insert between lines eighteen and nineteen "camwood and palm oil," both raw materials, produced nowhere in this country, nor on this continent, I believe.

Mr. DAWES. I shall move to insert at that place "cat-gut and whip-gut."

Mr. MORRILL. No objection.

Mr. LE BLOND. I give notice that I shall move to strike out lines five, ten to nineteen, inclusive, and twenty-one to twenty-seven, inclusive, leaving line twenty remaining.

Gentlemen say that these articles ought to be upon the free list because they are not produced in this country. I would ask gentlemen if coffee and tea are produced in this country.

Yet those articles are taxed. The articles embraced in this free list are all articles that go into the manufacture of various commodities in this country. Look at the articles in this list exempt from duty. I find here "ivory, unmanufactured." What is that for? To enable men who are manufacturing buttons and such articles to obtain the raw material free of duty. You have here "horns, horn tips, and hoofs." Why put those articles in the free list? It is simply for the purpose of enabling the particular men who perchance live in the eastern States to obtain these articles for manufacturing purposes free of duty, and yet you tax tea and coffee, things that are not produced in this country at all, but which enter into the consumption of all classes of the community.

Then in the latter part of this section it is proposed to exempt wearing apparel that is obtained by persons who go abroad. Now that provision evidently opens the door to frauds.

Mr. MORRILL. That provision is adopted from the Democratic tariff of 1846, and is a provision which has been a law of the United States ever since.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not care whether it was adopted under a Democratic Administration or not. If the gentleman will only allow the entire bill to be made to conform to the Democratic theory upon the subject, I will go with him. But I do not believe in making flesh of one and fish of the other. The truth is that if you undertake to have a tariff for revenue purposes alone, then you should make it with reference to revenue only. But do not discriminate in this manner in favor of the manufacturing interests and against the consumers of the country. This is all I have to say on this point.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. MYERS, admitting free of duty publications in the Slavonic language.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by adding the words, "or in the original Irish or Erse language." [Laughter.]

Mr. MYERS. I have no doubt that would be very satisfactory to my friend from New York, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE's amendment was not agreed to. The amendment of Mr. MYERS was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend by inserting after the last paragraph, "cat-gut and whip-gut."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chalk, white, or cliff stone; cudbear; cutch; cryolite; dragon's blood; diamond powder, dust, or bort; Esparto or Spanish grass; Gambier.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend by striking out the words "chalk, white, or cliff stone."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert after what was last read by the Clerk, "extract of hemlock bark."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horns, horn tips, and hoofs; ivory, unmanufactured; paper waste.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I move to strike out "horns, horn tips, and hoofs."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LE BLOND. In order to make the animal complete, I move to amend so that it will read, "horns, horn tips, hoofs and tails." [Laughter.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to insert after the words "ivory unmanufactured" the words "camwood and palm oil."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting the word "leeches" before the words "paper waste." I am informed by physicians that leeches will be classed as animals, and if not included in the free list they will be subject to the duty on live animals.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN. I move to amend by striking out the words "paper waste," and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "waste, or raw material of whatever kind for manufacture into paper."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by adding to the amendment last adopted the words "and not fit for any other purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fish, fresh caught, for daily consumption.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after what has just been read the following:

Statuary, statues, busts, medallion portraits, paintings, or other works of art, being the production of American artists residing abroad, and which shall be so certified by the artist or by a consul of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting "sumac" after the amendment just adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wearing apparel in actual use and other personal effects, (not merchandise,) professional books, implements, instruments, and tools of trade, occupation, or employment of persons arriving in the United States: Provided, That this exemption shall not be construed to include machinery or other articles imported for use in any manufacturing establishment or for sale.

Mr. DODGE. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph just read the following:

Provided further, That any individual, or association of individuals, importing any object of art for presentation as a gift to the United States Government, or to any State or municipal government, shall be allowed a drawback for the amount of duty paid upon such work so presented.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "States," in line twenty-four, the words "brought here for personal use and not for the purpose of sale;" so that the clause will read as follows:

Wearing apparel in actual use, and other personal effects, (not merchandise,) professional books, implements, instruments, and tools of trade, occupation, or employment of persons arriving in the United States, brought here for personal use and not for the purpose of sale: Provided, &c.

Mr. MORRILL. That amendment is hardly necessary.

Mr. O'NEILL. The gentleman will find, on examination, that it is necessary. Unless some such amendment be adopted large numbers of books as well as other articles designed for sale will be imported in evasion of the duty.

The amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes forty-nine, noes not counted.

Mr. FINCK. I move to amend by inserting after the pending paragraph, "provided, that coffee shall be free from all duty."

The amendment was not agreed to, there being—ayes 20, noes 78.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by striking out in the first line of the pending paragraph the words "and other personal effects." It seems to me that this clause will open the door to extensive frauds upon the revenue.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That, during the period of one year from the passage of this act, there may be imported into the United States, free of duty, any machinery designed solely for and adapted to the manufacture of sugar from beets, including all the preliminary processes requisite therefor, but not including any machinery which may be used for any other manufactures.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend by inserting after the word "beets," in the fifth line of this section, the words "or sorghum;" so that "any machinery designed solely for and adapted to the manufacture of sugar from beets or sorghum" shall be admitted free. The manufacture of sugar from sorghum, one of our western productions, needs to be encouraged as much as anything else; and I think that we should allow the machinery for this purpose to come into the country free of duty.

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes forty-nine, noes not counted.

Mr. SMITH. I move to strike out this section; and I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means why machinery for the manufacture of sugar from beets cannot be used for various other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Because the process is peculiar and requires a peculiar kind of machinery, which is fit for no other purpose. I may remark, also, that the manufacture of sugar from beets has only recently been introduced into this country—only in Illinois and California, perhaps—but I trust that ere long it will be a large and growing interest.

Mr. SMITH. I am enabled to state, from the testimony of those acquainted with this subject—I do not pretend to make the statement from my personal knowledge—that the machinery used for the production of sugar from beets can be used in the manufacture of sugar from almost any other article from which sugar can be made. I believe that other mechanical operations can be performed with this machinery where sugar is the ingredient to be obtained.

Mr. MORRILL. I call the gentleman's attention to this last proviso of the section:

Provided, That this exemption shall not be construed to include machinery or other articles imported for use in any manufacturing establishment or for sale.

Mr. SMITH. It does not follow that machinery absolutely used for this particular purpose cannot be used for the manufacture of sugar out of other materials.

Mr. SMITH's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That a drawback equal to the duties paid be allowed on all imported materials used in manufacturing the following articles when said articles are exported, to wit:

Axes, hatchets, pick-axes, tablecutlery, carpenters' tools, cotton-gins, carriages, mowing and reaping machines, plows, scythes, spades, shovels, hoes, hay and manure forks, boots and shoes made of leather. And a drawback equal to the duties paid be allowed to ship-builders on cordage, iron, copper, chains, and anchors actually used and employed by them in the building and rigging of any ship or steamer, or other vessel built within the limits of the United States, the amount of drawback in all cases to be ascertained and paid in such manner and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Chairman, I will say but a few words on this proposition. It is too late in the session and too late in the afternoon and the weather is too warm to say much; but I cannot refrain from explaining it to the House, as it is one of considerable importance. The policy of this Government has been a settled one from the beginning. Ever since we have had a tariff we have allowed a drawback to encourage and protect articles manufactured for exportation. It is apparent to gentlemen of the House that in no way can we compete in foreign markets with foreign-made manufactures except by allowing drawbacks of duties, and in that way allowing our manufacturers to compete with articles produced in foreign countries which have not been subject to our taxation. This is the only method we can adopt to put our people on an equal footing with foreigners. The first clause of my amendment provides for drawbacks on materials imported used in manufacturing articles for exportation. There is a general law where articles imported are exported in the same condition in which they were when imported; but this goes further, and provides that when articles imported shall enter into the manufacture of articles exported and constitute only a portion of their composition the same rule shall be adopted. It is a just provision, and one rendered necessary by the changes in the tariff made by this bill.

The second clause provides that on articles entering into ship-building a drawback shall be allowed equal to the duties paid as some encouragement against provincial and foreign competition. The cost of ships built in this country is very greatly more than of those built in the British Provinces. Both labor and material are vastly less there. A St. John ship of a thousand tons can be produced for $45,000 in gold, while the same ship would cost a Maine ship-builder $85,000 in currency. This is an enormous difference. But it must be recollected that everything there that enters into the ship is greatly cheaper than with us. We all know that no article of manufacture can be made here for much, if any, less than double the cost before the war. But in addition to other items of enhanced cost with which everybody is familiar, the ship-builder has to contend with the high duties levied upon ship-building materials. I have here a list of duties (in gold) upon articles actually used in building a seven hundred and fifty ton ship in my district in 1865. It was prepared by a careful and intelligent gentleman and is reliable:

76,620 lbs. iron @ 1 cent $\frac{3}{4}$ lb.....	\$766 20
6,200 lbs. spikes @ $\frac{2}{3}$ cents $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.....	155 00
1,500 lbs. spikes, galvanized.....	37 50
9,000 lbs. castings.....	135 00
32,363 lbs. chain cable at $\frac{2}{3}$ cents $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.....	809 07
7,068 lbs. anchors @ $\frac{2}{3}$ cents $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.....	159 00
1,114 lbs. clinch rings @ 2 cents $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.....	22 28
16,990 lbs. hemp cordage @ 3 cents $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.....	509 70
7,535 lbs. manilla @ $\frac{2}{3}$ cents $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.....	138 37
12,261 lbs. yellow metal for sheathing.....	367 82
5,180 yards duck @ $\frac{30}{100}$ cent.....	500 00
860 bushels salt @ 18 cents $\frac{1}{2}$ bushel.....	116 00
Oil, lead, copper bolts, nails, and paint.....	175 30
Sundry smaller items.....	589 90
Total.....	$4,531 14

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. The general principle announced by the gentleman from Maine is a correct one. It is a principle of our laws at the present time; but I hardly think the amendment to the extent proposed is a proper one. If the gentleman had called the attention of the committee to it earlier, and provided for the security of the United States, perhaps it would be correct; but in our complicated system of taxation it would be difficult to say on what materials duties were paid. It would be difficult to tell what iron and what steel had paid duty which entered into the construction of a carriage for exportation. It would be difficult to tell which was foreign leather and which was American leather. There would be so many difficulties in carrying out the provision as suggested by the gentleman from Maine that I think it would be hardly safe to adopt it.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That ten per cent. on the amount of all drawbacks, so allowed, shall be retained for the use of the United States by the collectors paying such drawbacks respectively.

I only desire to say that if this amendment is adopted, there ought to be a provision allowing a certain portion of the duties to be retained in the Treasury. I agree, however, entirely with the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that it would be impossible to carry this provision into effect.

Mr. PIKE. Why?

Mr. ALLISON. Because you cannot tell, it is impossible to tell, whether this steel or iron or other product that enters into these manufactures, was manufactured from articles imported from abroad or from domestic products.

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me hardly fair for the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, at this stage of the session, to make the reply that he has made to me. Early in this session I introduced this proposition and sent it, in the usual way, to the Committee of Ways and Means. I have frequently urged it since, and I have from time to time received assurances from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that he agreed to my proposition. It does seem to me, therefore, a little unfair for him to say to me now that if I had introduced it earlier and urged it more persistently I might have accomplished my purpose. The only other objection made to the amendment is that the Treasury must be protected. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means could not have read the proposition when he made that objection.

It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may establish such rules and regulations as he may deem judicious and as stringent as he pleases; and certainly with proper officers he may explore the history of every article that enters into the construction of these vessels, and he may ascertain precisely the amount of duty each has paid and consequently the amount which should be refunded.

When I was interrupted by the hammer of the Chairman I was stating the great cost of our American vessels, and the reasons for it. It is apparent to the House that our ships cannot compete with foreign ships when the difference of cost is so great, unless a corresponding advantage is in some way given to them in the way of employment. But the House is aware that an American ship has no such advantages. She competes with her great rival on a free-trade basis. The St. John ship comes into the port of New York and gets the same freight and is subject to the same insurance as the American ship. The only privilege the American ship has is that of the coastwise trade, and that is hardly appreciable. From this statement of the committee the House will readily see that the question is whether our ships shall be driven from the ocean or not. They certainly cannot compete at such odds. In the great race for commercial supremacy our old enemy has latterly made alarming strides in advance. Before the war we had five and a half million tons afloat. But our ships were burned by British pirates and our ship-owners were obliged to sell them for protection, until now we have not four and a half million of American tonnage. What we have lost England has gained. Before the war we had gained so largely in the long and arduous struggle that we led. Now we are behindhand more than a million tons. At the present time more than nine tenths of the importations of foreign merchandise into New York are made in foreign bottoms. This is a proposition to enable the ship-builders of this country to do something to restore our supremacy. If this proposition be carried into effect, in ten years the tonnage of this country, instead of being behindhand, will be again in the ascendancy.

It does seem to me that there is no branch of industry that is more worthy of encouragement at the hands of the Government than this. The proposition is simply that the Government shall take its heavy hand off this branch of industry. We ask for no bonus. We ask nothing except partial relief from taxation that is absolutely destroying us for the benefit of wealthy manufacturers, already sufficiently protected.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that there is no objection to my amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. ALLISON's amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "carriages." My remarks applied to carriages rather than ships. I have no great objection to the amendment so far as it relates to ships, but the amendment of the gentleman includes other articles.

Mr. PIKE. I have a word only to say in reply to the gentleman from Vermont, and I trust the committee will bear with me, as I have not trespassed much on their attention during the discussion of this tariff. I wish to say, in reference to the practical working of this measure, that in the early part of the session I took the pains to write to Canada to ascertain the facts in relation to their laws there upon this subject, and I learned that they have found no practical difficulty in enforcing a law like this. They provide that all the materials I have enumerated here shall go into their ships free of duty, and they say that practically it works well. Of course if they continue the policy of thus encouraging ship-building they will outrun us. That is inevitable. We cannot continue to run ships costing twenty-five to fifty per cent. more than provincial ships of the same character.

Mr. HOGAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine a question. Are not the provisions of his amendment to inure exclusively to the benefit of foreigners? You will not allow foreign vessels to come in and receive American registers. Now, why compel our people who use ships to pay all these expenses and all these duties while you build ships to go abroad and compete with our shipping?

Mr. PIKE. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question, for I wish to correct a prevailing error in the House, and that is that American ships have advantages over other ships. I say to the gentleman that there is no one single advantage that an American ship of a thousand tons in the port of New York has over a British ship except this single one of the coastwise trade, which to ships is of almost no importance.

The gentleman from Missouri seems to think that these ships are to be sold foreign in order to obtain the drawback. But it is not so. They are to be held and owned by Americans. The ship differs from other articles in this, that it is constantly exported. Every voyage she goes foreign, and a ship is as much entitled on any fair ground to a drawback as any article we now send foreign, and under the general law obtain a drawback for. My object is simply to build up our mercantile marine. Of course that object would be defeated if, as the gentleman from Missouri supposes, ships should be sold abroad.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word of the amendment, merely that I may have an opportunity to ask the gentleman from Maine. [Mr. PIKE] if the effect of his amendment would not be adverse to the protection of American industry, and if a drawback is to be allowed on all the foreign materials used in ship-building, and on these various articles of manufacture, whether it would not confine the manufacture of these articles entirely to the foreign material, thus shutting out our own domestic articles. I take, for instance, steel. No American steel will be used and no American iron will be used in ship-building; foreign steel and iron would be used if they were to have a drawback.

Mr. PIKE. I wish to say, in reply to that, that here is the case of a manufacture which I think the committee will all concur with me in saying is one of the most worthy manufactures of this country. The question is whether this manufacture, which comes in direct competition with foreign manufactures, shall contribute to other American manufactures, and for their benefit, to its own destruction. I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he should not insist that the manufacturers of iron should grow rich at the expense of the ship-builder. This is a purely American article, owned necessarily under our laws by American citizens, for no foreigner is allowed to own an American vessel. It is produced and owned by American citizens and run for the benefit of American citizens. It is idle to talk about this being a great naval Power unless we have a commercial marine upon the seas. If you pursue your present course you will drive American ships from the ocean and make us, as a maritime Power, second to the great Powers of Europe. You cannot have a great navy unless you first have great tonnage. It is a matter of national importance that our vessels should not be driven from the ocean, but that the harbors of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, instead of being crowded with foreign vessels to carry our products abroad, should be filled with vessels that fly at their mast-heads the stars and stripes. I do hope the committee will appreciate the importance of this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate upon this subject.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PERHAM asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. LYNCH.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 57.

So the motion was not agreed to.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate on the pending section and section sixteen terminate in eight minutes.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend by making it one minute instead of eight minutes.

The motion of Mr. ROSS was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL, as amended, was then agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. PIKE.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I desire to say that no reason has been given why we should protect a special interest by a drawback that does not apply equally to every article of export from any part of the country.

Mr. PIKE. We already give a drawback on whisky.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. How is it with beef, pork, and a thousand things of that kind?

Mr. PIKE. There is no tax on beef and pork.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. PIKE, and upon a division there were—ayes 23, noes 71.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. McRUER. I move to insert after section fifteen the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the proviso in section four of an act entitled "An act amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations," approved March 3, 1865, shall be construed to include no ship, vessel, or steamer, to or from any port in the Sandwich Islands or Society Islands.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in explanation of this amendment—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. By order of the House debate is closed until the seventeenth section is reached.

Mr. McRUER. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That upon the reimportation of articles once exported of the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States, upon which no internal tax has been assessed or paid, or upon which such tax has been paid and refunded by allowance or drawback, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty equal to the tax imposed by the internal revenue laws upon such articles.

Mr. HOGAN. I move to amend by inserting after the words "and paid a duty equal to," the words "such drawback and."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I perceive that it will be impossible to get through this bill to-day; I therefore move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. PRICE, (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. INGERSOLL: The petition of James A. Tait, John S. Slater, and 150 others, working men of the city of Washington, asking for the establishment of a public park.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of Horatio Stone for balance due him for the execution of the statue in marble of John Hancock for the Senate wing of the Capitol building, under instructions from the Library Committee.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of the "Slavonic Fraternity" of the United States, stating that twenty thousand of their people, speaking from fifteen to eighteen idioms, are residents of the United States; that no books in their language or any of its idioms are published here, and asking that books and publications in the Slavonic languages may be admitted free of duty.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 9, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, in accordance with the order of the Senate directing the Chair to fill the vacancy on the committee on ventilation, appointed Mr. KIRKWOOD.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COWAN presented seven petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for an increase of the tariff so as to afford better protection to American industry; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of William Baker, praying for an extension of his patent for an improved window-blind hinge; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DOOLITTLE presented a memorial of citizens of Washington, remonstrating against any action of Congress modifying the conditions of the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, either in granting them larger powers or relieving them from conditions voluntarily assumed; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GUTHRIE presented the petition of A. H. Markland, praying for compensation for property destroyed by United States troops at Paducah, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 211) to improve and enlarge the arsenal grounds at St. Louis, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 412) authorizing and directing the sale of the property of the United States at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 474) for the relief John C. McFerran, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 116) to make compensation for damages to property held for religious and charitable purposes within loyal States, and for other purposes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred sundry petitions and memorials praying for compensation for supplies furnished and damages done to property during the late war and for the payment of claims growing out of the Indian war in Oregon in 1855 and 1856, asked to be discharged from their further consideration and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Miss Sue Murphy, praying for compensation for the destruction of property belonging to her which was used by the Government in the erection of fortifications at Decatur, Alabama, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 413) for the relief of Miss Sue Murphy, of Decatur, Alabama. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the expediency of providing a uniform and effective mode of securing the election of Senators in Congress by the Legislatures of the several States, reported a bill (S. No. 414) to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress; which was read and passed to a second reading.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOWARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 125) granting the right of way through military reserves to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its branches; which was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask leave to introduce a bill without previous notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the Socol ranch, in the State of California."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will state that I introduce this bill by request. I did not draw the bill myself and know nothing about the merits of it; but I was requested to present it and move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present introduction of this bill?

Mr. CONNESS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it lies over under the rule; and this will be considered as a notice, and the Senator can to-morrow or on some subsequent day introduce the bill.

MEDICAL STATISTICS.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate a report of the medical statistics collected during the war in the Bureau of the Provost Marshal General by Surgeon J. H. Baxter as soon as such report can be compiled and prepared for presentation by him.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (S. No. 343) to quiet land titles in California, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 461) granting a pension to Ann Sheehy;

A bill (H. R. No. 464) for the relief of John Gordon;

A bill (H. R. No. 495) for the relief of Mary A. Patrick;

A bill (H. R. No. 616) for the relief of Lucinda Gates;

A bill (H. R. No. 641) for the relief of Charles M. Stout, late a second lieutenant in company E, seventh regiment Pennsylvania Reserve corps;

A bill (H. R. No. 684) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. McManus, widow of Captain Andrew McManus, late of the sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mercie E. Scattergood;

A bill (H. R. No. 699) for the relief of James L. Perham;

A bill (H. R. No. 700) for the benefit of John W. Jones;

A bill (H. R. No. 703) for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Lynch;

A bill (H. R. No. 704) for the relief of Joel Farley;

A bill (H. R. No. 705) for the relief of George W. Bush;

A bill (H. R. No. 740) for the relief of Matilda J. Monroe;

A bill (H. R. No. 743) amendatory of an act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of Edgar T. Harris.

PILOTS AND PILOT REGULATIONS.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 780) relating to pilots and pilot regulations, to report it back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. As it is a bill of, but a single section, and there can be no objection to it whatever, I should be glad to have it considered at this time.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that no regulations or provisions shall be adopted by any State of the United States of America which shall make any discrimination in the rate of pilotage or half pilotage between vessels sailing between the ports of one State, and vessels sailing between the ports of different States, or any discrimination against vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, or against national vessels of the United States, and all existing regulations or provisions making any such discrimination are annulled and abrogated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. NYE. As chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills I find that the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, has come back by some mistake with eight or nine of the amendments unacted upon, as appears by the report of the committee of conference. I think it proper to call the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. CONNESS. I was a member of the committee of conference on that bill. The Senator from Michigan, now absent, [Mr. CHANDLER,] was its chairman, and the Senator from Maine, to-day present, [Mr. MORRILL,] being then absent on account of illness, was a member of the committee. The preparation of the report devolved particularly upon the chairman. By some means there is an error; but the error consists simply in the amendments agreed upon not being entirely recounted. I move that the report and bill be recommitted to the committee of conference for correction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate must first reconsider its vote adopting the report before it will be before the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. I make that motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I now move to recommit it to the committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

A message was subsequently received from the House of Representatives announcing that they had reconsidered the vote adopting the report of the committee of conference, and had recommitted the bill and the amendments to the committee of conference.

PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 101.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 101) for the relief of certain officers of the Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution has been read and reported as from the Committee of the Whole, and the question now is on concurring in the amendments made to the resolution as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to further amend it in accordance with an understanding with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I move first to insert in line ten, after the word "who," the words "if not killed in battle."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move further to amend in line twelve, after the word "officer," by inserting "or to his legal representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to amend also in line thirteen, after the word "emoluments," by inserting "of his rank."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the reading of the joint resolution now as amended.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That in every case in which a commissioned officer actually entered on duty as such commissioned officer, but by reason of being killed in battle, capture by the enemy, or other cause beyond his control, and without fault or neglect of his own, was not mustered within a period of not less than thirty days from acceptance of appointment and actual entry upon duty, and who, if not killed in battle, was afterward regularly mustered into the service of the United States, the pay department shall allow to such officer full pay and emoluments from the date on which such officer, or to his legal representatives full pay and emoluments of his rank, from the date such officer actually entered upon his duty, deducting from the amount paid in accordance with this resolution all pay actually received by such officer for such period.

Mr. WILSON. I move to strike out in line twelve the words "or to his legal representatives," with a view of putting in an additional section. The pay department does not pay the heirs or legal representatives. That has to go to the Second Auditor.

The Secretary read the section proposed to be inserted, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the heirs or legal representatives of any officer whose muster into service has been or shall be amended hereby, shall be entitled to receive the arrears of pay due such officer or the pension provided by law for the corps in which such officer is mustered under the provisions of the first section of this resolution.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that the pay department does not pay the heirs of officers. That matter is settled in another department of the Government, and I submit this amendment with a view of having it correct. I propose to strike out the words "or to his legal representatives" in line twelve of the resolution, and to add this new section to cover the idea which is intended to be conveyed in the first.

Mr. RAMSEY. I was not aware that they did not pay the legal representatives. Are you not mistaken about that?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM HICKEY.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Committee on Contingent Expenses, to whom was referred a resolution to pay to the legal representatives of William Hickey, late Chief Clerk of the Senate, his funeral expenses and the balance of his salary for the year in which he died, have instructed me to report back the resolution with the recommendation that it pass. I suppose there will be no objection to the resolution, and as it is one that ought to be passed, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to have it passed now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid to the legal representatives of William Hickey, late Chief Clerk of the Senate, $300 to pay his funeral expenses, and that they be paid the balance of his salary as Chief Clerk for the year in which he died.

The resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THADDEUS HYATT.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 367.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 367) to extend the time of letters-patent issued to Thaddeus Hyatt.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know that there is any propriety in making an opposition to this bill, as it has come from the Committee on Patents and will probably pass the Senate; but I feel it due to myself to say that I disapprove of it in toto. I doubt very much whether it would not be wise in us to repeal the present system of patent laws, which result in monopolies very injurious to the country, or, if we intend to give relief to individuals, give it on an entirely different plan. But I have no doubt at all that if we do maintain that system we ought to let it take its course, and whenever a patent has run out and large amounts have been amassed from it, not come in here and tax the community for ten, fifteen, or twenty years in addition for the benefit of a single individual.

Now, if I am correctly informed, this patent, in this case, shows under the investigations of the committee a net earning of nearly one hundred thousand dollars for an invention that is very trivial in its character as far as inventive power goes, certainly, and that is very necessary to the free use of the community. I, for one, am not willing to tax the community that I represent for another term of fourteen years for the benefit of such an invention. I trust the bill will not be passed.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Missouri, I believe, makes the objection to this bill that he assures me he makes to all bills of the same sort. That is, he opposes all bills granting patents and then granting extensions. The fact about this patent is, that it was issued many years ago. In the first seven years the inventor did not get anybody to use it. The second seven years he got it in use through a manufacturing company, and the last seven years it has been somewhat remunerative. The fact is that what the community are now using is covered by the old invention, and the old invention is not what he uses, but that patent is the only protection he has for the invention that he does use. I know this case very thoroughly, because I have been connected with Mr. Hyatt for many years, and I know this is a case of very peculiar merit, so far as his own condition is concerned.

Mr. BROWN. I have no feeling in this case that would lead me to oppose this particular patent more than any other as regards the persons who are involved in it. On the contrary, my feelings would perhaps incline me to look with favor (if I could so look upon anything of the kind) upon this measure for the benefit of the person interested; but I think the principle is a wrong one. I think the evidence brought out by the committee shows that the receipts from this patent have been amply sufficient to cover the invention, and that there is nothing of merit in the application at the present time for an extension. It is simply levying a tax upon the community under another name for the benefit of a single individual.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator spoke of his constituents. His own constituents have never paid a cent. They have used the patent without paying the inventor one cent. There is nothing collected to-day at St. Louis.

Mr. BROWN. I presume they have paid as much as any other constituency if they have used it.

Mr. POMEROY. No; the articles have been manufactured in St. Louis without Mr. Hyatt getting any commission on them. What little they do use there have been manufactured without any benefit to him.

Mr. BROWN. So much the better reason why it should be continued so.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand the objection of the Senator from Missouri is of that broad and general character which is equally applicable to every bill of this kind. If objections that were of a special character were adduced against this bill, I should certainly be willing to go into the argument in its favor, and not otherwise; and yet there was one remark which the Senator let drop that I think deserves a passing comment. He spoke of this as a "trivial" invention. Against his accidental judgment, thus hazarded, I would adduce the official testimony of the Commissioner of Patents, who, when called upon to review this patent officially, expressed himself as follows:

"I am entirely satisfied that Hyatt's invention, whether it was the result of a high degree of inventive genius or required but a very small amount of ingenuity, is a very valuable one to the public, and has proved a source of more advantage and profit to them than to the inventor himself."

Sir, there is official testimony that this invention is a very valuable one to the public. Now, sir, I might go further. I might go into details and show the extent of its value to the public.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is it?

Mr. SUMNER. It is the vault lights which really have only been brought into use in a few of the large cities, chiefly in New York, a little in Boston, and a little in Philadelphia; but, however, I will not occupy the time of the Senate upon it.

Mr. COWAN. I will only say that I think the honorable Senator from Missouri misapprehends the question when he asserts that this is a tax upon the community for the benefit of Mr. Hyatt. That is not the question. The question is whether at this time the community is entitled to the benefit of that which was Mr. Hyatt's, which he invented and which he discovered, and which, for aught we know about it, the community never would otherwise have possessed. That is the question. The community are not compelled to use Mr. Hyatt's invention; but if they do use it and are content to pay him a reasonable compensation for it, I think he ought to have that compensation until he has been remunerated fully for the service which he has conferred upon the community. That is this case, and I would say further that this is not per se an extension of the patent. The bill merely authorizes Mr. Hyatt to go before the Commissioner of Patents and there make out his case the same as though he were applying under the law which now prevails for the first extension.

Mr. BROWN. I believe that the patent laws go upon the principle that the term provided in them shall be a sufficient compensation for the invention. Now, I have heard no one reason adduced here this morning why we shall go beyond the present law, why we shall depart from the present system and violate what is the system, so to speak, in behalf of this individual. I believe it is confessed on all sides that a very large amount of money has been realized by this invention. If I am not mistaken, the patent has already been extended once, and the intention now is to extend it by special act for an additional term of fourteen years.

Mr. POMEROY, and others. Seven years.

Mr. BROWN. Seven years. So far as anything has been adduced to show why it should be done, it strikes me as the very best reason why it should not. The Senator from Massachusetts in commenting on my remarks speaks of the great value of this invention, how largely it is coming into use, how much it is needed by the public everywhere. Well, sir, I think that is a reason why we should care a little for the public interest in this matter, especially if the individual has been compensated, and compensated more than ninety-nine out of a hundred inventions ever get. I am opposed to the bill in toto, and I hope it will not be passed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Missouri, as he has examined the bill, how long the special privilege has been enjoyed and what have been the profits made. What is the invention?

Mr. BROWN. It is an invention for lighting vaults by the insertion of glass in the pavements. I think the report shows that something like ninety-six thousand dollars has been realized from the invention heretofore. The chairman of the committee can state how long the patent has been enjoyed.

Mr. COWAN. From the evidence which was before the committee it appeared that during the time that Mr. Hyatt enjoyed the benefit of his invention, the first fourteen years that he enjoyed it, the patent realized hardly anything, from the difficulty which he had in introducing it into public use. During the last few years he has realized, perhaps, something near one hundred thousand dollars; but upon considering the great value of this improvement to the community, particularly in large cities, seeing that it makes available the very foot-walks for all the purposes of store-rooms and shops of various kinds, and that it can be applied to other purposes usefully, the committee thought he had not been compensated for the value of the invention to the community. It might have been ample compensation for divers inventions, but not for one of such magnitude as this and one of such great importance to large cities; and therefore it was that we thought he ought to have an opportunity to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for another extension of seven years, as it is really only six or seven years that his discovery has been introduced into general use.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. When I first came to Congress these applications were frequent. I was on the Committee on Patents for a time, and I was astonished at the representations made. In some cases patents popularly supposed to be exceedingly valuable after they had been enjoyed for a term of fourteen years, were, on proof to the Commissioner that they had not been as profitable as they ought to be, extended for seven years. It was then a very common thing to come here with applications to get seven years in addition. This made very considerable confusion constantly from the fact that rights were assigned in them in different places, and the renewal for seven years was held by the courts as a general rule not to apply to assignments, so that the patentee was reinvested in all his powers and held the whole. So far as I observed, those really valuable patents which had paid well were the only ones really in regard to which there came applications for renewal. Finally Congress became satisfied of that and refused to grant any extension after the period of twenty-one years; they thought that was long enough. That would seem to be enough to secure to a man a reward for his brains and labor. He got twenty-one years, and that was thought to be quite sufficient, and even fourteen years, in many cases, was found to be so. As I have understood, it was a matter of entire understanding, undisputed for a considerable time, that this Mr. Hyatt had made a fortune, a very comfortable fortune.

Mr. SUMNER. A mistake.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He so represented himself, at any rate, and his friends represented him to be a man in very easy circumstances. He lived certainly as if he were during the time, and I really believe he has been sufficiently paid for his invention, which after all is a very simple thing in itself. It costs nothing of any consequence in its construction; it is a pure discovery rather than an invention; and out of it the profit of the invention is clear. I do not see any reason in this particular case for an extension, and it is very seldom that there is a case where an invention is profitable and valuable that it should be renewed beyond the time fixed by the law, which is ample and generous.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Has he had twenty-one years?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose he has.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. He has had one extension.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was originally fourteen years, and one extension would make it twenty-one years, and it is long enough to keep a thing of this sort, which has come into general use, from the public. The provision made by Congress in the original law was a very generous one in point of time, and has resulted, in the case of beneficial inventions, always very profitably to the inventor.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator has not stated that during seven years not one man in the United States would take the patent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is very frequently the case, but the patentees make it up afterward.

Mr. POMEROY. During the next seven years no man would make any of these lights except what he manufactured himself.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How many years ago is it since Mr. Hyatt was before the Senate?

Mr. POMEROY. During the John Brown trial.

Mr. ANTHONY. Just seven years.

Mr. FESSENDEN. At that time he was in the full tide of successful experiment and was reputed to be a man who had made a very considerable sum of money.

Mr. POMEROY. That was another matter.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; the subject of these very lights; and he has made a great deal of money out of it, and I think he can afford to get along after having the patent for twenty-one years. I think the policy adopted by Congress at that time was a good one and just to the public, and as has been remarked by my friend from Missouri, we should look out a little for the public, and I am disposed to look out for the public on applications for the extension of a patent in this or any other case. The argument in such cases usually has been that the patent has been pirated and the inventor has been put to the expense of law suits, which have consumed the profits. I have not heard anything of that sort alleged in this particular case. It is unquestionably true that six years ago, if that was the time Mr. Hyatt was here, he was reputed to have made a good deal of money out of his patent. It had then come into general use and it was sought for. You can see it wherever you go in our cities. I therefore, under the circumstances, shall vote against this extension.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the Senator from Maine is entirely mistaken when he says that Mr. Hyatt has enriched himself.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If he has not it is because he has misspent his money. He has had great receipts.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says that if he has not he has misspent his money. On that I have no special knowledge, and I do not wish to introduce that element into the case. I should prefer to argue the case on the facts which we have before us, and on which we can absolutely rely. Now, here is a statement from Mr. Hyatt himself.

Mr. BROWN. I will ask the Senator if any report has been made by the committee on this case.

Mr. SUMNER. I had not the honor of being on the committee.

Mr. COWAN. There is no printed report.

Mr. BROWN. Then there is nothing before us to show on what we are acting.

Mr. SUMNER. I have before me a statement of Mr. Hyatt himself, in which I place absolute confidence. He says:

"I may add, and I think justice to myself requires from me a statement of the fact that I am not to-day the fortunate possessor of $110,000, nor the quarter of it. I know, indeed, that it is no part of the argument for me to say that I have never even received the half of it, but it is a part of the fact."

There is the statement of this individual, whose word I have never known to be impugned, a gentleman whom I know personally, for whose character and veracity, so far as I may be permitted to do, I vouch absolutely. I have complete confidence in anything that Mr. Hyatt states on his own knowledge. He states himself, as a fact, that he has never received even half of this sum which is attributed to him. And now, sir, the question occurs, has he received a sufficient reward or compensation for his patent? That leads to the question of the value of the invention. On that I have already adduced the very strong testimony of the Commissioner of Patents, who gives it as his positive opinion that the invention is of very great and peculiar value; but it needs no official testimony for Senators to see that it is of great and peculiar value. The character of the invention itself is so obvious, it goes so to the understanding the moment you begin to look at it, that no one can hesitate to say that it is of great and peculiar value. It may be regarded, as I understand it, in two different aspects: first, as a light to cellars and bringing into use cellars and underground apartments which before this invention were absolutely useless, but which are now brought practically into the light of day, so that immense spaces in all our large cities, and especially in New York, are now used for merchandise which formerly were absolutely idle, yielding no profit of any kind. Thus an immense amount of taxable property is brought forward to contribute to the expenses of the Government. From the memorandum I have in my hand I read this statement on that point:

"At the present hour, too, there is lying below the sidewalks of the great city of New York taxable real estate to the value of $5,000,000, upon which the city government collects taxes to the extent of $40,000 a year, which the owners derive from it an annual revenue of $160,000 more."

Thus in the city of New York alone that vast amount of property is brought to the light of day, if I may so express myself, and made to contribute through taxation to the resources of this Government.

Then this light is applicable in another way. It is used in roofs as a covering there, and is fire-proof, and through its fire-proof character buildings and merchandise of vast amount have been protected from conflagration. For instance here is a statement on that head:

"At this hour more than one hundred million dollars' worth of merchandise is nightly protected in the city of New York against fire and burglary by my vault lights, manufactured into illuminating roofs, which cover the rear extensions of the principal stores of warehouses in that city."

These are the two different aspects in which this invention may be seen. In each aspect its value is apparent. Thus in each does it contribute to the resources of the city or place where it is, enlarging the taxable property and also contributing to the wealth of the owners. I think, therefore, I do not go too far when I say that such an invention is valuable in its character.

Now, the question is whether the inventor has received enough from the patent. It appears, and no one I believe will question it—the chairman of the committee certainly will sustain me in what I say—that during the first seven years he actually received nothing, so that those seven years may as it were be counted out. Then came the second seven years when he began to get his invention into use, but during that time he received little more than what belonged to him as a manufacturer; he received very little on account of what is sometimes called the "royalties" from the invention. Then the patent was renewed for seven years, and during that time he and all concerned received some $120,000, out of which not one half has come to him.

Under those circumstances he comes before Congress asking an extension of his patent for another seven years. Now, sir, it does seem to me that in making this request he is perfectly reasonable. The first seven years of his patent were nothing; the second seven years were very little; it is only during the third seven years that he has begun to receive anything; and what he has received, I submit, is a very small consideration for the invention that he has bestowed on the community. I think, sir, if we give him another seven years we shall do nothing more than follow out the principle of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to legislate for the benefit of inventors.

I do not know that I can add anything more to this very simple statement. I put the case on its essential simplicity; and I put it also on the statements which I have read from the inventor himself, in which I place implicit confidence.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The whole argument in this case seems to me to be very strange. Everybody knows the character of this patent; it is very simple. It is known that patents for the most simple things sometimes are of most value. The man who lights upon it first, by the exercise of his mind, his intellect, and his ingenuity is entitled to the benefit of it. But the argument which is usually adduced in these cases for an extension of time is that the inventions are of a character that require a great deal of time and a great deal of ingenuity and repeated failures, long expenditure of labor and of money, too, in order to bring them to a state of perfection in which they are valuable. Now, that argument does not exist in this case.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. Here is the statement of Mr. Hyatt on that point. He says:

"I began this thing at eighteen years of age; made the invention public at twenty-six; worked industriously at it until I was forty-three; and now I stand within the shadow of my fiftieth year."

Beginning it at eighteen.

Mr. BROWN. And receiving the benefit of it all that time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How he began it and how he worked upon it does not appear. The idea might have entered into his brain at that time and it might not. I do not dispute anything the Senator says about his entire confidence in Mr. Hyatt. I only say I have not that entire confidence in the statement of a person interested when there is no other evidence in the case except the mere question of the value of the invention which would induce me to predicate action as a legislator upon that alone.

It will be recollected, too, that the argument of its great use to the public works the other way. If the patentee has had the benefit of it for twenty-one years, and it is of really such use to the public, the Government has finished its contract with him under the law. It has given him his twenty-one years. He certainly cannot pretend to have lost money. He admits that he has received about fifty thousand dollars, at any rate. One would think that was tolerably good pay out of an invention—more than I ever received, or expect to receive, for the exercise of my brain on all subjects; to be sure, not so valuable as Mr. Hyatt's glass invention; but I should be amazingly well satisfied if I had laid up $50,000 out of all the intellectual researches I have been able to make.

Mr. SUMNER. Or received?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Well, "or received." I do not know but that I have received that much. One would think that tolerably good pay, for he has received it all within five or six years, according to the statement made here. If we renew this patent, we tax every man who has occasion to use this invention. Fourteen years is the time fixed by law, and a man may get seven years more, under the law, if he can show that he has not received adequate remuneration during the fourteen. Mr. Hyatt has had his seven years' extension, and everybody admits that during the last seven years he has been receiving ample remuneration; everybody knows it. How could you walk the streets of a city without seeing this in use everywhere, and that it is very valuable?

Now, sir, there is something a little singular about this bill. I do not see that there is any evidence in the case whatever. We have no written report, in the first place. In old times, when I belonged to the Committee on Patents, it would be considered that the renewal of a patent for seven years, especially one important to the public, was a matter to be set forth at length. The committee were to investigate them; they were on their responsibility to state the case, to state what the invention cost, what its nature was, what its character was with regard to expenditure, and what had been received; to examine and satisfy themselves upon evidence. But instead of having any report from the committee we have one or two gentlemen who tell us their conclusions, bottomed entirely on the printed statement of Mr. Hyatt himself. Because the Senator from Massachusetts has confidence in Mr. Hyatt's statement which he has written and printed, therefore we should seriously affect the rights of the whole public in this valuable invention, necessary now to the use of people in cities, simply upon the statement of the party himself, after he has had his twenty-one years and after his last seven have been so highly remunerative and productive as they must necessarily have been, and are admitted to have been!

Mr. COWAN. The honorable Senator will allow me to ask him what other statement he would have as to a man's status in a case of this kind except his own production of his own account.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does he produce testimony showing how much it cost him from those who are acquainted with him? He has not done everything with his own hand. He can tell us how much one of these lights cost him, and what his charge was; he can show his books; he can present something besides the printed paper he sends here to Congress to which he signs his name, and that not under oath. Does he expect on that alone to get a valuable patent, affecting the interests of so many people of the United States renewed, giving him the exclusive privilege for another seven years? I think it is unsafe and unwise to do it, and for that reason I am opposed to it throughout.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of Saturday.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we can get a vote on this bill, and I hope my colleague will give way.

Mr. WILSON. If the matter is to be further debated, I will not give way.

Mr. BROWN. It certainly will be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business can be laid aside by unanimous consent or postponed by a vote.

Mr. WILSON. I will consent to allow a very few minutes further if we can take a vote.

Mr. BROWN. I object to limiting discussion upon the bill by any such agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only then be done by a vote. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move to postpone the special order?

Mr. WILSON. I cannot agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is before the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I would give way, but I understand the matter is to be debated. I understand the Senator from Indiana proposes to debate it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was going to say a word or two, but if a vote can be had I will not occupy any time.

Mr. WILSON. Then I will wait a few minutes.

Mr. BROWN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order can be laid aside by unanimous consent; but objection is made, and it requires, therefore, a vote.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the regular order be laid aside informally to proceed with this bill.

Mr. CLARK. It cannot be laid aside informally when there is objection.

Mr. SUMNER. I move, then, that it be laid aside in order to proceed with the pending question.

Mr. BROWN. I am not disposed to press my disposition to debate this question if the Senate will come to a vote, and let us have the vote by yeas and nays upon it. I am willing it should be taken.

Mr. SUMNER and Mr. POMEROY. Very well. Let us have the vote by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the further consideration of the bill before the Senate be postponed for the present.

Mr. SUMNER. I suppose the motion cannot be put in that form; but I think it can be done by unanimous consent if a vote is to be taken on Mr. Hyatt's bill.

Mr. WILSON. Let it be done informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection? No objection being made, the special order is laid over, and Senate bill No. 367 is now before the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was going to say something upon this bill, but Senators desire a vote and I yield the floor.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. BROWN. On the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Conness, Davis, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Trumbull, and Wiley—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Wright, and Yates—13.

So the bill was passed.

MILITARY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I now call up the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is now before the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. The bill for the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara has been lying here some time owing to the necessary absence of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL.] To-day he appears in the Senate; and if the Senator from Massachusetts, who has the right to the floor, would assent to it, I should be glad to take up that bill.

Mr. WILSON. I think the Senator hardly ought to ask me to give this bill up. It comes up in its order, and I am anxious to act upon it. I think we can act upon it in a very short time. The Senator knows I would give way to him if I could.

Mr. HOWE. I shall not submit a motion. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 401) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, which had been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia with various amendments.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia was in line four of section one, to strike out "six" before "regiments of cavalry" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the section read:

That the military peace establishment of the United States shall hereafter consist of five regiments of artillery, twelve regiments of cavalry, forty-five regiments of infantry, the professors and corps of cadets of the United States Military Academy, and such other forces as shall be provided for by this act, to be known as the Army of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out all of the third section after the enacting clause, in the following words:

That the six regiments of cavalry provided for by this act shall consist of the six regiments now in service, each of which in addition to its present organization shall have one veterinary surgeon, whose compensation shall be $100 per month. The grade of company commissary sergeant of cavalry is hereby abolished and cavalry regiments shall hereafter have but one hospital steward, and the adjutants, quartermasters, and commissaries shall be extra lieutenants selected from the first or second lieutenants of the regiment.

And in lieu thereof, to insert:

That to the six regiments of cavalry now in service there shall be added six regiments, two of which shall be composed of colored men, having the same organization as is now provided by law for cavalry regiments, with the addition of one veterinary surgeon to each regiment, whose compensation shall be $100 per month, but the grade of company commissary sergeant of cavalry is hereby abolished. The original vacancies in the grade of first and second lieutenant and two thirds of the original vacancies in each of the grades above that of first lieutenant shall be filled by selection from among the officers and soldiers of volunteer cavalry, and one third from officers of the regular Army, all of whom shall have served two years in the field during the war, and have been distinguished for capacity and good conduct; four of the companies from each regiment may be armed and drilled as infantry at the discretion of the President, and each cavalry regiment shall hereafter have but one hospital steward, and the regimental adjutants, quartermasters, and commissaries shall hereafter be extra lieutenants selected from the first or second lieutenants of the regiment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. The amendment proposes to have regiments of negroes, otherwise called "colored cavalry." Where is the necessity for that? Cannot white men be found to enter into your Army and compose your regiments of cavalry and infantry? Are there not hundreds of thousands of white men in this country who have for the last three or four years been engaged as soldiers in the Army, some of them as members of cavalry regiments, seeking employment every day? Time and again, since the commencement of this Congress, I have had white men who have been employed in the Army come to me begging me to look for employment for them, even as laborers, to do the hardest kind of work, that they might get bread and clothing. Do you suppose if the opportunity was given to those men to enter into the Army again that they would not prefer doing so to being starved or being kept out of employment? There are hundreds and thousands of white men who have been engaged in your Army who would gladly accept the place of soldiers in the regular Army. I presume there can be no doubt, if it was known generally to the men who have been soldiers that there would be an opportunity for them to enlist in the Army under this bill, they would do so. If enlistment offices were opened throughout the United States plenty of such men would be found. It may be said there are offices open now. It may be so in some localities, but it is not so all over the United States. I undertake to say that in my own State a regiment of white soldiers can be found who would gladly enter the Army, men out of employment, men seeking employment.

If it be true, and I assume it to be true, that it is perfectly within your power to fill up every regiment in your Army with white soldiers, where is the necessity of saying in this bill that so many regiments shall be composed of negro soldiers? Are they better soldiers? Have they manifested more valor on the field of battle than white soldiers? Would they carry your standard aloft more proudly and gallantly than your white soldiers? If not, where is the necessity for saying positively in this bill that so many regiments shall be composed of these negro soldiers?

Mr. President, if the object of Congress is, and certainly it should be, to restore kind feelings and friendly relations between the different sections of the country, they should do nothing which in itself is calculated to aggravate feelings already excited or to arouse feelings which may now be dormant. What would be the effect if you were to send negro regiments into the community in which I live to brandish their swords and exhibit their pistols and their guns? Their very presence would be a stench in the nostrils of the people from whom I come. A negro soldier riding up and down the streets and through your country, dressed in a little brief authority, to insult white men! I have no objection to soldiers of the regular Army being stationed in any community in which I live. In former years, when I was from home, in other States, I have been in the neighborhood of garrisons, and I have seen the soldiers generally well behaved; but if you were to send and quarter among white people a regiment of negro soldiers, to march into their villages and to deport themselves as it is most likely they would, what would be the consequence? You must expect collisions. If gentlemen who are so anxious to have negroes in the Army of the United States will take them among themselves, and provide in the bill that they shall be stationed in their section of country, I have no objection; but if the object is to station them in my State, I object to it. There is no necessity for it. I presume we shall have some of these colored gentry, if they are made a part of the Army, in my State. The present head of the War Department has not been so unmindful of my State as to debar us the pleasure of soldiery once in two years, about election time. Suppose that his divineness—or divinity I believe the Secretary of State would have him to be—should take it into his head to send into our State, when election day comes again, a regiment of negro soldiers to guard our polls, do you suppose there is a white man in the State that would not assist in driving them from the polls? If there is, he is unworthy of being a Delawarian.

Sir, it is peace that I want. I know that in some sections of this country, just as sure as you send these negro soldiers among the people, there will be strife, ill blood, bad feeling; and that this sending of such soldiers into some communities will lead to nothing but outrage and bloodshed. If you want a standing army, large or small, give us white soldiers and there will be no complaint; but, sir, you must know that in many sections of this country sending negro soldiers and quartering them in the midst of particular communities would engender strife, and in all probability would lead to bloodshed.

It may be said that I have an antipathy, a hatred, to this class of people. It is not true. I do not speak from unkindness toward them. I believe I think as well of them as the rest of you do. I know them as well. But it is for peace, quietness, and the observance of public order that I want your Army to be filled up with white men. It will be time enough when you cannot get white soldiers in your regular Army to appeal to the patriotism of this superior negro race; but until there is failure in procuring white soldiers, peace, harmony, and kind feeling demand that the negroes should not be incorporated into the regular Army, but that it should be filled up from our own race. I do not wish to argue this question; I presume it would be of no use to do it; but I have felt it due to myself to make this objection.

Mr. WADE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "two" where it occurs and inserting "four," so that there shall be four regiments of colored cavalry. If this amendment shall be adopted one third of the cavalry force under this bill will be composed of colored troops. I offer the amendment for this reason: in time of peace it is exceedingly difficult, we always found it so, and will find it so again, to keep your white soldiers from leaving the Army. They are, unfortunately, more apt to desert, as the history of the war, and especially as the experience of the Army after the war has over shown. As an illustration, in Kentucky there were two regiments of colored troops stationed for a long time and about two regiments of white troops. I believe after the war, before those troops were mustered out nearly one fourth of the white troops deserted, while not more than one or two of the colored troops ever deserted. They were quite as efficient as the white troops, as well disciplined, as formidable in the field, as effective in any service that they were put to.

So far as this argument about conciliation is concerned, the time for conciliation is gone when there is a necessity for stationing the Army in a portion of the country. They are not put there as peace-makers, nor as conciliators. They are put there to put down all wrongful opposition to the Government. If it is necessary to station troops anywhere to keep the peace in this nation, I do not care how obnoxious they are to those who undertake to stir up sedition. I would not vote for raising any troops if it were not necessary that they should be stationed in certain localities for the purpose of maintaining the peace of the country. They are expensive. It is a very disagreeable necessity that compels us to increase our Army at all; but if it is necessary, as we are told it is, for fear of insurrections in divers parts of the country, I care but little whether the insurrectionists like the kind of troops that we station there to keep them in order or not. We do not put them there to please them. They would be better pleased to have neither white nor black soldiers; but we look to the best interests of the country, and consider which class of troops can be kept there best in time of peace, which can be the most easily raised, and which remain the most permanently at their post. The one class is always to be depended upon just as well as the other, for our experience in the last war shows that the colored troops fought just as well as the white troops did; all of them fought well, and nobody could complain of them. As I have said, they are as efficient; they are easier to be got; they remain on hand better; and therefore we should increase the proportion to one third at least; I do not think it will be any too many.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, what is the title of the bill? I ask the question, because I want to call the attention of the Senate to the application of the remarks of the honorable Senator from Ohio to the real matter before the Senate. The title of this bill is, "A bill to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States." It is not a bill with reference to the military establishment in time of war or insurrection; and therefore the remarks of the Senator about stationing these troops among the people to keep down insurrection and rebellion, &c., have no application. The bill refers to a time of peace. Now, sir, in time of peace—it has been thus so from the foundation of the Government to the present hour—you have had your barracks in different parts of the country where the regular Army has been stationed, not for the purpose of keeping down insurrection there, but in order that in case of war they might be ready to serve their country. The object of this bill, I apprehend, is to have a regular army of a certain number of men who shall be stationed in different parts of the country, this being a time of peace, not with a view of any present existing difficulty, but that in case of war of any kind, in the event of anything happening that might require their services, they may be on hand in order to serve their country.

The honorable Senator does not care whether he pleases the community in which these troops are stationed or not; but I do. If I thought that the selection of one class of troops and stationing them in a particular community would be particularly offensive to that portion of the country, whereas the stationing of a different class would not be objectionable, I would consult the feelings of the community where the troops were to be stationed, and would see that I did nothing to engender strife or to cause disquietude.

Mr. President, from the foundation of the Government up to the present time, or at least until the late civil war, it was never deemed necessary or proper to have negroes in your regular Army. The men who founded your Government, the men who preserved the foundations of the Government up to the late civil war, never felt it incumbent upon them, or consistent with the duty, or consistent with the dictates of their judgment, to employ this class of people in the regular Army. Where is the necessity for it now? None can be shown. I do not presume that any one will contend that it is impossible to fill up your regular Army with white men who will enlist in it. The number of soldiers to be enlisted is not so large but that the amount can be readily had of white men.

But the honorable Senator seems to think that negro troops will not be so apt to desert as white troops. Mr. President, that certainly is making a distinction in favor of negro troops of fidelity to duty to the disparagement of the white troops. The Senator does not mean that. He says they all fought well. It is the first time, however, I have ever heard that they were more faithful, less liable to desert, that they regarded the performance of duty more sacredly than white troops.

It is not my intention to argue this question at length. I know that the subject can hardly be mentioned but that feeling is engendered and motives misapprehended. I rose to make the objection simply because I believe in my heart that incorporating negro troops into the regular Army in time of peace would be offensive to the community in which they were stationed. I have no doubt it would be offensive to the regular Army with whom they are called upon to associate; that is, with the white troops who in part are to compose that Army. It is therefore simply that we may have an army composed of our own race, believing that the Army can be filled up with men of that race, and believing that the stationing in any part of this country, in time of peace, of white troops would not be objectionable or offensive to any portion of the people, they being commanded by competent officers—it is for that reason that I object to incorporating into the regular Army, a thing that never has been done before, the negro race. In the civil war you had them as volunteers, and you drafted them; but you never before undertook to enlist them into your regular Army and make them a part of your peace establishment; and I therefore appeal to Senators not to do it now in the absence of all necessity for it. What can be the reason for incorporating them into the Army? To give them employment? Why, sir, the industrial pursuits of life and agriculture, in many portions of the country, are suffering for the want of laborers. They are particularly and peculiarly adapted for that kind of work; but, sir, to ride in your cavalry, to be stationed in your barracks, to go out visiting to neighboring towns to show what important personages they are, and to be offensive, as they necessarily will be from their very nature and character, to the white portion of the community among whom they are stationed, such a thing should be guarded against and avoided, unless there be absolute necessity for it. I have heard no reason showing why they should now be incorporated into the regular Army. I have heard no one say that it is impossible to get white soldiers. Unless it is impossible to get white soldiers, I think it very unwise to depart from the settled practice of the Government from its foundation to the present time.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Mr. President, here is a proposition to have two regiments of colored cavalry attached to the regular Army for the permanent peace establishment. When this bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs they sought light from every accessible source in reference to the proper organization of the regular Army. Generals Grant and Meade and Sherman and Thomas were called in consultation. We had the opinions of all those four distinguished generals. In addition to that we had the opinion of the Secretary of War, and, so far as practicable, of the War Department. The bill as it was first introduced provided for eight regiments of colored troops. That received the sanction of Grant and Sherman and Meade and Thomas and the Secretary of War. The bill, as it now stands, only provides for seven regiments of colored troops. It will be hard, I apprehend, to convince either myself or the Senate that these four distinguished generals, backed and supported by the opinion of the Secretary of War, do not know as well how the regular Army should be constituted in time of peace as any one man now here without a particular investigation of the subject. Colored troops are sufficient for these grand leaders who have led your armies to victory and suppressed the rebellion, but from mere prejudice we are now to exclude them from the service.

Now, sir, to serve in your Army is one of two things: it is either a burden or it is a privilege. If it is a burden, it should be borne equally by every class of our citizens. The colored people are now all free, they are all now citizens, and all, I trust in God, to be protected. Then they should bear their proportion of this burden. But if it be a privilege to enter your armies, they are equally entitled to the protection of your laws, and every philanthropic citizen desires their elevation, and they should be permitted to participate in this high privilege of serving as common soldiers in the regular Army of the United States. It is, then, one of two things, either a burden or a privilege to serve in the Army, and if it is either, the colored people are equally bound to bear the burden or equally entitled to participate in the privilege.

What duties do you expect these soldiers in time of peace to perform? What duties are they to perform? First, to preserve your frontiers from the incursions of the savages. A mounted force is much better adapted to that purpose than an infantry force, and hence the necessity for more cavalry. Another duty is to preserve your public property and to man your garrisons in time of peace. These must all be kept up. But we need not shut our eyes to the present important and pressing necessity for troops, and that is, to preserve the peace and enforce the laws in the States now in rebellion. The whole force contemplated by this Army bill is less than fifty-five thousand, all told; and, in the opinion of the commander-in-chief of the Army, inadequate for the purposes for which we now need an army. The committee have brought it down to the very lowest possible estimate consistent with the public peace and public security, and altogether we are to have less than fifty-five thousand troops when your Army is full.

The distinguished Senator from Delaware takes the ground that there are thousands and thousands of discharged white soldiers now anxious, willing, and ready to enlist in the Army of the United States. Now, what is historically the truth upon that subject? At the beginning of the rebellion you authorized the addition of eleven regiments to the regular Army. After five years of warfare not one single battalion or regiment has been filled. Not one single company, battalion, regiment, brigade, or division in the regular Army is now full, and there is no pressure for enlistment. It is with the greatest possible difficulty that you can keep up your battalions and companies and regiments at all. But it is believed by those who should be familiar with the subject that you may raise seven or eight regiments of colored troops without difficulty. More than that amount now in the service are willing to remain.

But, exclaims the Senator from Delaware, "What! will you introduce this new principle now for the first time and incorporate into your regular Army colored troops in time of peace?" Is that the only objection? Was not the same objection urged against the employment of colored troops in time of war? Did we not hear precisely the same objection then; not founded in reason, but founded in the blind, unreasoning prejudices of race and color? It was not right to employ them in time of war, because gentlemen opposed that and said there was a sufficiency of white troops for the purpose of the suppression of the rebellion. The objection was then that you should not employ them in time of war, and now we are told that you cannot employ them in time of peace; and why? Because, forsooth, you may exasperate our southern brethren; you may exasperate and rend wider the gulf between the loyal North and the disloyal citizens of the South by introducing into their neighborhoods these colored troops; and the Senator from Delaware says that it will operate injuriously upon the people of the State of Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I said it might do it. Mr. LANE, of Indiana. It might excite their prejudice, and doubtless would; but let not the people of Delaware labor under any serious apprehension on this subject. We are only to have about fifty thousand troops, all told, for over thirty million people, and when you divide them up how much will come to the share of Delaware? An ordinary guard with two corporals will be sufficient for the State of Delaware, even if they shall need a single one, which I do not believe they ever will.

I apprehend no particular difficulty, so far as the people of Indiana are concerned, by stationing colored or white troops there, because we are a loyal people, and it will never be necessary to station them there; but where it is necessary, it seems to me there is a peculiar propriety in the employment of colored troops. They are acclimated. They stand the climate and the diseases of the climate a great deal better than the white troops. The diseases of the colored troops in the South were much less, as the medical statistics show, than were the diseases among the white troops. They are peculiarly suited to the very duty that we desire them to perform, to keep order and preserve the peace in the rebel States. I apprehend that a loyal colored man is quite good enough to preserve the peace against a white rebel. I apprehend he is quite good enough to fight off the Indians from your northern frontiers, or to guard your forts or fortifications, even in time of peace. Having discharged so well and so gallantly their duty in a time of war, I am not afraid to trust them with this minor duty under circumstances of less danger and less responsibility in a time of peace. I do not know any distinction between the white troops and the colored troops further than this: that, so far as the history of the rebellion goes, it shows that these colored troops have discharged their duty. That they are the equal of the white race, my race and the race of the Senator from Delaware, I do not now believe, nor perhaps shall ever believe. After three hundred years of oppression the white race would be very different from what they are now. But I propose now simply to carry them into the Army, to protect them in all their civil rights, to make them believe they are men in the eye of the law and in the eye of their Maker, to enable them to ameliorate their own condition, and to reach the highest possible point of elevation their nature is capable and susceptible of. When we have done that and they have done that, both of us will have discharged our duty.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Ohio moves to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "two" and inserting "four." If the Senator will amend his motion so as to insert "three," so as to have three regiments of colored cavalry, I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. WADE. I am willing to modify it in that way, as it is probably all I can get. My own judgment would be in favor of having four regiments of colored cavalry, because I think it would be better for the public service; but of course I do not set myself up against the Military Committee. If they will give us one additional colored regiment of cavalry I shall be satisfied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is modified, and it is now moved to strike out "two" and insert "three."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Poland, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Cowan, Davis, Guthrie, Hendricks, Morgan, Nesmith, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Van Winkle—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Wright, and Yates—20.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was in line fourteen of section four, to strike out "who" and insert "all of whom shall;" and in line fifteen to strike out "who" before "have."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "United States," in line three of section seven, to insert "one for the battalion of engineers;" so as to read:

That there shall be a band, as now provided by law, for each regiment in the service of the United States, one for the battalion of engineers, &c.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if this battalion of engineers is not always stationed at the Military Academy in time of peace, and if so, where is the necessity for having a band for them when there is a band for the Military Academy?

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that they are not always stationed at the Academy. This battalion now numbers about seven hundred and fifty men, and the commander of it has been endeavoring for some time to get a band of music for them.

Mr. GRIMES. Where are they stationed?

Mr. WILSON. At different places. A few of them are at the Academy. By the law as it now stands each regiment can have a band. They have got a band at West Point now, and we propose to give a band to this battalion. They have desired it for some time. They have been asking for it. They have got about seven hundred and fifty men. However, I am not particular about it.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not going to oppose the amendment, but I simply desire the Senate to understand that the headquarters of the Engineer corps and the battalion of engineers is at West Point. The band is always kept at the headquarters of the regiment. Now, if we adopt this amendment the effect of it will be that there will be two bands at West Point—one connected with the Military Academy, the other with this battalion of engineers.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator desires to strike it out I have no objection. I will simply say that this amendment was inserted in the bill in compliance with suggestions from the War Office. The commander of this battalion has been endeavoring for some months to obtain a band for them. I do not consider it of importance, and am perfectly willing that it shall not be adopted. Certainly, if the effect of it would be to have two bands at West Point, I should be opposed to it.

Mr. WADE. I move to strike it out.

Mr. WILSON. We can simply non-concur in the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in section seven, line four, before the word "for" to insert "one;" so that the clause will read:

That there shall be a band, as now provided by law, for each regiment in the service of the United States, one for the United States Military Academy, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eighteen, on page 10, line four, to strike out the word "deputy" after "two" and to insert "assistant," and in line six to strike out "assistant" after "two" and to insert "deputy;" so that the section will read:

That the pay department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one paymaster general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; two assistant paymasters general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels of cavalry; two deputy paymasters general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels of cavalry; and forty paymasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section twenty-one, line sixteen, before the word "section" to strike out "eleventh" and insert "fourteenth;" so that the clause will read:

And two thirds of the military store-keepers and ordnance store-keepers to be appointed under this and the fourteenth section of this act shall be selected from volunteer officers or soldiers who have performed meritorious service in the Army of the United States during the late rebellion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. I believe we have gone through with all the amendments offered by the committee. I offer the following amendment to come as section thirty-three at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That officers of the regular Army entitled to be retired on account of disability occasioned by wounds received in battle, may be retired upon the rank of the command held by them in the regular or volunteer service at the time such wounds were received.

Mr. WILSON. That proposition, I take it, means simply this: a large number of officers of the regular Army were made officers of volunteers. Some of those officers, perhaps four or five of them, were desperately wounded. The proposition is that they shall be retired on the rank they held when they received their wounds, and I think it is right that it should be so. Where does the Senator propose to insert the amendment?

Mr. HOWARD. At the close of the bill, as an additional section.

Mr. WILSON. Put it in as section thirty-two.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well; let it come in as section thirty-two.

Mr. WILSON. My suggestion is that it come in after the thirty-first section as a new section.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well; I will move to insert it as section thirty-two, and then section thirty-two, as it stands in the bill, can be changed to section thirty-three.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the seventeenth section by adding to it the following words, which were omitted by accident:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint from enlisted men of the Army, or cause to be enlisted, as many hospital stewards as the service may require, to be permanently attached to the medical department, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill if he cannot limit the number of these officers in any way. If the number can be limited properly I think it should be. The language is very broad as it stands.

Mr. WILSON. We cannot tell the number exactly. The number necessary will differ at different times. I take it that the Department will not employ more than they absolutely need.

Mr. NESMITH. I will state, with the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, that it is difficult to tell the number of hospital stewards that will actually be required. Perhaps where a regiment is serving together one hospital steward might be sufficient; but in time of peace our Army is very much scattered; usually there are not more than one or two companies at a post; and under circumstances of that kind it will be necessary to have a hospital steward at each post. When the regiments are congregated or consolidated, it is not necessary to have so many. The necessities of the service for such officers are constantly varying. I hope the amendment will be allowed to stand as it is. The number of these officers cannot be very well fixed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH. I offer the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That all officers who have served during the rebellion as volunteers in the armies of the United States, and who have been, or hereafter may be, honorably mustered out of the volunteer service, shall be entitled to have the official title, and upon occasions of ceremony to wear the uniforms of the highest grade they have held by brevet or other commission in the military service. In the case of officers of the regular Army, the volunteer rank shall be entered upon the official Army Register: Provided, That these privileges shall not entitle any officer to command, pay, or emoluments.

I will state that this amendment is a precise copy of an amendment which passed the Senate in the original Senate bill now pending before the House of Representatives. It is merely complimentary to volunteer officers, permitting them to have the designation, and on occasions of ceremony and public occasions to wear the uniform of the highest rank they held in the volunteers, and the volunteer rank in the case of officers of the regular Army is to be transferred to the official Army Register. It is a matter that will cost nothing; it increases no pay or emoluments and entitles them to no command. It is a mere compliment.

Mr. GRIMES. I will ask the Senator to let that lie on the table until it can be examined. I have no objection to it as among officers of the Army, but it provides for occasions of ceremony. The difficulty is that officers of the Army and Navy are frequently brought together on occasions of ceremony, and there being no brevets in the Navy, a young man who has been brevetted as a major general or as a brigadier general, although having been in the service not more than two or three years, will rank on those occasions of ceremony an officer of the Navy who has served the country faithfully for fifty years. I should like to have an opportunity to amend the amendment. Let it lie on the table until I can draft an amendment, so that they may have this rank as among Army officers.

Mr. NESMITH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WADE. While that amendment is being perfected I have one which I wish to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon withdraw his amendment for the present?

Mr. NESMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WADE. I move to amend the bill on page 12, in section twenty-four, line four, after the word "board," concerning the examination of officers, by inserting "to be composed of officers of that arm of the service in which the applicant is to serve." Some of those to be examined, that have served in the cavalry for four or five years, are perfectly well acquainted with that service, well skilled in it, and were distinguished in that branch of the service, but their apprehension is that if they are put under the examination of the mere infantry officers they might fail. It seems to me but right and reasonable that the board should be composed of that arm of the service in which the applicant proposes to serve. I have received a great many letters on the subject from men who have served during the last war with distinction, but who are apprehensive that if they make their application, and are compelled to go before a board of officers of another and entirely different arm of the service, the examination will not be as fair as it would if they were examined by a board composed of officers of that arm of the service in which they propose to serve. I think it is reasonable, and I hope the committee will think so, too.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope that amendment will be adopted. I have received a number of communications on the same subject myself. There is quite a wide-spread complaint on that account. I think it is nothing but fair that the applicant should be allowed to be examined as to those branches which he is required to understand before entering into the particular branch of the service which he seeks. I see nothing unreasonable in it.

Mr. WILSON. I think there can be no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have an amendment to offer, but after the action which has been taken by the Senate I shall content myself with offering it. I move to amend section four, in the eighth and ninth lines, by striking out the words "of colored men, to be designated United States colored troops." I shall not call for the yeas and nays, because it is useless. I want a vote on it, however.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me to make an amendment before he moves that?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will not say a word on the subject of the amendment I propose. I only ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. Since the committee reported this bill I have received a letter from General Brice, Paymaster General of the Army, which I desire to have read, after which I shall submit a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PAYMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor respectfully to represent, after a careful consideration of the subject, the conviction beyond a shadow of a doubt in my mind, that the forty paymasters provided in your bill now pending will not be nearly sufficient to satisfactorily accomplish the payment of the Army organized as that bill proposes, and distributed to stations scattered over the extent of a continent.

To say nothing of the five thousand (average number) of claims for back pay, bounties, &c., now coming to this office for settlement each month, and of the average of ten thousand certificates issued monthly by the Second Auditor to heirs of deceased soldiers and other claimants, and which are made payable by paymasters only; I give the following as the number of officers indispensably necessary for the payment of the troops in service after all the volunteer forces shall be disbanded. And I beg to assure you that this estimate is made with scrupulous care, and is regarded as the very minimum which should be provided for:

New York, (New York, New England, New Jersey,)	4
Washington, (Atlantic States from Pennsylvania to West Florida,)	7
New Orleans, (West Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas,)	0
Cincinnati, (all States west of Alleghany mountains, east of Mississippi river, and north of Alabama,)	5
St. Louis, (Missouri, Arkansas, Iowa, Minnesota,)	5
Leavenworth, (Kansas and all the Territories east of Rocky mountains and north of the Arkansas river,)	8
San Francisco, (all west of the Rocky mountains, including Arizona and Utah, up north to the British possessions,)	9
Santa Fé, (all New Mexico,)	3
Allowance for leaves of absence, sickness, and other casualties	6
	56

I earnestly recommend that in section eighteen of the bill, "forty" be stricken out and "sixty" substituted.

Besides these it will be necessary to retain for a time twenty additional paymasters, to meet the volunteer demand above named, of referred claims and Auditor's certificates. For the retention of these so long as they may be needed, for the purpose indicated, it is believed that further legislation is not necessary.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. W. BRICE,

Paymaster General.

Hon. HENRY WILSON, Chairman Military Committee United States Senate.

Mr. WILSON. Before the bill was reported, it was pressed upon us very strongly to make a larger number of paymasters than we were disposed to do. In fact we were disposed to cut down every department to the lowest possible number of officers that they could get along with. Since this bill was reported, as I have said, I have received this letter from General Brice. The Senate has heard it read, and they know General Brice, his industry and his character, and how his department is managed. He wants sixty paymasters instead of forty. He now has twenty-five. This bill increases the number to forty, but he asks for sixty. I told him I did not believe we could increase it so largely as that.

Mr. GRIMES. This bill makes the number forty-five.

Mr. WILSON. That includes the deputies. I think if we put it at fifty, they can get along, and I am disposed to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty." I believe we can get along with that number. At any rate, at the next session of Congress, which is but a few months off, we can increase the number if necessary. I therefore move in section eighteen, line seven, to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty."

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see why the letter of the Paymaster General on a point of this kind should not be conclusive. He says he cannot get along with less than sixty paymasters with our troops spread over the continent from Maine to the Pacific. It seems to me his reasons are reasonable, and I should be disposed to comply with his request. This is a military matter, and I generally follow the committee on such questions; but the Paymaster General, with a full knowledge of the service, and with this bill before him, tells us that to discharge this particular duty, he wants sixty paymasters, and I am rather disposed to give him the number he asks for. He certainly ought to know what number will be required. He has no motive in the world for increasing his corps. Certainly, the mere difference of controlling a force of forty or sixty paymasters would not induce a good man, as he undoubtedly is in that position, to ask for an unreasonable number. If it is in order, I will move to amend the amendment by inserting "sixty."

Mr. WILSON. I certainly have no objection to complying with General Brice's request. I think he has managed his office, since he has entered upon it, with great ability and great vigor, energy, and system, and I have great confidence in anything that he says. My only anxiety is that I do not want to load down this bill so much that we shall have difficulty in getting it through. If, however, the Senate believe that we ought to have sixty paymasters, I certainly shall not object to it. I thought he might get along with fifty at present, and at the next session if he found himself burdened, we could add ten more.

Mr. GRIMES. I suggest to the Senator that he may relieve him in that respect by striking out these assistant and deputy paymasters, who are to enjoy the rank of colonels and lieutenant colonels, a rank that has never been held in our service, and is not held in the British service by any paymaster, and giving that additional number of paymasters with the rank named here, which will save the expense.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee if there is any difficulty in retaining a sufficient number of the volunteer paymasters until the next session of Congress to do the work up to that time, and then we can fix the number which will be required by the regular Army.

Mr. FESSENDEN. These paymasters are to be selected from the volunteer paymasters. I will ask the chairman if there is not such a provision in the bill. If there is not, there certainly ought to be.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that we have now two deputy paymasters general with the rank of lieutenant colonel, and this bill gives two assistants in addition.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the title of those paymasters?

Mr. WILSON. They were deputy paymasters. Mr. FESSENDEN. I mean paymasters of volunteers. What was their title?

Mr. WILSON. They were majors in rank. They were assistant paymasters.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The paymasters provided for in this bill ought to be selected from those who have served as additional paymasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON. Will this phraseology satisfy what the Senator from Maine desires: "and fifty paymasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry, to be selected from those who have served as additional paymasters?"

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would modify his amendment still further. I suppose there will be a dozen applications for every vacancy, and they ought not to be appointed by political favor, but by merit.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And therefore they ought to be confined to those who have served.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly; but among those who have served the selection should be on account of merit.

Mr. WILSON. I will say, "to be selected from those who have served as additional paymasters."

Mr. ANTHONY. But every man who has served as an additional paymaster would not be fitted for this position. There ought to be a proper age required, and the person best qualified and having the best record ought to have the place.

Mr. WILSON. I ask to have my amendment read as it now stands.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in section eighteen, line seven, to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty," and at the end of the section to insert "to be selected from persons who have served as additional paymasters;" so that the clause will read:

And fifty paymasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry, to be selected from persons who have served as additional paymasters.

Mr. SHERMAN. I moved to amend the amendment by making the number "sixty," and I understood that that was accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts so vary his amendment?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, is on the amendment as amended; so as to make the clause read:

And sixty paymasters with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry, to be selected from persons who have served as additional paymasters.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator whether he ought not to add the words "for two years."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope we shall not do that. Some who may have only served a year may have shown their ability in such a way as to prove that they are the best fitted for the position.

Mr. SHERMAN. I mention two years because that was the rule adopted in the Navy. I think that probably a year's service would scarcely give them sufficient experience, but two years' service, when the war lasted four, would in all probability give them the amount of experience required.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know that when this matter has been discussed with reference to the selection of additional paymasters the probability was that there would be one from the State of Maine, and public opinion settled upon two men, who were believed to be altogether the best men on the whole list, and I doubt whether one of these men, a man of peculiar ability, and who has distinguished himself, would be able to come in if we were to fix the limitation at two years. The Paymaster General is the best judge.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was found necessary to pass an amendatory act in regard to the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy said that the limitation of two years cut off some of the best officers. I think there ought to be a limitation as to age. I think a man of fifty or sixty years of age ought not to be put in to go on the retired list shortly afterward.

Mr. GRIMES. I will state, for the information of the Senate, another fact found in connection with the paymasters in the Navy. A very large proportion of these same paymasters who had acted as such, and who were supposed to be very efficient, when they were sent before a board and examined failed to pass the examination. They lacked the capacity and qualifications necessary. Does the Senator from Massachusetts propose to send those paymasters before any board of examiners?

Mr. WILSON. The bill provides that the persons appointed to these offices shall be examined by a board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH. I now offer the amendment which I offered a short time since, to add as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That all the officers who have served during the rebellion as volunteers in the armies of the United States, and who have been, or hereafter may be, honorably mustered out of the volunteer service, shall be entitled to bear the official titles upon occasions of ceremony, and wear the uniform of the highest grade they have held by brevet or other commission in the volunteer service. In the case of officers of the regular Army, the volunteer rank shall be entered upon the official Army roll: Provided, That these privileges shall not entitle an officer to command, pay, or emoluments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fifth section, which provides—

That the appointments to be made from among volunteer officers and soldiers under the provisions of this act shall be distributed among the States, Territories, and District of Columbia in proportion to the number of troops furnished by them respectively to the service of the United States during the late war.

It proposes to distribute the appointments to be made among the States in the proportion to the number of troops furnished by the States respectively during the war. It seems to me that may work great injustice. Some of the States put into the service a large number of troops who were nine months' men.

Mr. WILSON. They are all to be measured by the three years' standard.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is what I wish to have the section do. In Iowa we put in no regiments for less than three years, except those under the seventy-five thousand call and some hundred-day men during 1864, but the others were all three years' men. I move to add to this section those words, "reduced to an average of three years' term of service."

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to the amendment, but I think it unnecessary.

Mr. CONNESS. This section, if allowed to remain in the bill—I am aware there is an amendment pending, but I wish to call attention to it now—will do the State of California, at least, a great deal of injustice; and I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to it. That State, owing to its geographical position, did not furnish its proportion of troops during the war, but it was not the fault of the State. The State furnished all the regiments that they were called upon to furnish, and in addition to that the Government refused tenders of regiments who offered to come here to go into the field and pay their own expenses for transportation to get into the field. Now, I submit that such a State, having a population so willing to enter the service and to reach the field of operations, should not be, by an especial provision, prevented from participating in some other proper proportion in the number of officers that should be furnished to the Army. I submit this seriously to the chairman and to the Senate. I have not determined on just what language would be necessary; but the Government, or the Administration, constantly refused to receive more than the number of troops that was necessary for distribution on the Pacific slope, because, as was stated by the Administration and by the War Department, it was essential and of the first importance to maintain peace and preserve the industries of that coast during the war, and therefore they decided that that country could not spare its able-bodied men to be sent here. Again and again regiment after regiment of our volunteers made application, and offered to pay the expenses of their transportation here to get into the field. Six hundred of our citizens enlisted in the Massachusetts service for the sake of getting into the field, making up part of the quota of that State. Now, I submit there cannot be any justice in this fifth section unless it be changed. I have no objection, of course, to the pending amendment to the section, but before we shall take a vote upon it I wish to have time to consider what language will be necessary to prevent us from being cut off, as proposed now in this section, from a proper proportion of the officers required under this act.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let this amendment be made and then offer your amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not our fault that we have not furnished our full proportion of troops.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that, and I appreciate the Senator's argument; but does the Senator suggest an amendment?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir. I will consult with you about it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let this other amendment be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the bill by inserting in the nineteenth line of section four, on page 4, after the word "by," the words "accident or;" so that it will read, "disabled by accident or wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty during the war."

Mr. FESSENDEN. What does that refer to, the Veteran Reserves?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to make the same amendment in section eight, line nine, on page 6, by inserting the words "accident or" after the word "by."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following as a new section to come in after the fourth section:

And be it further enacted, That in the selection of officers to be appointed under the provisions of this act, officers of the regular Army who have commanded volunteer troops may be counted as officers of volunteers or as officers of the regular Army.

I will state that this is the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] when a similar bill was before the Senate a few months ago and adopted by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the provision in relation to the Veteran Reserves. It looks to me as though that provision needed some amendment. I will state the objection that occurs to my mind. I do not propose any amendment, but I merely want to call the attention of the Military Committee to the subject. If I understand it, the effect of the provision will be simply to select a number of officers as officers of the Veteran Reserve corps who may immediately and probably will very soon be placed upon the retired list. The officers appointed, particularly the field officers of the Veteran Reserve corps, will be entitled to the same promotion into other regiments as any other officers. A gentleman is appointed a colonel, a lieutenant colonel, or a major of a regiment of the Veteran Reserve corps, and in a little while he is entitled to promotion, and he is promoted into one of the other regiments, and then he comes within the provisions of the law on the subject of retiring officers; and the effect of this bill is going to be, if I can understand its operation, to put a number of wounded officers now out of the service upon the retired list to receive their pay as officers of the Army. May not all the officers appointed in these three regiments be retired, placed upon the retired list, within a year after they are appointed? What is to prevent their being retired the first time a board is appointed for the purpose of examining officers? I think that will be the immediate effect of it. The officers to be appointed are those "who have been disabled by wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty during the war." Any officer who is not capable of marching, who is not capable of performing active duty, is to be retired by the law as it now stands. Every one of these officers may be retired under the provisions of the existing law at once after they are appointed.

Mr. WILSON. It will be in the power of the Government to retire them. I take it that is so. There is a provision here simply for three regiments of Veteran Reserves. I think that is more than will ever be raised. I have not the slightest idea that you can raise three regiments of Veteran Reserves during the next three years.

Mr. GRIMES. You can raise a regiment of veteran officers.

Mr. WILSON. I know, but we provide here for three regiments, and they are to be officered by persons who have been wounded in the line of duty or who have incurred disease in the line of duty.

Mr. HARRIS. Let me state that the law is that an officer who is found by a board to be incapacitated for active services shall be retired; and now you are about putting three regiments under officers who are incapacitated from active service.

Mr. WILSON. My judgment about this whole matter of the Veteran Reserve corps is that there is nothing in the claim which is set up on their behalf, and I think any one who reflects on it will come to that conclusion. As a reward for officers, it amounts to very little. We have enough wounded officers, men of intelligence and character, to officer a hundred regiments at least. But there has been a great deal said about having a few of these Veteran Reserve regiments, and we have put it at three regiments. I am willing that the Senator from New York may propose such a limitation as he deems proper; but the object is to have three of these regiments who shall do a certain kind of duty at posts.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire whether the men who are to be enlisted into these regiments are also expected to be disabled.

Mr. WILSON. That was the original idea.

Mr. GRIMES. Is that the idea the Military Committee recommend us to adopt?

Mr. WILSON. They are generally soldiers who have received some wound in the war.

Mr. GRIMES. Is there any provision to that effect in the bill?

Mr. WILSON. I think there is.

Mr. GRIMES. If there be not then I undertake to say they must be able-bodied men, under the general laws which require the inspection and examination of every recruit who presents himself to be recruited into the service, and we shall be placed in the anomalous position of having an army of lions led by a goat for a leader; that is, we are to have three regiments of stout, able-bodied men, ready and willing to perform efficient service, to be led by men who are "disabled;" in other words, unable to do duty, for that I understand to be the meaning of the word "disabled."

Mr. CONNESS. There is no proposition, I believe, on this subject before the Senate, and in the mean time I offer this proviso, to come in at the end of the fifth section of the bill:

Provided, That the regulation provided in this section governing the proportion of officers to be selected from each State shall not be applied to the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move to strike out the twelfth section of the bill. That section is in these words:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the Bureau of Military Justice shall hereafter consist of one judge advocate general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general, and one assistant judge advocate general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry; and the said judge advocate general shall receive, revise, and have recorded, the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and military commissions, and shall perform such other duties as have heretofore been performed by the judge advocate general of the Army. And of the judge advocates now in office there may be retained a number not exceeding ten, to be selected by the Secretary of War, who shall perform their duties under the direction of the judge advocate general, until otherwise provided by law, or until the Secretary of War shall decide that their services can be dispensed with.

Mr. President, we went through the revolutionary war, we went through the war of 1812, we went through the war with Mexico, and we did not find it necessary even in time of war to have any Bureau of Military Justice. Something like a Bureau of Military Justice, I believe, was claimed to have been established during the late civil war. But we are now at peace; this bill has reference to a time of peace, and not to a time of war; and the proposition is now made in this section to recognize "military commissions." Sir, I do not believe Congress has the power under any circumstances to establish military commissions, and certainly not for the purpose of trying civilians. There are now languishing at the penitentiary in Albany some men who, for a disturbance occasioned in Alexandria about Christmas, civilians never connected with the Army of the United States or any other army that I ever heard of, were tried, not according to the municipal law, not according to the law of Virginia for violating the law of that State, but tried by a military commission, authorized, I suppose, by the Secretary of War. Those young men, unfortunately being white, while those engaged in conflict with them were negroes, were sentenced to the penitentiary in Albany, and there languish to-day away from their friends. I have no hesitation in saying that every person who acted as a member of that military commission is liable to a civil suit by every man who has been sent to that penitentiary; and they would be unjust to themselves, and their kindred would be unjust to those young men, if they do not vindicate their rights before a civil tribunal. If that military commission had gone further and sentenced those young men to be executed, and they had been executed, every man who sat as a member of that military commission would have been guilty of murder, according to the law of the land.

There is no authority in this Government to try any civilian by military commission either in time of peace or time of war; and he who does it, he who authorizes it, whether he be President, whether he be Secretary of War, whether he be a member of a board of commission, is guilty of an offense against the law of the land; in the instance I have given, liable to damages; in a case where life is taken, guilty of murder.

Now, Mr. President, I object to this section because in the first place it recognizes as an established institution (if I may so speak) in times of peace a Bureau of Military Justice. Sir, it never occurred to the framers of this Government, it never occurred to the able men under whose guidance it grew and expanded until it became one of the greatest nations of the earth, that there was any necessity for the establishment of a Bureau of Military Justice. What is this Bureau of Military Justice as practically operated? It is a receptacle for the information of spies and informers against peaceable and quiet citizens. Could its doors be opened to the light of day and could the public see what is there recorded and piled away it would "make each particular hair to stand on end." I have no doubt that if we could get a look into the records of that bureau we should be amazed.

But now, sir, in time of peace, because your bill expressly contemplates a time of peace, you propose to recognize as valid trial by military commission. You do not even confine it to trials of persons engaged in the Army and Navy, in the military service of the country; but we all know that these military commissions have heretofore exercised jurisdiction over civilians, people in nowise connected with your Army or Navy; and having done so in the past, if you recognize these commissions by a solemn act of legislation, it will be presumed that they are to be continued in the future. The volumes of English State Trials are very large; and if you do not wish to have the volumes of American State Trials equally large keep out of your acts of Congress, out of your public law, provisions which must necessarily lead to state trials, criminal trials; and you ought also to keep out such provisions as will necessarily lead to litigation in the courts of justice.

The section provides that the bureau "shall perform such other duties as have heretofore been performed by the Judge Advocate General of the Army." The Judge Advocate General has decided it to be his duty to try civilians by military commission; and it will be claimed, if this section is adopted, that Congress having conferred upon this Bureau of Military Justice power to perform the duties which the Judge Advocate General has heretofore performed, he as its head will, in his omnipotence of power, sanctioned by legislative enactment, have a right to try civilians by military commission.

Mr. President, it is useless to say that the public liberty is in danger. There is very little public liberty in this country. With such enactments as this, grossly violative of the fundamental law, authorizing the establishment of tribunals to try men in civil life never contemplated by the Constitution of the country, in favor of which no voice among the sages of the past was ever uttered, it is useless to say that there is such a thing as civil liberty existing. You may say that the hand of power is not actually applied to the citizen at the present moment; but that country is not free, liberty does not exist in that country where the citizen is subject at any time to be called before an illegal tribunal and to be visited with the severest punishment. In the name of liberty I protest against it. In the name of the Constitution of my country I protest against it. In the name of the thousands of aching hearts who have suffered from the arbitrary action of these military commissions I protest against it. Sir, there come up weeping and wailing to-day from the loathsome penitentiaries of your land from persons there immured illegally, unlawfully, unconstitutionally, a protest against the recognition by Congress of such a tribunal as this. And could all the tears that have been caused to flow by the action of this Military Justice Bureau be gathered into one great reservoir every member of that bureau might swim in it. It is nothing but an engine of oppression. The man who is now at the head of it has shown great alacrity in doing the work of vengeance.

I appeal to the American Senate not to recognize in a solemn enactment of Congress the validity of such a tribunal as this. Your fathers never recognized it. No statesman from the foundation of the Government until the late civil war ever dreamed of putting into practical operation any military commission within the limits of the United States. It was never dreamed that persons not connected with the Army or the Navy were subject to be drawn, violently, unlawfully drawn before a few men, selected in many instances no doubt with a view to their known proclivity to a conviction. What chance, I ask you, sir, has a civilian that is brought before one of these military commissions for a fair and impartial trial. The Constitution of your country provides that every man not connected with your military or naval forces shall be entitled to the right of trial by jury; and yet, notwithstanding that provision, notwithstanding that a jury of the country acting under the instructions of a court is much more competent to administer justice fairly than a military commission, the spectacle is presented to the American people of persons not connected with the land or naval forces being denied this constitutional privilege and being called before these military commissions; and of whom are they composed in the main? Men learned in the law? Men qualified by long habits of study of the principles of law to decide properly? No, sir, but generally composed of military men without legal education, men who undertake to decide upon the great questions of evidence which frequently arise upon criminal trials, and to determine those great principles of criminal law which have been laid down by the master minds of the profession.

There certainly can be no necessity for the continuance of any such bureau as this in time of peace. You never had it before in time of peace or time of war; and is there more necessity now when you are at peace at home and at peace with all the nations of the earth? Is there any more necessity now in time of peace that you shall have such an anomaly in your history as a Bureau of Military Justice established as a firm, continued institution of the country. Why, sir, it is placing in the hands of those who administer the Government absolute, despotic power. Some spy may give information that some crime, some offense against the authority of the United States has been committed, and immediately if so disposed those who administer the Government may select out (because there is no limitation upon the choice of those selected as commissioners) any complacent tools in the Army that they see proper and arraign the purest and most exalted citizen in the land before such an illegal tribunal as this; and tell me, in view of the past action of this bureau, what chance has the citizen for justice or for safety before such a commission? Sir, after you have done this go at once, get the guillotine, incorporate it as one of the institutions of the country. The one is no more offensive to the genius and spirit of American liberty than the other; the one is no more foreign to the past history of the country than the other; and the one is no more dangerous to the liberty of the citizen than the other.

I had hoped, Mr. President, that when the civil war was over, when peace had returned to bless the land, the spirit of cruelty which had characterized the legislation of Congress and the action of those intrusted with the execution of the law would have been satisfied, that fraternal feeling might be restored, and that that priceless liberty which we formerly enjoyed under a written Constitution might again be our portion. If you recognize the validity of such a bureau as this, with such powers as it has exercised heretofore, with such powers as we are warranted in believing it will continue to exercise in the future, your boasted liberty is but a name; it does not exist in reality. While this act shall stand upon your statute-book with this section in it, talk not to me of liberty, talk not of constitutional liberty anywhere, talk not about giving republican institutions to a neighboring nation, boast not your superiority over the despotisms of the Old World; but go, sir, abandon that liberty, falsely so called, which you enjoy, and seek safety and repose in law well understood and faithfully administered. With such a provision as this incorporated into the acts of Congress, and practically carried into effect by those empowered so to carry it, England is a paradise to the United States of America, and there is not a civilized Government that (if the thing is practically carried out in the future as it has been in the past) will not be a comparative paradise to the United States of America. It is no answer to say that the powers here conferred will not be abused. I have confidence—more than most of the Senators upon this floor—in the present Chief Executive Magistrate of the United States. I do not believe that he himself, had he the time to investigate these matters and determine in reference to them, would abuse any power; but he has not had the time to look into these matters. The head of your Bureau of Military Justice is the all-powerful instrument that is to work this engine of oppression. Private malice may be gratified; an innocent man may suffer, suffer wrongfully, suffer even unto death by the action of the head of this bureau, and there is no redress.

I invoke the Senate to strike out this section of the bill. Let us be rid of this instrument of oppression in the future. If the time should ever again come when it shall be necessary to invoke such extraordinary powers for the salvation of the country, and a future Congress should deem it expedient and wise, they will have the power to restore this machinery and can do so; but now, sir, in time of peace, I beseech you, abandon it.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Mr. President—Mr. RAMSEY. I desire simply to offer an amendment which will come in as a part of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon. I propose to insert it after the word "service" in the amendment proposed by that Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Can I not have a vote on my motion?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The motion, as I understand it, of the Senator from Delaware is to strike out the twelfth section of the bill. That is the motion pending. When a vote shall be taken on that, then the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment, but it has not yet been read, and the Chair cannot determine on its applicability until it has been read.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. It is an amendment to another amendment, not the amendment pending now of the Senator from Delaware, as I understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to settle its character.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment of Mr. RAMSEY, which was to amend the amendment adopted on motion of Mr. NESMITH as the thirty-third section of the bill, by inserting after the word "service" the following words:

And privates who have served three years and been honorably discharged, shall, upon like occasion, be entitled to the honorary rank of first lieutenant and wear the uniform of that grade, and at the expiration of five years from the 6th of April, 1865, shall be entitled to the honorary rank of captain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment is not now in order. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The vote was taken on the motion of the Senator from Oregon and that was passed. This is an amendment to that, intervening between the amendment of the Senator from Delaware and a vote that had already been passed, as I understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves to strike out the twelfth section of the bill. That is the motion before the Senate. The proposed amendment of the Senator from Minnesota is not an amendment to that amendment, and therefore is not in order.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I will only say a few words in reference to the twelfth section. The twelfth section proposes to continue in operation the Bureau of Military Justice. The Senator from Delaware moves to strike out that section, which will have the effect to abolish at this time the Bureau of Military Justice, and he denounces in terms of great ability and considerable bitterness the organization of military commissions for the trial of certain offenses.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I referred to no particular individual.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Of course not. The Senator is always too parliamentary for that. Now, Mr. President, what has been the history of military trials in times past? From the very beginning of the Government the Rules and Articles of War authorized the organization of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and in the administration of military law it was found necessary to appoint some officer of the Government who should alike represent the interests of the Government and protect the rights of the individual, and that officer was called a judge advocate, and he was selected for each special trial by appointment of the commanding general or of the Secretary of War. So the administration of military justice stood at the beginning of the present rebellion. There has been no military trial without a judge advocate. At the close of the session of 1863, I think, we organized the Bureau of Military Justice, authorizing the appointment of a Judge Advocate General and certain assistant judge advocates general, who should discharge the duties of judge advocates to the ordinary courts-martial, under the rules and regulations for the government of the Army. That is the provision of the law as it now stands.

This bill proposes to reduce the number of assistant judge advocates general to ten. Under the bill organizing the Bureau of Military Justice, a Judge Advocate General and an assistant were appointed, and a judge advocate for every army in the field. We propose by this provision to retain in service the Judge Advocate General and one assistant, and the judge advocates with the rank and pay of major, so long as the Secretary of War shall believe their services are necessary, authorizing him at any moment to discharge the whole ten, leaving simply the Judge Advocate General and his assistant, the Judge Advocate General with the rank of brigadier general and his assistant with the rank of colonel.

Now, what is the necessity for the continuance of the Bureau of Military Justice? In the first place, more than five thousand claims are now before Judge Holt, the Judge Advocate General, which have not yet been passed upon. A trial is had; a decision rendered; it is referred to the Judge Advocate General; he digests and arranges the evidence and then refers it to the President for final adjudication. There are more than five thousand cases now pending in that bureau.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask my colleague whether that refers to claims for property, and, if so, how that bureau got jurisdiction of any such cases?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I understand none of them are for property. They are minor offenses perpetrated in the Army, every one of them properly referable to that bureau. That bureau has done an immense amount of work. If you discharge them now, what becomes of all these records? Who is to look into them? Who is to make up the cases? It is utterly impossible for the President, in the multiplicity of his duties, to look into all these cases; it is physically impossible for the Secretary of War to do so; and to facilitate the administration of criminal justice it was found necessary to establish this bureau.

But the distinguished Senator from Delaware says that looking to the past history of military commissions, he trembles for the liberty of the people. What is the past history of the Bureau of Military Justice, and who has trembled before its sentences except the rebel traitor and the rebel sympathizer, the assassins of the President of the United States, and their coconspirators North and South? What is the past history of the Bureau of Military Justice, and what is the past history of military commissions? Who authorized a military commission to try the murderers and assassins of your martyr President? Who called and convened the board to try them, and who composed that board? The peers and equals of the proudest Senator upon this floor in general intelligence, in patriotism, and in legal learning. Who ordered that military commission? The present President of the United States convened that military commission that passed sentence upon the assassins of the late President of the United States, and they had a felon's doom not alone under the sentence of the military court, but approved by the President of the United States himself. I indorse in letter, syllable, and spirit, not only the organization of the court, but the approval of the sentence of that court. I have no doubt of the jurisdiction of the court in that case.

Is that one of the cases referred to in the past history of this Bureau of Military Justice to which the gentleman excepts? Does he except to the sentence of that court convened by Andrew Johnson, the President of the United States, sanctioned by him, and sanctioned by the general concurrence of the whole people and the universal public sentiment of all Christendom? Who would reverse that sentence to-day, and bring back the miserable murderers, assassins, and conspirators who sought to overthrow the Republic in the person of the President of the Republic? I feel in my heart of hearts that I owe them a debt of gratitude for the noble and manly manner in which they discharged their duty. I bow in obedience to the decision of that court. It was right and proper, in my opinion, and I apprehend no detriment either to the public security or the public liberty from any military commission constituted as that was. I only regret that the President of the United States did not feel it his duty to persevere in well-doing and bring Jefferson Davis before the same or another military commission that summary human justice might have been meted out to him, if not commensurate with his crimes, at least all we could do, and leave him to the terrible retributions of hereafter. What has been the history of this Bureau of Military Justice that we should apprehend any danger from it? Have there been any wrong decisions, any innocent men punished? I know of no such case. I apprehend no such case can be presented.

An allusion was made to the head of that Bureau of Military Justice, General Holt. Who is he? A life-long Democrat so long as Democracy meant devotion to human rights and the union and the liberty of the Republic, but the moment when assassins and traitors sought to strike down the Republic that very moment he abandoned the Democratic party, was found faithful among the faithless in the Cabinet of that weak and wicked old man, Mr. Buchanan, and from that hour to the present his history is beyond all eulogy of mine. I can only hope for myself and for my friends that when our history shall be written and read of all men we may retire into the sanctity and security of the grave with the same proud historic record that will shed a halo of glory around the name of General Holt—a noble man; a patriot; an exception in the midst of his traitorous compeers. He is the head of the Bureau of Military Justice, and you are to strike out this section to legislate him out of office. For what cause? Simply because he assisted in the prosecution of the assassins of President Lincoln before a military court convened under the order of the Secretary of War and President Johnson, and the sentence of which was approved by President Johnson. What beyond that has Judge Holt done? His offense "hath that extent, no more."

Now, a word as to the bill. Under the present law we have a Judge Advocate General, with the rank of a brigadier general, an assistant, with the rank of colonel, and as many judge advocates as there are armies in the field. Under this bill we propose to retain the Judge Advocate General, an assistant, and for the time being ten assistant judge advocates, with the rank of major, to be mustered out the very moment the Secretary of War thinks there is no further occasion for their services. I cannot conceive there is anything wrong in this section. I am utterly at a loss to conceive why it should be stricken out, except for the simple purpose, as I apprehend, though not avowed, of rebuking the Government, rebuking the President, rebuking Congress for their past action for the last two years in their honest and patriotic efforts to see that traitors are punished and treason is made odious. If it has an object other than that, I am at a loss to conceive it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. While I concur mainly in the argument made by the Senator from Delaware, I cannot support the proposition that he makes in its full extent. I am not prepared to vote to abolish the court of military justice. If that court be properly constituted, and discharges its duties legitimately within its jurisdiction as the court was organized under the act of two or three years ago, it will be a blessing; and I will not vote to abolish the court because of some wrong decision that it may have made.

I know within two weeks of a case in which that court rendered service to the country and great justice to a gallant officer. A friend of mine came to me with his discharge from the public service as an officer from the regular Army. He was charged by some envious persons with having become intoxicated when on duty. There was a trial had, which was not very reputable to the officers of the military court that conducted it. He came to see me because he was an acquaintance and friend of mine. I went with him to see the Judge Advocate General. The case was called up before the Judge Advocate General and reviewed, and at once he decided that the testimony was not sufficient, and restored the young man to his position in the Army.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The President could have done that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Delaware suggests that the President could have done that. I dare say that the President would have done it, but it is utterly impossible for the President of the United States to examine the many records and files that come up from the trials before military courts. I think it is a protection to the military men of the country to have such a court. It will come to be, when the hour of passion, to which my colleague has referred, shall have passed away, a court deliberate in its proceedings, and I hope and have no doubt wise in its adjudications. Then it will be a blessing to the country and a protection to our military men. Necessarily when our Army shall come to be fifty thousand strong there will be many military trials for military offenses of military men. There ought to be a court of appeal; and this is intended to be a court of appeal; a court in which the judgment of the courts-martial may be reviewed, and if improper reversed. Such a court, it seems to me, ought to be in the Army.

But, sir, I concur in the proposition of the Senator from Delaware that these words, "and military commissions," ought not to find their way into this section, or into any other statute of our laws, and I shall move to strike those words out of the section before the vote is taken on the proposition of the Senator from Delaware. The language of the section is, "the proceedings of all courts-martial and courts of inquiry." I understand that courts-martial and courts of inquiry have been known to the Army since its organization—courts of inquiry for the purpose of enabling the commanding general to decide whether an officer ought to be put upon trial; and courts-martial for the purpose of trying military men for military offenses. Now, I am in favor of continuing an appellate court that shall revise the proceedings of all courts-martial; but this tribunal known as a military commission is a thing that has sprung up among the abuses of the last two or three years, so far as I know. I do not know that military commissions have been recognized by the military law of the country prior to the late war.

My colleague inquires, what is there in the history of military commissions that they should not command our approval? I ask my colleague, what is there in the history of military commissions that ought to command our approval? They have passed away. The highest judicial tribunal in this country has pronounced them to be illegal, and their findings to be void, when they extend to the trial of civilians. What is there in their history that we can commend? If the Senator refers to the trial of the assassins of President Lincoln, I shall not question the propriety of their trial before a court-martial—a military court known to our law—for the simple reason that it may be held, though somewhat doubtful, that their offense was a military offense. The President of the United States was the head of the Army; it was during a time of war; and the city of Washington was the headquarters of the Army; and this offense was committed against the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and at his headquarters during the war, as if a man should go into a camp in the presence of the enemy and should kill the commander-in-chief who was to conduct a charge perhaps the next day. I would not question that that would be a military offense for which the party might be tried by a court-martial.

But I do not recognize the doctrine which my colleague seems so broadly to advocate, that a military commission may put upon trial a civilian in no way connected with the Army for whatever that court may define to be a crime. What has been the wrong which the Supreme Court of the United States has reversed and consigned, I will not say to infamy, but consigned, I hope, in our future history to forgetfulness? It is this: that a court is organized unknown to our laws; a court organized without a defined jurisdiction; a court which is authorized to bring before it the men of the country not connected with the Army, and to put them upon trial for offenses not defined by any law, and to punish them in a mode unknown to the law. If this can be done; if a court can be organized in our country which is not authorized by law; if it can proceed according to its own pleasure, by no mode of practice defined by the law; if it can punish for a crime not defined by the law, and in a mode not tolerated or allowed by the law, then, sir, to the extent of the jurisdiction of such a court the liberty of the people is gone. What do we ask? That the courts that shall take jurisdiction of our persons shall only do so according to the law. A military commission is not known to the law; its proceedings are not defined by the law; its punishments are not prescribed by the law; and therefore in every respect, as the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, it is outside of the law, illegal, and void.

But, sir, since the decision of the Supreme Court it ceases to be necessary that we should argue upon this question. That court has pronounced upon the subject, and the citizen hereafter can only be tried before a court which the law has conferred jurisdiction upon, and according to the practice which the law has prescribed, and can be punished only as the law says, and not as some gentlemen who may happen to be upon a military commission may see fit to punish him. Therefore I shall move to strike out the words "and military commissions;" so that the court provided for in this section shall have appellate jurisdiction from all courts-martial and courts of inquiry. I do not know that it is necessary to give the court jurisdiction of the proceedings of a court of inquiry. A court of inquiry passes no judgment; it simply reports to the commanding general the facts in the particular case to aid the judgment of the commanding general upon the question whether an officer is to be put upon trial before a court-martial; but I have no objection to allowing the findings of a court of inquiry to go before the Judge Advocate General. All proceedings before courts-martial, I think, ought to be reviewed somewhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves to strike out the words "and military commissions," in the section proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Delaware. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana is first in order.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Has my colleague reflected upon the fact that by striking out these words, "and military commissions," he might prevent the sentence of a spy altogether? Who tried Major André?

Mr. HENDRICKS. A court-martial, I think.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. A court-martial perhaps, nominally, but it was a military commission. Courts-martial have cognizance of offenses committed by officers and soldiers in our own service. Courts of inquiry had military jurisdiction to try charges when the party himself asks an investigation, or where his superior officer demands an investigation. These are the offices of courts-martial and courts of inquiry as I understand.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask my colleague if, under the Articles of War, a spy cannot be tried by a court-martial and sentenced to death?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Under the Articles of War courts-martial are provided for. Spies are not specifically named at all in the Articles of War. They are guilty under the laws of nations. The laws of war as recognized by the laws of nations define the offense of being a spy, but I think it is not defined or anywhere specifically defined in the Rules and Articles of War, if I recollect them rightly.

My colleague says that he indorses the action and finding of the commission in the case of the assassins of President Lincoln. I might have referred to another case while I was up, the case of Wirz. That, it seems to me, was a proper case for a military commission. There the sentence was death; there the sentence was executed; there the commission was constituted under the order of the present President; and there the sentence was approved and executed under his approbation. Wirz was neither in the military or naval service of the United States, nor was he a spy, but he was tried by a military commission for a violation of the laws of war under the laws of nations. If this section should be restricted as my colleague proposes to amend it, there would be no possible jurisdiction in the case of Wirz, because he neither belonged to the military or naval service, and was not technically, or in any sense, a spy; and yet his case was properly cognizable before a military commission, because, as I conceive, he had violated the laws of nations regulating the laws of war and the treatment of prisoners. There is one case where, if the jurisdiction was restricted as my colleague desires, there could have been no possible trial and no possible punishment.

But my colleague refers to a late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, where certain men were tried by a military commission in my State, and I, at least, have no doubt of their guilt, the people, I think, have no doubt of their guilt, their monstrous guilt, and the Supreme Court released them without giving any decision. We do not know the grounds of that decision; we do not know whether they placed it upon the irregularity of the proceedings or the want of jurisdiction, or the nature of the offense, or the extravagant character of it. We are left wholly in the dark; no decision has been pronounced; but if that Supreme Court undertake to deny in a time of war the jurisdiction of military commissions to try men who have assassinated your President, who have starved your prisoners, who have conspired to overturn the Government, I trust in God they may never stain the judicial records of the country by writing any opinion upon the subject.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall now have a vote on this amendment that is proposed. I suppose it is understood. Everybody understands that this Bureau of Military Justice does not get up prosecutions; that it simply receives, revises, and records the proceedings of courts of inquiry, courts-martial, and military commissions. They have had a vast deal of work to do during the war. At one time they had eight thousand cases that they could not reach. We are told to-day by the Senator from Indiana that they have five thousand cases not yet touched. They make the examination and report to the Secretary of War the facts of the case, and make up the record. It goes to the Secretary of War and to the President, who has the final decision to make.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator one question: why the necessity of introducing this expression "military commissions," when a military commission is not a military court known to existing laws?

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that I suppose to-day there are several hundred cases yet unacted upon in this bureau of the action of military commissions as well as courts-martial and courts of inquiry. These cases go there. The bureau never hear of them until they get there. They take them up usually in their order as they come along, unless in special cases, like the one the Senator referred to just now. I have had two or three cases of the kind during the winter of officers who have been court-martialed or tried in some way, to which I called the attention of the War Department, and they have had the cases examined and hurried on for action. I suppose there are reports of military commissions yet unrevised and unrecorded in that office.

If the Senator desires to pass an act that there shall be no military commissions in time of war, I do not know that I would object to it. We authorized, by law, the establishment of military commissions for certain purposes. I believe they have rendered great service during the war. There is no doubt they have made some mistakes, and so have courts-martial. All those tribunals are liable to mistakes; I think more liable than judicial tribunals are. But while these cases go to the bureau I think they ought to be acted upon. Suppose the Senator's attention was now called to a case of the action of a military commission which has been sent to the office here and not been touched, and there it remains. Some person is wronged by it, the Senator thinks. He wishes the case examined, and he goes to the War Department and asks to have the case called up. Now, why should it not be and disposed of? If the Senator desires to get rid of military commissions altogether, let us pass a simple act of that kind; but while we have them, and while we now have every reason to believe there are before this very bureau reports of military commissions that concern the rights of men, why not let this bureau pass upon them, revise and record the cases, reexamine them, or do anything with them in order to reach the ends of justice?

Mr. HENDRICKS. In reply to the Senator I will say that I would not object, of course, to the review of cases that have already taken place. If the court have no jurisdiction, I want the Judge Advocate General to say so, and set aside their findings; but I do not want to recognize by general legislation a military court not known to our system. But with the explanation of the Senator that his purpose is to dispose of the cases that have been already tried, and with that understanding, I shall not insist on my amendment. I think it is desirable that the cases that have been already tried should be disposed of. I think it is very important there should be an appellate military court. With the understanding that it is to dispose of the cases already there, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana withdraws his amendment, and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to strike out the twelfth section of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a new section, to precede the last section:

And be it further enacted, That the third section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866," shall continue in force until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. WILSON. What is that?

Mr. HARRIS. In the appropriation bill of last year a section was incorporated providing that during the continuance of the present rebellion, the commutation price of officers' subsistence shall be fifty cents per ration. That provision is to terminate with the rebellion, whenever that may be. Whether that has occurred yet or not, perhaps is a matter of a good deal of doubt. My object in offering this amendment is to continue the price of rations until otherwise provided by law, as it now is, at fifty cents instead of thirty cents.

Mr. WILSON. That would increase the pay of the Army that much. If the Senate is prepared to do that, I do not know that it is unjust in itself. By the old law, the ration was valued at thirty cents. During the war it was provided that while the rebellion continued, it should be valued at fifty cents; and the Senator now proposes to continue it at fifty cents.

Mr. HARRIS. For the present, until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire what is paid now, fifty or thirty cents.

Mr. WILSON. Fifty cents, except to persons who have fuel and quarters. They are excepted.

Mr. HARRIS. This amendment does not apply to those who have fuel and quarters. It only applies to officers in the field. Where the Government furnishes rations now in kind they cannot furnish them at fifty cents.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should very much prefer that the Senator from Massachusetts would bring before us the House bill that fixes the pay of Army officers, so that we could understand it. I have never been able to know how much was paid to an officer in the Army under this Government. There are half a dozen provisions in the bill under consideration that particular officers are to have the pay of colonels of cavalry. I suppose that that means they are to get more pay than an ordinary colonel, under some pretense or other or some sort of device. I do not know how much a colonel of cavalry gets more than any other colonel, but I have no doubt he gets more, or else such a provision would not be inserted in this bill.

Mr. WILSON. Staff officers, who have to use horses, are allowed more.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish it was put in intelligible language, so that the common people of the country and those who make the laws could tell what the pay of an Army officer was. There are so many regulations changing it that I confess I do not know what the pay is. We ascertained in the Senate, accidentally, in the discussion of a bill a few days ago—it was brought to our notice, I believe, by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE]—that the pay of the Navy had been increased some twenty or fifty per cent., I do not remember which, and nobody knew anything about it. The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who watches the financial condition of the country and the Treasury very closely, knew nothing of it, and was astonished when he found that the pay of the Navy had been increased in that way; and so it goes. If the Senator from Massachusetts would put upon this bill the House bill fixing certain pay for Army officers, I would agree to almost anything if I could understand what it was.

Mr. WILSON. One word in regard to the House bill. We shall report on that bill in a day or two. I think we shall hardly want to sit here during the summer to consider it. For my part, I regard it as the crudest of crude things, as working the grossest injustice and inequality; and I take it that the more you study it the more you will come to that conclusion. It increases enormously the pay of certain officers and cuts down others. I believe the present system of pay to be the wisest the wit of man ever devised, and it is as simple as any proposition can possibly be and easily understood. There is no trouble about it at all. It is made to adjust itself to our great country and its varying system. That is my belief about it. However, that has nothing to do with the amendment now before us, which is a very simple proposition. A ration before the war was valued at thirty cents. It is now valued at fifty cents. The Senator from New York proposes that it shall continue to be fifty cents instead of thirty cents. A lieutenant colonel receives four rations. A colonel, I think, receives six. The value of them is easily calculated. There is no trouble in that respect.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is all very simple to the Senator from Massachusetts. It is easily understood, he says. I confess I do not understand it, and for my information, in a matter that is so easily understood by him, I should be much obliged to him if he will have the kindness to answer me one question. In the eleventh section of this bill there is a provision that there shall be four inspectors general of the Army, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels of cavalry, and three assistant inspectors general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels of cavalry. Will the Senator from Massachusetts be kind enough to tell me how much per annum an inspector general, with the rank and pay and emoluments of a lieutenant colonel, will receive? I shall be very much obliged to him if he does, and I will try to remember that so as to know what the pay of an inspector general of cavalry, with the rank of a lieutenant colonel, per annum is. If the Senator from Massachusetts, to whom this matter is so simple, and who knows it as well as his A B C, will be kind enough to tell me what that pay is per annum I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. NESMITH. As the Senator from Massachusetts seems to be engaged I will answer the Senator from Illinois. The pay and allowances of a colonel of cavalry amount to $211 a month, and of a lieutenant colonel to $187 a month. A colonel of infantry receives $194, and a lieutenant colonel $170. That is the pay and allowances per month.

Mr. GRIMES. Suppose he has been in the service twenty-five years?

Mr. NESMITH. Then he would get an additional ration.

Mr. WILSON. In that case he would have $540 added to his pay.

Mr. GRIMES. How much would be his commutation for quarters? That is not mentioned in that list.

Mr. NESMITH. This is on the supposition that the Government furnishes him his quarters.

Mr. GRIMES. Suppose the Government does not.

Mr. NESMITH. If the Government send him to a place where it is difficult to obtain quarters, of course then they pay the commutation value. We cannot pass a law regulating what shall be the cost of quarters and fuel, which varies with every post in the country. The law is founded in wisdom, and is in itself just, that where an officer is stationed at a post where fuel and quarters are high he shall be paid in proportion to their cost. This pay that I have stated is based upon the presumption that the Government furnishes the quarters and fuel. This embraces his pay per month, the number of rations, with the monthly commutation value, the number of servants allowed per month and the commutation value, and everything of that sort.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As the Senator from Oregon has volunteered to instruct us on this subject, and I am not apt enough scholar yet to understand it, he will excuse me for pressing the inquiry a little further, as he is posted in these matters. In answer to a question of mine as to how much an inspector general with the rank and pay of a lieutenant colonel of cavalry received per annum, he has read, I suppose, from the Army Register the monthly pay. I should like to know of the Senator whether his pay for commutation of rations does not depend upon the character of the service he is in, and whether he has any allowances for quarters, and whether the number of his servants or the number of horses for which he has allowances does not depend upon the character of the service or where he is. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell me?

Mr. NESMITH. The pay for his rations and commutation of rations and for servants is not varied by the service which he is rendering.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is the same always, is it?

Mr. NESMITH. Yes, sir; but the commutation for fuel and quarters varies at the different posts at which he may be stationed. For instance, it has been higher during the war at Washington than at any other point; but the other commutation allowances are not varied, as I understand.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I understand that my instructor does not know himself what it is, just as I stated to begin with. I hope now, he having volunteered to inform us what the pay per annum was, and having failed, and having admitted in the presence of the Senate that the pay depends upon circumstances that he does not know anything about, that he will allow the instructor-in-chief, who says it is perfectly plain, to tell us what it is per annum.

Mr. NESMITH. I never undertook to instruct so dull a scholar before. [Laughter.] I did say precisely what the pay and commutation allowances were per month; and I supposed that the distinguished Senator from Illinois, with all his capacity, was able to multiply that amount by twelve, and ascertain precisely what it would be per annum. Of course, if an officer is engaged on service traveling he is allowed commutation for traveling expenses, six cents a mile. As I remarked when up before, the commutation varies according to the duty he is ordered upon, not the pay proper or the commutation allowances for servants and rations, but the pay for traveling expenses. The pay for traveling expenses at one time was different on this side and on the Pacific side. It was ten cents a mile some time ago; and we have cut it down to six cents. If an officer is ordered to travel, he gets his pay proper per month, his commutation for rations, and servants, and then gets his six cents per mile, but he gets no commutation for fuel and quarters. As the Senator is so very fastidious about the mode of my answer, and complains about my being a bad instructor, I can only retaliate by saying that he is a dull student. If he will state any particular circumstances under which an officer is placed, in which he would like to know exactly what his pay is, I will cipher it out to his satisfaction. It is very easily done.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is very manifest, I think, from what the Senator from Oregon says, that he is unable to tell what the pay of an officer is, or what it will be for the next year. He has admitted now that that pay depends upon the character of the service he performs, whether he travels about, whether he has quarters provided for him, or whether he has allowances for fuel and quarters. Those are the very things that render it uncertain. Of course, we all know that a certain amount per month was allowed; but I undertake to say now, from what the Senator himself has stated, that he cannot tell what the pay of those officers he is creating is to be for the next year. Will the Senator from Oregon undertake to tell me how much an inspector general who acts as a lieutenant colonel of cavalry will receive under this bill for the next year—not what he did receive for last year? If he will, then I can understand it; but if he tells me that it is to depend on how much he travels, the Senator does not know how much he will travel. If he tells me that it is to depend on how much fuel he has, and how long he has quarters furnished him, and how long he furnishes them himself, of course it depends upon future events which neither he nor I know anything about.

Mr. NESMITH. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I will say that he has gone off upon a grand system of mystification. The thing itself is as simple as that two and two make four. He starts out by making it up with something like the proposition, if a cord of wood measures one hundred and twenty-eight feet, what will a bag of wool weigh? [Laughter.] I cannot undertake to determine the proposition upon that sort of premises. I can tell him exactly what a colonel of cavalry receives per month, what his commutation for rations and servants is, and if he does not get his quarters and fuel, what his commutation for that will be. If he travels ten thousand miles he will get six cents a mile; what does that amount to? The Senator can figure that. If he only travels one thousand miles, he only gets six cents for that. If he travels two miles and a half he will get precisely fifteen cents. [Laughter.] Those, it seems to me, are all propositions that are plain and simple enough. You do not hear any paymaster who undertakes to pay the Army hesitate a moment about this. The thing is just as simple as that two and two make four. The commutation for fuel and quarters depends upon the place where the officer is located. Here in Washington there was one price during the war. It is usually established at about the price the fuel and quarters cost.

The Senator referred to the pay bill that passed the House as being of very great consequence, and which it was very proper that we should pass here. I can tell him that an officer might be sent to a military post where his entire salary under that bill would not pay for his fuel. On the Platte wood costs over $100 a cord. Is it not proper, when an officer is sent there and compelled to have fuel, that the Government should commute to him the cost of it or furnish him fuel in kind?

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Illinois thinks it is a very difficult thing under the present law to ascertain what an officer receives; and he is very anxious about what a lieutenant colonel of cavalry receives; he thinks he must receive more than a lieutenant colonel of infantry. That is so; he receives seventeen dollars a month more, and twelve times seventeen would be the additional amount he would receive in a year, just about two hundred dollars. A lieutenant colonel of cavalry would receive a little over $2,600 a year, if he was paid nothing for traveling. If he was on duty where he did not travel any, and where the Government furnished him in kind fuel and quarters, he would receive between twenty-six and twenty-seven hundred dollars a year. Now, what is the House bill to which allusion is made? Its object is to get rid of the present system; and what does it inaugurate? The Secretary of War may give these officers quarters. What will be the interpretation of that here in this city? Where officers entitled to quarters are stationed here the amount they receive will not pay their rent and does not average it in this city. It is so in New York; it is in Philadelphia; it is so all through the country. By the House bill the Secretary of War can allow quarters to all the officers of the Army, and can say to this man, "You are allowed so much for quarters here in the city of Washington." He does not get fuel, but it is provided that fuel may be bought and other things necessary may be bought without including the cost of transportation at different parts of the country. In fact the new system that was to make everything so very plain has to resort to the same expedients, and must do it, or the grossest inequalities will be made. Now an officer for every five years he has been in the service receives one additional ration, $108 a year. If he has been in forty years he receives $896 increased pay on account of this service ration. What does the new House bill do? It gives him ten per cent. on his pay every five years, and a colonel receiving $3,000 a year would, when he had been in service forty years, have $2,400 added to his compensation annually, while under the present system he would have about nine hundred dollars. Here is an increase of about fifteen hundred dollars to the old officers, while it cuts down the captains and lieutenants and the inferior officers of the Army. Under that bill some colonels in the service would receive about two thousand dollars a year more than others.

So it will be perceived that the system adopted in the House bill has its inequalities. You cannot devise any plan that has not. I believe that the present system has grown up in this country founded upon reason, that it is adapted to our large country and our varied service, that it is in itself plain and simple, that it is a better system than any we are likely to devise. Still the House bill is before our committee; we shall report it in a few days, and I think we shall propose to put it off until December next, and between now and then we can think over it and consider it. However, we have been led off from the consideration of the bill before the Senate. I hope we shall get a vote upon it as speedily as possible, as I am very anxious to dispose of it to-day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The complaint which I made was not that the House bill fixed the rates at less than they now are, or at more. It was the certainty which I thought it desirable to obtain; that is the thing we do not have; and for the life of me, notwithstanding what the Senator from Massachusetts has said, I do not see why we cannot pay Army officers just as we pay other officers of the Government. We pay the judges of our courts a certain salary; we know how much money to appropriate in advance to pay them. So we know how much money to appropriate in advance to pay postmasters, the officers connected with the Treasury Department, all the other officers of the Government; and I think we might fix a certain sum for the officers of the Army. If the House of Representatives has sent us a bill full of inequalities, nobody is better qualified to correct those inequalities than the Senator from Massachusetts; he can perfect that bill, and let us have some bill which will tell the country and tell all of us when we read it what the pay of an Army officer is. That is what we do not know; and with all the information we have been able to obtain now we do not know, because it depends at last upon the character of the service which the officer performs, as we are told by the Senator from Oregon. In other words, the Senator says to us "If you will tell us what an officer is to do next year we will tell you exactly how much he is to be paid next year;" that is to say, if we tell them how much he is paid they will tell us how much he ought to be paid. Is it not possible to fix the pay of an Army officer for a year in advance at a certain sum, and let him discharge the duties of the office, whatever they may be?

Mr. NESMITH. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me I wish to put a question to him. Suppose that two colonels were in Washington city to-day, one of them ordered to remain here on duty for twelve months, another ordered to travel perhaps twenty-five thousand miles within the twelve months, would it be fair or just that the same salary should be established for the two men discharging those two particular duties, without reference to travel?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Which would get the largest salary as it now stands?

Mr. NESMITH. The man doing the traveling.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Would that amount to more than the quarters provided here?

Mr. NESMITH. Yes; a great deal. He would get paid for his travel six cents a mile under the present law, or ten cents as a bill we passed the other day makes it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Would the mileage in such a case be more than the cost of travel? And is it not probable that the man here would get more money than the other?

Mr. NESMITH. No.

Mr. GRIMES. Aside from the amount to be expended by the man who is traveling, which would get the larger compensation, the one who was compelled to undergo the fatigue of traveling or the one stationed as a bureau agent at Washington?

Mr. NESMITH. So far as the compensation proper is concerned—

Mr. GRIMES. I mean so far as the aggregate is concerned.

Mr. NESMITH. I do not suppose there would be any particular difference. It would take the compensation of the man who is stationed in Washington to pay for fuel and quarters, while the compensation of the other officer for traveling twenty-five thousand miles, at six or ten cents, would only pay his expenses; so that in the end they would come out, probably, nearly even. That is the intention of the law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then it would seem that the man who performed this arduous service and traveled so many miles would get nothing more than he who staid at Washington after all. I do not think he should get any more or any less, to answer the Senator's question. Officers of the Army enter the service for life. One year they are stationed at Washington, the next year out on the plains. They take their turns. One year an officer travels and the next he is stationed at some post. If he has more service to perform in one year without getting any additional pay the next year he will probably perform less service than some other officer who gets no more pay than he does, and in the end it will be equal. It is just so with your judges of courts. They do not all travel the same distance; they do not all have the same number of courts to hold, and yet you fix the salary of each justice of the Supreme Court at the same amount. It does not depend upon the number of miles he goes to hold his court or how many days he sits in court. I presume some of the justices of the Supreme Court hold court many more days than others do.

Now, sir, it seems to me it would be altogether better to have a fixed, known price for these services. I have nothing to say in regard to the proposition of the Senator from New York immediately pending, because I am not sufficiently informed as to the propriety of raising these rations from thirty to fifty cents. It seems they were put up on account of the war. I wish to make one remark, however. The Senator from New York speaks of this as being raised "for the present." This is to be a permanent law. It will be an anomaly in the legislation of this country when you get salaries up to have a bill come in to put them down. I have never seen anything of that leveling process since I have been a member here. I have known a great many instances of bills introduced to pay some favorite officer, some officer who has performed extraordinary duties, and we have increased his salary $800 or $1,000; and the next year a bill will come in to pay the other officers the same as this colonel of cavalry has, and they will say it is an inequality and you must equalize it; but I never knew a bill to come in since I have been a member of the body to put down the higher salary and equalize it with the lower one. If this proposition should be adopted it will be as permanent as any of our laws, I think.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator argues as if this were a proposition to increase the pay. My proposition is simply to keep it where it is. Unless this amendment should be adopted, the moment the rebellion is at an end, when we can find out when that is, the ration goes down from fifty to thirty cents. I propose to keep it where it is until Congress shall see fit to reduce it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to strike out the word "January," in the eleventh line of the twenty-fifth section, and to insert "July." The proviso now reads:

That this section shall not go into effect until the 1st day of January, 1867.

I propose that it shall go into effect the 1st day of July. The point is this: we abolish sutlers in the Army. Many of those sutlers are now scattered over the country, and have stocks of goods on hand, and the question is whether they can get out of the position they are in by the 1st of January. It is thought by some that they cannot. This is a very important change that will save a great deal to the Army, and I am willing to give these men a year to get out of the business. I therefore move to strike out the word "January" and to insert "July."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following amendment in the form of a proviso to the twelfth section:

Provided, That no court-martial, court of inquiry, or military commission shall take jurisdiction of any case that does not arise in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger.

I offer this amendment upon this plain provision of the Constitution, which is to be found in article five of the amendments:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment by a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger," &c.

It seems to me to be a plain constitutional provision that a man who is not in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in the actual service of the United States, is not triable by a military commission. We know that this principle has been violated very frequently during the progress of the whole war. I want the legislation of Congress on this subject to be in strict conformity to the Constitution, and that the Constitution may protect the rights of every civilian against being arraigned before military courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I see in the thirteenth section that the quartermasters to be appointed under this bill are to be taken from the persons who have served as quartermasters during the war. Why is it that those who are to be appointed as commissaries of subsistence are not likewise to be taken from the commissaries of subsistence during the war?

Mr. WILSON. There are no new commissaries to be appointed. The bill adds a few quartermasters but there are no commissaries added, and therefore we do not want such a provision.

Mr. HENDERSON. How is it in regard to surgeons, in the seventeenth section?

Mr. WILSON. There are some surgeons added.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why not take them from the corps of surgeons who served during the war?

Mr. WILSON. We do.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not so provided. There is no provision of that sort here. I think that those men who served during the war, and who have distinguished themselves, and shown their competency and qualifications for positions of this sort had better be provided for. I suppose, in regard to inspectors, the Senator would answer me as he did in respect to commissaries, that the corps is full, and none are to be appointed; but it is not so in regard to the assistant surgeons.

Mr. WILSON. It does not add to the aggregate number; but it takes two majors and makes then lieutenant colonels. There are five majors now, and we make two lieutenant colonels.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to interfere with the bill, because I do not understand the subject very well, but with the Senator's permission I will offer an amendment, unless it conflicts with his views. In section seventeen, line twelve, after the word "service," I propose to insert these words, "said assistant surgeons to be selected from among those who served in the same capacity during the late war."

Mr. WILSON. I agree to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. On page 3 of the bill, section four, line six, I propose to insert the word "and" before the word "of," and after the word "of" to strike out the word "three," and to insert the words "eight new;" in line seven to strike out the words "to be designated the Veteran Reserve corps, and of," in line eight to strike out the words "of ten companies each," and to insert "of which shall be composed;" so that the clause will read:

And of eight new regiments of ten companies each; five regiments of which shall be composed of colored men to be designated United States colored troops.

Then after the word "conduct," in line sixteen, I move to strike out the words:

The Veteran Reserve corps shall be officered by selections from officers and soldiers of volunteers, or of the regular Army who have been disabled by accident, or wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty during the war.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the Senator to strike out everything he proposes to do in regard to the Veteran Reserve corps, but not increase the number of regiments.

Mr. HENDERSON. My amendment does not increase the number. The Senator will see that the section provides for three regiments of Veteran Reserves and five regiments of colored men, and I change it to eight regiments, so as to make it read, "and of eight new regiments of ten companies each, five regiments of which shall be composed of colored men, to be designated United States colored troops." That is five out of the eight. Then in line sixteen, after the word "conduct," I strike out the words that I have mentioned. That will cut out everything in regard to the Veteran Reserve corps, and leave the Army to be filled up by veterans from any corps whatever, provided they are competent to serve.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment proposed by the Senator will be read at the desk.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in section four, line six, to insert the word "and" before the word "of," and after the word "of" to strike out the word "three," and to insert the words "eight new;" in line seven to strike out the words, "to be designated the Veteran Reserve corps, and of," in line eight to strike out the words, "of ten companies each," and to insert "of which shall be composed;" so that the section will read:

That the forty-five regiments of infantry provided for by this act shall consist of the first ten regiments of ten companies each now in service; of twenty-seven regiments of ten companies each to be formed by adding two companies to each battalion of the remaining nine regiments; and of eight new regiments of ten companies each, five regiments of which shall be composed of colored men, to be designated United States colored troops.

Mr. WILSON. I rise now to answer a question put to me by the Senator from Iowa in regard to enlisting men who have been disabled by wounds in the Veteran corps. The Senator from Iowa put to me a question to know if we proposed to enlist in the ranks men who had been wounded. I will read that part of the eighth section:

It shall be competent to enlist men for the service who have been disabled by accident or wounds received or disease contracted in the line of their duty while serving in the Army of the United States, if on medical inspection it shall be found that by such wounds or disability they are not unfit for garrison or other light duty; and such men, when enlisted, shall be assigned to the regiments of the Veteran Reserve corps.

The intention was to make up three regiments to do garrison duty, to be officered by men who had been wounded, and to be made up of men who had been wounded in the line of their duty.

Mr. GRIMES. I will make another inquiry. I will inquire of the Senator whether or not it was the opinion of the Military Committee that these men who, being disabled, would be entitled to a pension would surrender that pension, or if he supposes that they, if receiving a pension, would be willing to go into the service as privates?

Mr. WILSON. In answer to the Senator I will say that in my judgment it will take a long while to enlist these three regiments of wounded men. We had quite a number of regiments kept up during the war mostly of men who had been wounded or had been sick; but when Congress met last autumn we had about six hundred officers and eight hundred men rank and file. The twenty-four regiments of the Veteran Reserve corps were reduced to that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is a humbug, anyhow.

Mr. GRIMES. That is exactly what I was going to say. The truth is, it seems to me everybody ought to be convinced that this attempt to raise a part of our regular Army, to be efficient in the future, out of men who have been, in the language of this bill, disabled already is one of the most absurd things that I have ever heard proposed. They are entitled to pensions; the country is willing to pay them pensions; and I suppose that Congress is disposed to increase the pensions if they are not able to support themselves upon what we already give them. But under the provisions of this bill I think the objection raised by the Senator from New York was well taken. As the law now stands, if these men should be appointed to-morrow as disabled officers into the Veteran Reserve corps, it will be not only the right but the duty of the Secretary of War to retire them the day after to-morrow because they are disabled. They therefore will go on the retired list, and have the advantage over men who have been disabled in the service, in so far as they will receive retired pay, while other men in the same regiment, who stood beside them in the same engagements, would be only entitled to the regular pension allowed by law. That is manifestly unjust.

Mr. HOWARD. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Conness, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wright, and Yates—18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is another portion of that amendment which will now necessarily follow. In section four, line sixteen, after the word "conduct," I move to strike out the following words:

The Veteran Reserve corps shall be officered by selection from officers and soldiers of volunteers or of the regular Army who have been disabled by accident or wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty during the war.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. It will be necessary now to strike out from the seventh to the thirteenth lines of the eighth section, in the following words, in compliance with the amendment that has just been adopted:

It shall be competent to enlist men for the service who have been disabled by accident or wounds received or disease contracted in the line of their duty while serving in the Army of the United States, if on medical inspection it shall be found that by such wounds or disability they are not unfit for garrison or other light duty; and such men, when enlisted, shall be assigned to the regiments of the Veteran Reserve corps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those lines will be stricken out to make the bill consistent, if no objection be interposed.

Mr. GRIMES. On the third page, in section four, lines eight and nine, I move to strike out the words "to be designated United States colored troops." The words are superfluous.

Mr. JOHNSON. How will it read then?

Mr. GRIMES. "That the forty-five regiments of infantry provided for by this act shall consist of the first ten regiments, of ten companies each, now in service; of twenty-seven regiments, of ten companies each, to be formed by adding two companies to each battalion of the remaining nine regiments; and of five regiments, of ten companies each, of colored men."

I propose to strike out the words, "to be designated United States colored troops."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, and the question will be taken on concurring in the amendments collectively, unless some Senator desires a separate vote.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that the amendment made by the Senator from New York, keeping the rations at fifty cents instead of at thirty cents, be excepted for a separate vote.

Mr. WILSON. I desire that the amendment to the twelfth section made by the Senator from Kentucky shall also be voted upon separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those amendments will be excepted.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to have reserved the amendment in regard to the Veteran Reserve corps.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senate decided that by a very large majority.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to have a vote upon it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be reserved. The question is on concurring in the residue of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the three exceptions that have been named.

The remainder of the amendments were concurred in.

The first reserved amendment was in section four, line six, to insert the word "and" before the word "of," and after the word "of" to strike out the word "three" and insert the words "eight new;" in line seven to strike out the words "to be designated the Veteran Reserve corps and of;" and in line eight to strike out the words "of ten companies each" and to insert "of which shall be composed;" so that the clause will read:

And eight new regiments of ten companies each, five regiments of which shall be composed of colored men.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the amendment which strikes out the Veteran Reserve corps.

Mr. GRIMES. There are two or three of those amendments that follow each other, as I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON. The decision of one decides all the rest.

Mr. WILSON. If the first one is adopted, the rest will follow as a matter of course.

Mr. POMEROY. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Several SENATORS. They have just been taken.

Mr. POMEROY. I will not insist upon it if they have been taken. I withdraw the call. The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was to add as a proviso to the twelfth section the following:

Resolved, That no court-martial, court of inquiry, or military commission shall take jurisdiction of any case that does not arise in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger.

Mr. DAVIS. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish simply to say that I am in favor of the proposition contained in that amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky; but if I heard it read correctly it is a precise copy of the language of the Constitution, and I do not think it will strengthen it any to put it into a law. I see no object in reenacting the language of the Constitution over again.

Mr. DAVIS. I doubt whether it would be observed if it was reenforced even in the Constitution. The honorable Senator says truly, this is the language of the Constitution; but I want these military gentlemen, and the Secretary of War, and the Judge Advocate General to know that Congress has adopted it as part of the law as well as of the Constitution, and that they are to observe it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Kentucky can give any assurance that they will pay any more respect to it in a law than they would in the Constitution, I do not know but that I should be inclined to vote with him. For myself I do not see any particular object in reenacting the Constitution.

Mr. HENDERSON. I apprehend that under the decision of the Supreme Court lately made in the cases of Bowles and Milligan, it is entirely unnecessary to reenact this provision. At the same time, if it is insisted upon, I shall vote for it. I have no doubt, and I never had a doubt, that the decision of the Supreme Court is correct. As the Senator from Illinois says, I deem this amendment unnecessary; but if the Senator from Kentucky insists upon it I shall vote for it. It is unnecessary, because a civilian tried by court-martial or military commission has his remedy before the courts of the country. Certainly no civilian can suffer any penalty from military tribunals after the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire whether this amendment is to deprive the Bureau of Military Justice of jurisdiction over cases pending there on appeal during the war. I understand that there is a large number of cases before the bureau that originated during the war, and are there for review. Will the adoption of this amendment deprive the bureau of jurisdiction in such cases and leave them unsettled and undetermined?

Mr. DAVIS. I have no doubt that many men who have constituted, in part, these military courts never read the Constitution, and do not know what the provision is in relation to this or almost any other subject therein provided for. I want those men, who probably look more to military law, as enacted by Congress, than they do to the Constitution, to have an opportunity of knowing how the Constitution reads by these words being adopted in this law. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable Senator from Kentucky is right, I think, in saying that this provision should be incorporated into the law. The error into which the military tribunals have fallen, as is now demonstrated by the decision of the Supreme Court, was in construing the act of Congress establishing the Rules and Articles of War. There is in one portion of that act some general words used which, construed by themselves, would include civilians as well as those who are attached to the Army, and I know from conversation with many military men who have acted upon these courts that they believed and honestly believed it was the purpose of Congress to include civilians in the jurisdiction of the military tribunals. I thought then, and I am confirmed in that opinion since the decision of the Supreme Court, that they placed an erroneous interpretation upon the act to which I refer; that, taken in connection with the other portions of the act, it was very manifest, to a lawyer at least, that the whole object of Congress was to include within the military jurisdiction of those tribunals only those who belonged to the Army or the Navy. The Supreme Court have so decided. But as that provision is still in the Rules and Articles of War, I think it is advisable that we should incorporate into this act some such phraseology as is proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, which will make it very clear to these military gentlemen that it is not the purpose of Congress to submit the citizen to trial by military tribunal.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me that the objection urged against the adoption of this amendment is not very sound. It is said that this provision is already in the Constitution, and therefore it is unnecessary to reenact it. Sir, the friends of liberty did not think so in former days. Magna Charta was reaffirmed six or eight times within a few years after it was enacted. The friends of liberty, in those days, jealous of their rights whenever they were infringed, did not think it was unnecessary to reaffirm them but they did reaffirm them; and whenever they were infringed they were found uttering their voice against the infraction, and reaffirming the great charter of their liberties. This, if it shall be adopted, will be a reaffirmance by the Senate of the United States of this provision of our great magna charta. It can do no harm. It holds up to the eyes of those in power charged with the administration of public affairs the solemn judgment of the American Senate, "Now that peace has come and war has ceased, beware how you further trample upon the constitutional rights of the people." Not being capable of doing any harm but probably resulting in much good, I should hope the amendment would be adopted.

Mr. HOWARD. I shall vote against this amendment because I deem it entirely unnecessary if the purpose of the mover of it is to reenact the Constitution—and that would seem to be his purpose so far as he has indicated it, but more especially if his object be to limit and restrain the present jurisdiction of courts-martial or military commissions. I believe the law at present is sufficiently settled and definite as to the jurisdiction of that kind of courts. The mover of the amendment seems to entertain the idea that he is reasserting the principles of the Constitution in the amendment which he offers. I do not so regard it. It is very true the fifth article of the amendments of the Constitution speaks of cases arising in the military or naval service of the United States, or in the militia when called into actual service. In those special cases it is not necessary, according to that amendment, that the accusation should be presented in the form of an indictment against the accused; and that is the sole effect of the clause, and it relates to a comparatively small portion of military offenses. It can apply only to such military offenses as are punishable capitally, or which in themselves are infamous crimes. In such cases in the civil service there must be an indictment. That is the entire meaning and application of the clause.

I do not look upon article five of the amendments to the Constitution as giving any jurisdiction at all to courts-martial or military commissions. It has nothing to do with those courts; it does not provide for the establishment or creation of those courts, but only secures the right of an accused party charged with a capital or otherwise infamous offense the right to be indicted by a grand jury of the proper number. It is not this source from which we derive authority to establish military commissions, but from those clauses of the Constitution which authorize Congress to make rules and regulations for the government of the land and naval forces, to raise and support armies, and to carry on war. These, as I understand, are the sources of the power to establish courts-martial and military commissions, and I know of no clause in the Constitution which limits the jurisdiction of courts-martial or military commissions further than they are understood to be limited by the laws of war, unless Congress should see fit to limit their jurisdiction. The source of power for the establishment of these courts, in my judgment, is not found in the fifth article of the amendments, nor in that article which provides that in all criminal cases the accused shall be entitled to a trial by jury without any distinction of cases which are military in their nature or civil in their nature. The whole power is derived from the authority of Congress to raise and support armies, to carry on war, and to make rules and regulations for the government of the land and naval forces of the United States. In those respects we have the same power and authority that any other Government possesses over the whole subject. Fearing, therefore, that the effect of this amendment may be to restrict and restrain unnecessarily and injuriously the just jurisdiction of courts-martial and military commissions, and that its purposes will not be really to reenact the Constitution, which would be an idle ceremony, utterly useless, not to bestow upon it worse epithets, I must vote against the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Sprague—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Conness, Edmunds, Fessenden, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Pomero, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Harris, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Sherman, Trumbull, Wright, and Yates—19.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The Secretary read the next excepted amendment, which was to insert the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the third section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866," shall continue in force until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. BROWN. I asked to have that amendment separated from the others with a view of moving to amend it. I move to strike out "until otherwise provided by law" and insert "for one year from the passage of this act." I am satisfied that it is premature now to adopt a permanent system in regard to an increase of that sort in the Army, and that one year's time will give us ample opportunity. I believe the Senator from New York agrees to that.

Mr. HARRIS. I am satisfied with the change proposed by the Senator from Missouri, and if it were competent for me to do so I would accept the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. RAMSEY. I now offer the amendment which I indicated before, to insert after the word "service," in the twelfth line of the section which was inserted on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. NESMITH,] the words "and privates who have served three years and been honorably discharged shall upon like occasions be entitled to the honorary rank of first lieutenant and wear the uniform of that grade, and at the expiration of five years from the 9th of April, 1865, they shall be entitled to the honorary rank of captain." I will simply ask Senators, why should a distinction be made in favor of officers and no like discrimination in favor of privates who did the service and fought the battles? I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RAMSEY. I can see no sufficient reason why there should be a discrimination against the privates. They really did the fighting in all our battles. If special honors are to be showered upon the officers, to which I have no objection, why make a discrimination against the privates? I hope it will not go out from this Senate Chamber that there is that kind of indifference to their credit, reputation, and honor hereafter. It costs nothing; it is a mere empty honor, if you please to say so. If you are to shower honors upon officers who have already all places conferred upon them in the civil, probably, as well as the military service, I cannot see any reason why this little honor should not be paid to the privates. In the French service almost every officer and private has a red ribbon bestowed upon him. Why should not the privates here have this little honor conferred upon them?

Mr. WILSON. The amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from Oregon provides simply that officers of the regular Army who have served with volunteers shall, on occasions of ceremony, have the rank they had among the volunteers.

Mr. NYE. This extends the same to the privates.

Mr. WILSON. This does not apply to volunteers; there is not a volunteer in the country concerned in it. It is a proposition that the rank and file of the regular Army who have served three years shall on all occasions of ceremony be first lieutenants.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask that the amendment be read again. I think that the Senator from Massachusetts is entirely mistaken about it.

The Secretary read Mr. RAMSEY's amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator from Massachusetts is surely mistaken.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly not. It says "privates." Privates of what? Privates of the regular Army.

Mr. CONNESS. Every private who has served three years in the Army.

Mr. WILSON. We are dealing with privates of the regular Army, not volunteers.

Mr. CONNESS. It can be amended so as to read "privates of the regular and volunteer services."

Mr. WADE. Without this provision what is there to prevent the privates from assuming just such characters as they please on occasions of ceremony, and taking the title of majors if they see fit?

Mr. NYE. There is a penalty.

Mr. WADE. I do not think there is.

Mr. NESMITH. So far as this is applicable to the regular Army I fear there may be some difficulty about it. On an occasion of ceremony in a year or two all the privates would be captains, and the lieutenants remaining lieutenants, the captains would have the right to command. Thus the privates might command the company. It would create a great deal of embarrassment to make eighty captains in a company commanding two or three officers.

Mr. CONNESS. It is quite apparent that the members of the Senate who belong to the Committee on Military Affairs do not understand this amendment. I think it is easily understood, and I must say that the Senator who has given it existence simply proves to the country that he is not unmindful of the great services the brave private soldiers have rendered to the country.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, Resulted—yeas 15, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Cragin, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, and Wade—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Morgan, Nesmith, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Cowan, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Poland, Sherman, Wright, and Yates—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote against this bill. I shall not take up the time of the Senate by calling for the yeas and nays, but I wish to put myself on the record as opposed to it. It increases the regular Army but very little. It has been, I am told, about forty-eight thousand. This bill increases the privates but very little but increases the officers most wonderfully and increases the expenses of the Government.

The bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill in regard to the repairing and reconstruction of the levees of the Mississippi.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We want to get up another bill. We will not delay your bill but a little while.

Mr. BROWN. I think it is unfair to take up the bill at the end of the day's session.

Mr. CLARK. I hope it will come up at the present time. You will not be in the way of anybody to-morrow.

Mr. HOWE rose.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOWE. I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire. Here is the bill for the construction of a canal around the falls of Niagara which has been before the Senate; the amendments are nearly concluded, and I do think that the Senator's bill which has recently been introduced ought not to press in ahead of this.

Mr. CLARK. I know very well that the bill which the Senator speaks of has been several times before the Senate, and I want him to give me a little opportunity to dispose of this bill; and if I am very much in the way, I will get out of the way if he will give me half as much time as he has had.

Mr. HOWE. I am not sure the Senator will ever get out of my way. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. I am eager to get out of your way if you give me half the time you had. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the Senate will allow me to take up this bill.

Mr. BROWN. I do not want to take it up now; that is the reason why I want to adjourn.

The question being put the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The question being put, there were, on a division—yeas 13, noes 4; no quorum voting.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 9, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ORTH asked and obtained leave of absence for the remainder of the session for Mr. STILWELL and Mr. CULLOM.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER announced, as the first business in order, the call of committees for reports, to go upon the Calendar and not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

No reports were presented.

The SPEAKER announced, as the next business in order, the call of States for resolutions, and for bills on leave, commencing with the State of New Hampshire, where the call was interrupted last Monday by the expiration of the morning hour.

LAND GRANT FOR FEMALE COLLEGES.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of a donation of lands by Congress for the endowment of female colleges in the several States.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, also presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of Connecticut; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed:

GENERAL ASSEMBLY, STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
May Session, 1866.

Resolved by this Assembly, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and hereby are, requested to use their influence to procure a donation of lands by Congress to endow female colleges in the several States.

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor be, and is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved May 23, 1866.

TRADE WITH BRITISH PROVINCES.

Mr. HUMPHREY submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to this House at its next session a statement of the revenue, trade, and commerce of the United States with the British Provinces since the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty, and any changes in Canadian tariff regulations, and also the comparative importance of Canadian and American commercial channels of transportation of property to and from the West to the sea-board, as shown by their returns, together with such other information as may be in his possession at that time, to assist in correctly estimating the relations and value of the trade and commerce of the British Provinces to the trade and productions of the United States.

REMONSTRANCE AGAINST TARIFF BILL.

Mr. DODGE presented the following remonstrance of the New York Chamber of Commerce against the passage of the tariff bill now pending in the House; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
NEW YORK, July 5, 1866.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York respectfully remonstrates against the passage of the bill now before the House of Representatives entitled "A bill to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes," and asks leave to submit for the consideration of Congress the following objections thereto:

In the first place the title of the bill is misleading. The enhanced duties it proposes being, in many cases, so high that they must prove prohibitive, its adoption could not fail to diminish rather than increase the revenue from imports. The proposed enhancement of duties is chiefly, if not altogether, on imported articles which come directly in competition with similar domestic products, such, for example, as iron, wool, woolsens, worsteds, linens, and cigars. These are all leading articles in our import trade, and no one familiar with that trade can doubt that the exorbitant duties which this bill proposes to subject them to would greatly diminish their import, and thereby lessen the revenue of the Government. It appears to your remonstrants impolitic to lessen the gold revenue of the Government at a time when its gold liabilities are increasing; and it seems especially impolitic to do so coincidently with the abandonment of many of the existing sources of internal revenue. There is reason to apprehend that the joint effect of the two measures might so reduce the revenue of the Government as to leave the aggregate insufficient to meet its current expenses and maturing interest, and thus weaken the public credit.

But your remonstrants object to this measure on other and broader grounds. They believe its adoption would prove injurious to every interest affected by it. It would be specially injurious to commerce by diverting it from its established channels, by lessening our foreign trade, and by leaving our large mercantile marine without adequate or profitable employment. It would mar the prosperity of agriculture by increasing the cost of its supplies without enhancing the prices of its products, which are governed, as are those of all exportable commodities, by the foreign market value. It would injure mechanics by increasing the cost of living without enhancing wages. And finally, through its exorbitant protection, it would endanger the permanent prosperity of the manufacturing interest itself, which it is specially intended to protect and foster. It proposes to increase that protection by adding from ten to fifty per cent. to the present high rates of duty at the moment when the amended internal revenue laws relieve that interest from a heavy excise tax. The joint effect of the two measures will be to confer on that interest a rate of protection ranging from fifty to one hundred per cent.; and this protection will be absolute with the excise taxes annulled, and the premium on exchange and on gold to pay duties compensating the manufacturers for the adverse effects of the depreciated currency.

This degree of protection being at least twice as large as that interest has hitherto enjoyed under the revenue laws most favorable to it, we may expect to see it engender a home competition which will ultimately prove fatal to its prosperity. We may also expect to see the people soon become so restive under this unwarrantable boon conferred on a favored interest as to demand its repeal, and the substitution of a tariff strictly grounded on the principle of revenue. This, combined with the effects of home competition, would be liable to involve the manufacturing interests of our country in general bankruptcy. For these reasons your remonstrants respectfully ask that the bill may not become a law.

A. A. LOW, President.

Attest:

[L. S.] JOHN AUSTIN STEVENS, Jr.,
Secretary.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MORRIS introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," approved September 24, 1789; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANTS IN HOUSE FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. NEWELL submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be requested to inquire into the propriety of increasing the salaries of the assistants in the folding-room whose pay has not been increased during the present session to a sum equal to that recently given to other officers employed in similar duties in that department.

TIME FOR MEETING OF CONGRESS.

Mr. SCOFIELD introduced a bill to change the time for the annual meeting of Congress from the first Monday of December to the first Monday in November; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A. W. FLEMING.

Mr. COFFROTH introduced a bill for the relief of A. W. Fleming; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN GORDON.

Mr. MILLER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the salary of John Gordon, principal messenger to the Postmaster General, be, and is hereby, raised to $1,200 per annum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the salary of a messenger in one of the Departments cannot be increased by a resolution of this House.

Mr. MILLER. I withdraw the resolution.

BANCROFT'S MEMORIAL ADDRESS.

Mr. MILLER submitted the following resolution:

Whereas, under instruction of the Committee on Printing, but one hundred copies were allowed to each member of this House of the able memorial address of Hon. George Bancroft on the life and character of our late much esteemed and lamented President, Abraham Lincoln; and whereas the number of copies so furnished is entirely inadequate for anything like a fair distribution of such a valuable production: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, authorized and required to cause to be printed such additional number of copies as will allow to each member two hundred more for distribution.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I suppose this resolution must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MILLER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the resolution under the law must be referred to the Committee on Printing. The resolution instructs the committee to report in favor of printing a certain number of copies.

Mr. ROSS. I would like to amend the resolution so as to provide for printing Agricultural Reports instead.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is right, and the Chair holds that the resolution must, under the law, be referred to the Committee on Printing, although it is mandatory.

Mr. MORRILL. If the previous question be not seconded, cannot the resolution be rejected?

The SPEAKER. Under the law (Statutes-at-Large, volume ten, page 34) "all motions to print extra copies of any report, bill, or other document shall be referred to the members of the Committee on Printing from the House in which the same may be made." The committee have full jurisdiction of the resolution irrespective of the Manual.

The resolution was referred accordingly.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES OF GOVERNMENT.

Mr. MILLER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to furnish this House with a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1865.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to strike out "respectfully requested" and to use the proper word, "directed."

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

MOORE AND LADOMUS.

Mr. MYERS introduced a bill for the relief of Moore & Ladomus, of Philadelphia; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

IRA G. ROBERTSON.

Mr. FARQUHAR introduced a joint resolution for the relief of Ira G. Robertson, of Indianapolis, Indiana; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee of Claims.

RATIONS ISSUED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. BROMWELL submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to communicate to this House the whole number of rations issued under direction of the War Department from the beginning of the late war hitherto to persons not belonging to the Army, showing the number of rations issued to white persons, and the number issued to colored persons in each year, and also the cost of rations issued to each class of persons respectively.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It will require a great amount of labor to answer that resolution. I hope my colleague will let it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BROMWELL. I prefer to have it acted on now.

The House divided on seconding the demand for the previous question; and there were—ayes 30, noes 16; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. BROMWELL, and Mr. WASHBURNE of Illinois.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 47.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 65, nays 49, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Cook, Deffrees, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hayes, Higby, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Le Blond, Marston, McClurg, McCullough, McKee, Mercer, Moulton, Myers, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Price, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sawyer, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, Williams, and James F. Wilson—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Baldwin, Baxter, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Holmes, Hulburd, Kasson, Ketcham, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Plants, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Thayer, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Windom, and Woodbridge—49.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Blow Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Chandler, Conkling, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Davis, Delano, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Farnsworth, Garfield, Goodyear, Harris, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Jenckes, Jones, Kuykendall, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, McIndoe, Newell, Nicholson, Noel, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Francis Thomas, Upson, Ward, Warner, Welker, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Wright—68.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DICTIONARY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. WENTWORTH offered the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Printing under the law:

Whereas the Senate has ordered the printing of the latest edition of the Dictionary of Congress: Therefore,

Resolved, That there be printed for use and distribution by the members of this House, upon the same terms, a sufficient number of copies to make the quota of Representatives equal to that of Senators.

SAFETY OF PASSENGERS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, introduced a bill further to provide for the safety of passengers on board of steam and sail vessels; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RIGHT OF WAY—MILITARY RESERVATIONS.

Mr. ANDERSON. I offer for consideration a joint resolution concerning the right of way of railroads through military reservations and for other purposes. I will state that this has been considered by the Committee on Public Lands, and has received their unanimous recommendation. I desire to put it on its passage; therefore I demand the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object to this; I propose to debate it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has demanded the previous question, which cuts off debate.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope the House is not going to pass this joint resolution without debate.

The joint resolution was read. It grants the right of way, not exceeding one hundred feet in width on each side of the track, and the necessary grounds for depots and stations, to all railroad companies upon all military reserves; and the President is authorized to restore, from time to time, to the public domain, any portion of said reserves over or near which the Union Pacific railroad, or any of its branches, may pass, and which shall not be required for military purposes; the same, when so restored, to be subject to existing laws concerning public lands in the same manner that they would have been if said reserves had never been made; provided, that the President shall not permit the construction of any railroad upon or diminish any such reservation in any manner so as to impair its usefulness for military purposes so long as it shall be required therefor.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That is a most extraordinary joint resolution. It permits railroads to go through all the arsenals of the country.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 24, noes 67.

So the previous question was not seconded.
Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I wish to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution then goes over under the rule.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KELSO submitted the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas the House of Representatives, at sundry times during the present session of Congress, has increased the compensation of a portion of its officers and employees:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be requested to report a resolution making the increase of compensation equitable and uniform among all the officers and employees of this House for the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he strike out the words "requested to report" and insert "inquire into the expediency of reporting."

Mr. KELSO. I accept the modification.
The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

ROBERT BALDWIN.

Mr. DRIGGS. I desire to introduce a bill for the relief of Robert Baldwin.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Surely the gentleman does not propose to introduce this bill and move the previous question upon it. No debate can be had upon it now.

Mr. DRIGGS. If it is not in order I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can introduce the bill for reference.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to this mode of passing bills.

Mr. DRIGGS. The bill has been referred, and this is a report from the Committee on Public Lands. I withdraw the bill.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. PRICE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That on and after Tuesday, the 10th instant, and until otherwise ordered, the House will commence its sessions at ten o'clock a. m.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Make it nine o'clock.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope before the House acts upon this resolution, we shall get some information in regard to the state of business, and whether there is any necessity for our meeting earlier. I understand that after we get through the tariff bill there are but one or two appropriation bills left, and that there is nothing else to do.

Mr. PRICE. If that is true, and we can get through with our business and go home, I am satisfied. My object is to get through with our business so that we may leave this village.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope the gentleman will accept an amendment providing that the standing committees of the House be discharged from the further consideration of all the subjects before them.

Mr. PRICE. I do not know that I have any objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Mr. PRICE. I will modify my resolution so as to make the hour of meeting eleven o'clock. But I am really anxious to get the business done without meeting here at night. I insist on the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. Does the gentleman accept my amendment?

Mr. PRICE. Oh, no!

The question was put upon seconding the previous question, and there were—ayes 30, noes 65.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to debate the resolution.

Debate arising, the resolution went over under the rule.

PREEMPTORS ON THE SOSCOL RANCH.

Mr. PRICE introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the Soscol ranch, in the State of California;" which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LOUISIANA CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not inconsistent with the public interests, to communicate to this House a copy of any correspondence he may have had with Governor Wells, of Louisiana, in relation to the reassembling of the constitutional convention of Louisiana, which held a session in the year 1864.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish the gentleman from Iowa would amend his resolution so as to embrace the correspondence with Mr. Forney also. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman can call for that himself. I must decline to make the modification.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD, EASTERN DIVISION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill explanatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

RECESS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. GRINNELL introduced the following concurrent resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That when this House adjourn on the—day of—, it will take a recess to meet on Saturday, the 1st day of December next.

REPORT ON MEDICAL STATISTICS.

Mr. PAINE introduced the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the House of Representatives a report of the medical statistics collected during the war in the bureau of the Provost Marshal General by Surgeon J. H. Baxter as soon as such report can be compiled and prepared for presentation by him.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIFTIETH REGIMENT WISCONSIN VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. COBB introduced the following preamble and resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Whereas the fiftieth regiment of Wisconsin volunteer infantry were mustered into the service of the United States in the spring of 1865, to serve for one year or during the war, and were retained in the service for several months after the expiration of said year, but were only paid a bounty for one year's service:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the payment to the soldiers of said regiment an additional bounty of $8 33 1/3 for each month's service after the expiration of said year, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the preamble and resolution were agreed to.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble and resolution were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HIGBY submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish to this House the information of how many acres of public lands are now in market, how long a time the same have been in market, situated in the State of California and bounded as follows, namely, on the northeast and north by the San Joaquin river; on the east by the foot of the Sierra Nevada mountains; and on the south by King's river and the line between townships seventeen and eighteen; and on the southwest and west by the foot of the Monte Diablo mountain range; and also the number of acres already sold by the General Government within the above-named boundaries.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from California [Mr. Higby] to modify his resolution so as to make it direct; and also to call for the amount of land which has been granted at this session of Congress for railroad purposes.

Mr. HIGBY. I have no objection.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

ARIZONA, NEW MEXICO, AND UTAH VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. McRUER submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the propriety of paying to volunteers mustered out in the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah such additional sums as may appear necessary to reimburse said volunteers for necessary expenses incurred in transportation to places of mustering in, over and above the amount which they have severally received, and report by bill or otherwise.

MARY JOHNSON.

Mr. BIDWELL introduced a joint resolution for the relief of Mary Johnson, of Belmont county, Ohio; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that there be paid to Mary Johnson, of Belmont county, Ohio, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $110, to reimburse her for the loss by fire of $110 50 in legal-tender notes of the United States, of which she was the legal owner.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee of Claims.

WISCONSIN.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, introduced a joint resolution construing and giving effect to the joint resolution entitled "A resolution for the relief of the State of Wisconsin," approved July 1, 1864; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

OFFICERS' THREE MONTHS' EXTRA PAY.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire whether any provisions, and if so, what, are necessary to extend the three months' extra pay conferred by the act of March 3, 1865, upon all officers below the rank of brigadier general who having served one term of service again entered the service since the passage of said act and remained in service until mustered out because their services were no longer needed; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO.

Mr. BRADFORD introduced a joint resolution authorizing the justices of the supreme court of Colorado to fix the terms of the supreme court of said Territory; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BRADFORD. I desire that this bill shall be acted on now; and therefore I call the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DAWES. I think that this ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that the justices of the supreme court of the Territory of Colorado, or a majority of them, shall be authorized to fix the terms of the supreme court of said Territory.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 30, noes 31; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. WILSON, of Iowa, and LE BLOND.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BRADFORD] will withdraw the call for the previous question I will move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with leave to report at any time.

Mr. BRADFORD. I consent to that, and withdraw the call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with leave to report at any time.

There was no objection.

ARIZONA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the petition of Charles D. Poston, contesting the right of Hon. John N. Goodwin to a seat as Delegate from Arizona, have instructed me to make an oral report.

The petition was referred to the committee on the 11th day of December last. No notice of contest has been served upon the sitting Delegate, and no testimony has been taken and submitted to the committee in support of the statements of the petition. The committee have therefore instructed me to report back the petition and to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

J. S. UNDERHILL.

Mr. TAYLOR asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition of J. S. Underhill for extra compensation for building the iron-clad Keokuk.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of Edgar T. Harris;

An act (H. R. No. 461) granting a pension to Ann Sheehy;

An act (H. R. No. 464) for the relief of John Gordon;

An act (H. R. No. 495) for the relief of Mary A. Patrick;

An act (H. R. No. 616) for the relief of Lucinda Gates;

An act (H. R. No. 684) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. McManus, widow of Captain Andrew McManus, late of the sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry;

An act (H. R. No. 698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mercie E. Scattergood;

An act (H. R. No. 699) for the relief of James L. Perham;

An act (H. R. No. 700) for the benefit of John W. Jones;

An act (H. R. No. 703) for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Lynch;

An act (H. R. No. 704) for the relief of Joel Farley;

An act (H. R. No. 705) for the relief of George W. Bush;

An act (H. R. No. 740) for the relief of Matilda J. Monroe;

An act (H. R. No. 743) amendatory of an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler;" and

An act (H. R. No. 641) for the relief of Charles M. Stout, late a second lieutenant in company E, seventh Pennsylvania Reserve corps.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, though I have served as a member of this House seven years or more, I believe I have never before risen to a personal explanation, which I do on this occasion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks consent to make a personal explanation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I ask the Clerk to read a portion of an article published in the Pittsburgh Republic of last Saturday.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Our Next Congressman."

"Pittsburg Coal Interests Sacrificed for the Benefit of Nova Scotia Land Jobbers and Speculators—Congressman Moorhead Representing a British Province."

"A few days since we alluded to the fact, so utterly astounding and unexplainable, that the representative of the greatest bituminous coal interest in the world had advocated, in debate in the House of Representatives, a measure destructive of that coal interest, for the benefit, as it was said, of New England manufacturers. We denounced the act as a betrayal of the interests of the majority of our people, and endeavored to find a plausible reason for the commission of the outrage. In full belief that our Representative never acted unless from some personal and pecuniary interest, we thought it might be probable that he had some local or home interest antagonistic with the general welfare, and hence his singular conduct. We are now, however, enabled to furnish the true reason for the action of our disinterested and honored Representative.

"We met in Philadelphia, on Thursday, a distinguished citizen from a neighboring county who is largely engaged in the coal business, and who is somewhat celebrated for his quiet adroitness in 'hunting up' and tracing hidden and obscure 'moccasin tracks.' This gentleman informed us that he was just en route for Washington city, deputed by a number of coal operators to go there and use his influence to secure the great bituminous coal interests of western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio and Maryland from the destructive effects of the reduction proposed on the importation of Nova Scotia and other foreign coal. We stated that we had in a small way endeavored to call public attention to the facts in connection with the course pursued by our Representative, Mr. MOORHEAD. He instantly replied, 'It is well known what induces MOORHEAD; he would sacrifice any interest of the district he represents, if its protection came so directly in conflict with the money interest of his family, or probably of himself.' We admitted we did not understand in what particular manner a reduction of the duty on foreign coal could have any beneficial effect upon the interests to which he alluded.

"Thoroughly astonished, and at the same time opened to our view the whole secret of MOORHEAD's sudden change from what he advocated in the committee and yielded on the floor of the House. Why, said our informant, the family in Philadelphia (Jay Cooke & Co., and the Moorhead brothers, we presume, were referred to) own large coal interests in Nova Scotia and Picton; with proper rates of duty—they could not import a bushel with low duties—or under the old reciprocity treaty, they did and can drive us from the Atlantic market. They have to transport their coals not over three miles by land carriage to tide, while we are compelled to use three hundred miles of railway. A fair duty of $1 25 or $1 50 per ton gives us the eastern markets; fifty cents a ton gives it to the family land-jobbers in Philadelphia, and hence the reason for General MOORHEAD's course.

"Our informant further observed that Mr. MOORHEAD was an attentive Bible reader, and had probably remembered the words, 'He that does not provide for his own household is worse than an infidel.' 'I am in no hurry now,' said our informant, 'for I observe that a true, old-fashioned, and faithful Representative from Ohio has defeated the "Moorhead" compromise for the present, at all events.'"

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this was written in consequence of my having stated here, when the Committee of Ways and Means reported, that I had agreed to that part of the report imposing a duty of fifty cents per ton on coal from the British Provinces to be used by New England manufacturers, and a dollar and a half per ton on coal from Liverpool and Newcastle. The wisdom of my action in this regard, I believe, requires no explanation or justification, and even if it did this is neither the time nor the place for so doing. I will attend to that at home before my constituents.

My object in rising is to brand the article attributing to me sordid motives as false and malicious, whether it emanates from the distinguished gentleman referred to or the editor of the paper. I take occasion to say that neither myself nor my brother nor any other living person with whom I am acquainted is directly or indirectly interested in any British Province; and it is for the purpose of repelling that base slander I have risen, and not for the purpose of occupying the time of the House.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. BAKER, by unanimous consent, presented five petitions from A. C. Todd and numerous other citizens of Illinois, praying an amendment of the Constitution, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, citizens of the United States, respectfully ask your honorable body to adopt measures for amending the Constitution of the United States so as to read in substance as follows:

We, the people of the United States, humbly acknowledging Almighty God as the source of all authority and power in civil government, the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler among the nations, and His revealed will as of supreme authority, in order to constitute a Christian Government, and in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to ourselves, our posterity, and all the inhabitants of the land, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. BAKER asked and obtained leave to have printed as a part of the debates of the House remarks he had prepared on reconstruction and the future civil policy of the Government.

[The remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

KOONTZ VERSUS COFFROTH.

Mr. McCLURG submitted, from the Committee of Elections, a report, concluding with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Alexander H. Coffroth is not entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative from the sixteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania in the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Resolved, That William H. Koontz is entitled to a seat as a Representative from the sixteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania in the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

The report was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

DR. F. B. CULVER.

Mr. JOHNSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Dr. F. B. Culver, late special agent and commissioner to negotiate treaties with certain Indian tribes; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I explained on Saturday to the House the absolute necessity, as represented to me by the Secretary of War and by the Lieutenant General of the Army of the United States, for some provision in regard to the Army. Men must be obtained in addition to those we have now in the Army for the actual necessities of the Government; and it becomes essentially necessary in some shape a bill for the reorganization of the Army and its establishment on a peace footing shall pass, otherwise a large proportion of the present small Army must be mustered out on account of the cessation of hostilities. The Senate, I observe, are still presenting new bills. I have explained a bill as in possession of the Committee on Military Affairs, passed by the Senate, while a bill passed by the House is in possession of the Senate. If the Senate continue to pass new bills as it seems disposed to do, we shall never come to any conclusion. Someone bill must be acted on. The Committee on Military Affairs of the House have no particular pride in rejecting or having the Senate bill passed. Our desire is to have some action of Congress in which the two Houses shall agree, and in order to bring the Senate up to a position rendering it necessary to act on some bill, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the bill passed by the Senate and to move, as a substitute, the bill passed by the House. This will result in a conference, without which we will never come to a conclusion. I report back, therefore, Senate bill No. 138, with a substitute, being precisely the bill upon which the House has acted, word for word. I propose to substitute for the Senate bill the House bill as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have this moment come in and I would like to understand the proposition.

Mr. SCHENCK. I simply propose to substitute the bill which has passed the House for the Senate bill. I made an explanation on Saturday and my colleague [Mr. SPALDING] objected, but he afterward agreed to withdraw his objection; but it was too late to bring the matter up on that day.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Do I understand that the Senate bill is now before the House together with the House bill?

The SPEAKER. It is if there is no objection. Otherwise the gentleman may move to suspend the rules for the purpose of reporting it back.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. SPALDING. I will state that I objected on Saturday, but I am satisfied now that it is merely a matter of pride between the two committees of Congress, and I withdraw my objection.

No objection was made, and the bill was accordingly introduced.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the substitute.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on the adoption of the substitute, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 95, nays 80, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Dawes, Dawson, Deffrees, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McClure, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Schofield, Shclabarger, Smith, Spalding, Stevens, Taber, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Weiker, Wentworth, Williams, and Woodbridge—95.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, James M. Ashley, Benjamin, Boutwell, Boyer, Davis, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Johnson, Kerr, Latham, Loan, Marshall, McCullough, McKee, Niblack, Samuel J. Randall, Kitter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Srouse, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, and James F. Wilson—80.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Beaman, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, Chanler, Coffroth, Conkling, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Delano, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Goodyear, Grider, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hill, Hotchkiss, Edwin N. Hubbell, Jonckes, Jones, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Lynch, McIndoe, McKuer, Moulton, Nicholson, Noel, Orth, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Starr, Stillwell, Taylor, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Warner, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—57.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the title so as to read "A bill to reorganize and establish the Army of the United States."

Mr. THAYER. I would like to move to amend it so as to read "A bill to disorganize the Army of the United States."

The motion of Mr. SCHENCK to amend the title was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and the title amended; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the House No. 101, for the relief of certain officers of the Army, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bill No. 730, relative to pilots and pilot regulations.

The message further informed the House that the Committee on Enrolled Bills having reported to the Senate that in the examination of the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, it appeared that the committee of conference reported no recommendation upon sundry amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill, it was resolved that the Senate reconsider its vote agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, and that the bill and report be recommitted to the said committee of conference.

INTERNAL REVENUE LAW.

Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing under the law:

Resolved, That twenty thousand copies of the internal revenue law, so called, shall be printed as amended, so as to incorporate the entire law, for the use of the members of the House.

REGISTER OF DEEDS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to regulate the fees of the register of deeds for the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 222, for the prevention of smuggling, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the committee of conference, with a view to the correction of an error. I will state that the Senate has already taken this action, and that there is a message on the Speaker's table on the subject.

No objection was made.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the Senate:

IN SENATE, OF THE UNITED STATES,
July 9, 1866.

The Committee on Enrolled Bills having reported to the Senate that on examining the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, it appeared that the committee of conference reported no recommendations on sundry amendments of the House of Representatives to said bill, it is resolved that the Senate reconsider its vote agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, and that the bill and report be recommitted to the committee of conference.

There being no objection, the House concurred in the action of the Senate recommitting the bill to the committee of conference.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to business on the Speaker's table, for the purpose of considering the first bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The first business on the Speaker's table was bill of the House No. 456, to extend the benefits of section four of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866, approved March 3, 1865, returned from the Senate with an amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out at the end of the bill the words "that date" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the 9th day of April, 1865."

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope that amendment will be concurred in. It is a mere correction.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That in determining the dutiable value of all merchandise imported from foreign countries on which duties are imposed by this act, or by any existing law, the entire cost of such merchandise shall be taken, which shall appear on the invoice, certified by the consul of the United States at the place of original purchase or production, as having been paid by the purchaser to any party for or on account of said goods; and if such purchase and certification shall be at an interior town, city, or locality of any foreign country there shall be added to such entire original cost all actual costs of transportation to the last port of shipment for the United States, and all costs of preparation or preservation paid or accruing in such port of last shipment, except only the actual cost of removal from warehouse on board the vessel for final exportation, and except the commission or brokerage paid for the care of such shipment, not exceeding two and one half per cent. And if the importer of any merchandise shall neglect or refuse to place upon his invoice, when offered for entry, all elements or items of actual cost so paid or accruing, or shall offer for entry as the total value any bills paid for such merchandise not completely finished, baled, packed, or marked, or shall omit to include the value of the casks, bottles, or other articles containing wines or liquors, or shall omit the proper cost of boxes or of packing of cigars, such omission shall be held to be an undervaluation of the invoice, and the officers of customs examining and appraising the same shall add the said items of cost, and shall impose the penalties now prescribed by law for undervaluations: Provided, That any importer of merchandise may add items of cost paid or accruing after certification by the consul at the time of making entry without incurring penalty; but if the invoice value, as certified, be twenty per cent. less than the actual cost, all packages and costs of putting up included, then the said importer shall not be entitled to correct the entry without penalty, but shall, if the addition be to the extent of twenty per cent. upon the certified value, pay twenty per cent. additional as penal duty; and if said importer shall not offer to correct such undervaluation on entry he shall pay fifty per cent. penal duty; and if the undervaluation be thirty per cent. or over the merchandise shall be absolutely forfeited to the United States; and all charges of a general character incurred in the purchase of a general invoice shall be distributed pro rata upon all the parts of such invoice; and every part thereof charged with duties based on value, whether specific or ad valorem, shall be advanced according to its proportion, and all wines, or other articles paying specific duty by grades shall be graded, and pay duty according to the actual cost so determined.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend in line three by inserting after the words "foreign countries" the words "except as hereinafter otherwise provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend in line nine by striking out the words "an interior" and inserting "any," and also by inserting after the word "country," in line ten, the words "other than the last port of shipment for the United States;" so that it will read:

That in determining the dutiable value of all merchandise imported from foreign countries on which duties are imposed by this act, or by any existing law, the entire cost of such merchandise shall be taken, which shall appear on the invoice, certified by the consul of the United States at the place of original purchase or production as having been paid by the purchaser to any party for or on account of said goods; and if such purchase and certification shall be at any town, city, or locality of any foreign country, other than the last port of shipment for the United States, there shall be added to such entire original cost all actual costs of transportation to the last port of shipment for the United States, and all costs of preparation or preservation paid or accruing in such port of last shipment, except only the actual cost of removal from warehouse on board the vessel for final exportation, and except the commission or brokerage paid for the care of such shipment, not exceeding two and one half per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to add to the seventeenth section the following proviso:

And provided further, That all goods, wares, and merchandise in bonded warehouses or on shipboard and bound to the United States from any foreign port when this act shall take effect shall be subject to the conditions and rates of duties which were applicable to said goods, wares, and merchandise on the last day of June, 1866.

Mr. THAYER. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that that amendment would come in more appropriately at the close of the twenty-second section.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Very well; I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move to strike out this seventeenth section as amended. Mr. Chairman, I make the motion to amend for the opportunity that it will afford of saying a few words in opposition to this bill. I admire the frankness with which the friends of the measure admit its purpose—protection to the manufacturers. It is generally supposed that the aim and end of all sound legislation should be to advance the interests of the many with as little detriment to the few as possible. This wise maxim is entirely disregarded in the present instance, as it has been in many others in this Congress. The converse of the maxim seems to be the ruling idea which governs our present legislation, and gentlemen seem to rack their brains how to most successfully devise laws that will be of the greatest good to the smallest number. This I think can be clearly demonstrated by the operation of the bill under consideration. Out of a population of about thirty-four millions there is perhaps one in five engaged in manufacturing; hence four fifths of the population are required to contribute something to the private advantage of one fifth without receiving in return the slightest equivalent. The effect and operation of this law will be in the United States to compel the many to cater to the few, and abroad to provoke retaliation. If we close our ports to foreign importations by a prohibitory tariff will not foreign countries do the same and exclude our productions? Most assuredly they will. What, then, becomes of our commercial marine which has been our pride and boast, and which has contributed so much to our greatness and prosperity? We shall have no further use for our ships, but, like the Japanese, must remain content to live within ourselves, and allow one of our most hitherto cherished interests to perish to foster another, to the minds of many of less importance.

Again, if this measure becomes a law it will enhance the price of stocks of goods on hand. In fact, it is well known that the introduction and discussion of this bill has already had that effect in anticipation of its passage. I am told that there is a gentleman present to whose colossal fortune the passage of this bill will add a half a million of dollars. Whether that be true or not will depend entirely upon the amount of goods he may have on hand.

When we had the tax bill before us a reduction of the tax on manufactures and manufactured goods was demanded. The reason assigned for this demand was that taxes being so high goods could be imported and sold for less than the cost, including taxes, of the same article produced in this country. The taxes were reduced and the manufacturers seemed satisfied, but now that an opportunity is offered I find them rushing here demanding protection, and pleading that unless they are protected they will be obliged to suspend business. Does any one believe the statement? Is not the fact patent to all that notwithstanding the high taxes which they have been obliged to pay manufacturers have all made money? Mr. Chairman, it is all a sham. The pretext is too shallow to deceive any one. The object of those holding large stocks of goods is to enhance their value and the manufacturers to drive a fair competition out of our markets and enable them to compel the consumer to pay any exorbitant price they may choose to place on their goods.

"Freedom of trade is the life of trade." * * * "Men should have the right to exercise their industry, to dispose of its fruits in any market which to them shall seem best, and buy wherever they please, subject to no other limitation than the revenue necessities which the Government demand."

Believing that "protection to the producer is robbery to the consumer with the added hypocrisy of pretending to look after the latter's interest," I shall feel myself constrained to vote against the bill.

I will only add that the following circular received by me this morning from dealers in hardware and cutlery in the city of New York, shows most conclusively the unreasonable and prohibitory nature of the proposed increase of the present tariff:

The importers of hardware and cutlery of New York respectfully submit the following statements in reference to those goods for the consideration of the members of the Thirty-Ninth Congress:

The enormous rates of duty proposed to be levied upon hardware and cutlery indicate a regard for special interests to the entire sacrifice of revenue and great injury of consumers. It might have been expected that the protection of a war tariff of fifty per cent. on pocket cutlery, and thirty-five per cent. on table cutlery, and on files thirty per cent. ad valorem, and six cents per pound on some and ten cents per pound on others, averaging sixty-six per cent. on files, &c., on which many domestic manufacturers have become wealthy, would have satisfied them, and that the country might now be allowed the receipt of revenue from those which are imported, when it is remembered that, in addition to the import duties, the domestic manufacturer enjoys protection to the extent of ten to thirty per cent. in the cost of freights, packages, commissions, &c.

But it is now proposed, by taxing all pocket cutlery costing under five dollars with a specific duty of seventy-five cents per dozen, and costing five dollars per dozen and above, with two dollars per dozen in addition to fifty per cent. ad valorem; to tax every child's knife costing sixpence sterling per dozen, (custom-house value twelve cents,) with both rates of tax eighty-one cents; which is six hundred and seventy-five per cent. On every boy's knife which costs one shilling and threepence or thirty cents per dozen, the two duties will amount to ninety cents, equal to three hundred per cent.; and on every farmer's knife costing three shillings or seventy-two cents, the tariff will be $1.11, or one hundred and fifty-four per cent.; while the duty on all pocket knives costing (custom-house value) seventy-two cents to $9.68, will average seventy-two per cent. Surely the present tariff of fifty per cent. ad valorem should be enough to satisfy any one.

In table cutlery a considerable quantity is imported, which costs six shillings per gross or $1.44; the specific duty, as the clause passed the House, is twelve cents per dozen, or $1.44 per gross, with the forty-five per cent. ad valorem, is $2.09, equal to one hundred and forty-five per cent. The table cutlery, extensively used through the country, costing sixteen shillings, or $3.86 per gross; the specific and ad valorem duty is $3.18, or eighty-two per cent. Ivory table knives, costing six shillings per dozen or $1.44, are to bear a specific duty of one dollar per dozen and ad valorem forty-five per cent., together $1.65, or one hundred and fifteen per cent., and a ten-shilling table knife, custom-house value $2.42, with both rates bears a duty of $2.09, equal to eighty-six per cent. Now, is it not reasonable that the present tariff of thirty-five per cent. should be sufficient, or could there not be moderation enough to dispense with the specific now proposed?

An English twelve-inch flat bastard file, used by nearly every mechanic, (custom-house value $2.20,) with the proposed heavy specific of two dollars per dozen is taxed ninety-one per cent., while mill and taper files, used by every farmer, are proposed to be taxed in the same proportion; German files, being of less cost, are taxed on the average one hundred and forty-one per cent.

The proposed duty on German wrought nails varies from one hundred and forty-one to one hundred and fifty-five per cent.; halter and dog chains, eighty-one per cent.; coil chain, one hundred and ten to one hundred and thirty-five per cent.; trace chains, one hundred and thirty-four to one hundred and fifty-four per cent.; hooks and hinges, one hundred and eighty-three per cent.; on curry-combs and padlocks, with specific twenty-five cents and ad valorem forty-five per cent., on cheaper kinds, costing from eighteen to forty-eight cents per dozen—of which great quantities are used—the tariff is proposed to be ninety-three to one hundred and eighty-four per cent.

On the article of saws, used by every farmer, the specific and ad valorem duties will average seventy-seven to one hundred and sixty-three per cent.

All these goods come into general use by the bulk of the community, especially among the poorer classes, many of whom have not the means to pay high prices; thus revenue will be sacrificed and the population generally injured. Besides which, manufacturers here have the facilities for supplying only a very small portion of the demand, which of itself will tend to high prices. Then in addition to the direct specific and ad valorem rates above named, the proposed tariff imposes duty on casks, packages, commissions, &c., which on low-priced goods are very heavy, reaching to twenty per cent. and over on net cost of many goods. This is in addition to present tariff.

It is submitted whether the provisions of this bill do not call for very grave consideration, and will it not be for the interest of manufacturers themselves, as well as that of the country at large, to adhere on these goods to the present tariff, which is largely protective, rather than press these prohibitive rates and provoke continued unsettlement, as it is believed by many, if these enormous duties are passed they cannot be permanent.

An exhibit of rates of duty on hardware and cutlery in proposed tariff now under consideration, from which the above statements are made, will be forwarded quickly as possible for your perusal and consideration.

NEW YORK, July 3, 1866.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose the motion of my friend from New York [Mr. TAYLOR] was made merely to hang a speech upon. Although he does not happen to represent the celebrated county in North Carolina, evidently his speech was made for Buncombe. As he has accomplished his purpose, I hope his motion will not prevail.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw my motion to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That no return of duties on account of damage to merchandise on the voyage of importation shall hereafter be made, except as hereinafter provided, and upon the articles herein named; but it shall be lawful for any importer of merchandise, or for the representative or representatives of such importer, as insurers or otherwise, to abandon to the United States the whole or any part of any importation which may have received damage on the voyage; but no quantity shall be so abandoned the dutiable value of which on the original invoice was less than twenty-five dollars; nor shall any quantity be so abandoned less than one whole package. And notice of intention to abandon any part of an importation shall be given in writing by the importer or his representative within ten days from the date of original entry of the said goods; and in the said notice the marks and numbers of the packages, with the original and proper value of the said portions, shall be given; and the collector shall then direct the appraisers of damage or officers acting as such to examine the said goods as for allowance of damage, and they shall return a written report of such examination, approving or disapproving such abandonment; and if approved, the collector shall direct the duties paid on the entry of such merchandise to be refunded. And the appraisers shall also report, at the same time, whether the said abandoned merchandise is of value sufficient to pay the expenses of custody and sale, and if so, the same shall be sold at auction by the collector, and the proceeds, less the expenses of said sale, shall be paid into the Treasury; and if the merchandise shall be reported as of value not sufficient to justify sale, the same shall be destroyed, or otherwise disposed of, as the collector shall direct.

And the following described articles and merchandise only shall be excepted from the operation of the preceding provision, and may be admitted to return of duties on account of damage on the voyage of importation, as follows:

On tea, damage may be awarded not above twenty per cent.; on coffee, not above twenty per cent.; on manufactures of textile fabrics fully wet by salt water, not above twenty per cent.; and no damage shall be awarded on textile fabrics of every description for any other cause than actual immersion in or wetting with salt water; on machinery for the manufacture of textile fabrics, damage may be awarded from breakage or by salt water to the extent of fifteen per cent., of whatever material such machinery may be composed; on sumac, not above twenty per cent.; on tin, tinned iron, and terno tin, not above fifteen per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out this section and to insert in lieu thereof the section which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to extend to the Alabama and Florida Railroad Company a credit of five years on the duties on the railroad iron and fastenings necessary to relay thirty-seven miles of the track of the Alabama and Florida railroad, between the city of Pensacola to the Alabama State line, from which the rails and fastenings were removed by the so-called confederate authorities against the remonstrances of the officers of said railroad company and the injunctions of the court during the late rebellion: Provided, That the said railroad company shall first give security to the satisfaction of the said Secretary for the payment of such duties with semi-annual interest at the rate of six per cent. on or before the expiration of said credit; and that the said iron shall be used for no purpose but that before stated until said duties have been paid; and further, that the United States authorities can use said securities in payment for any services said railroad company may render for them should any services be rendered.

Mr. MORRILL. The section which I have moved to strike out is one subject to quite weighty objections, and will require considerable amendment even if it should be allowed to be retained. Therefore the Committee of Ways and Means have instructed me to move to strike it out; and if it is to be inserted at all, let it be inserted by the Senate.

The new section which I have moved, by direction of the Committee of Ways and Means, to insert in place of this eighteenth section, is for the purpose of allowing a railroad running from Pensacola to the Alabama State line, and which was utterly destroyed during the late war, a credit upon the iron which is now on the way, or perhaps has already arrived from abroad, for the relaying of the road. It will amount to about sixty thousand dollars. Now, while I am disposed "to quarrel for the ninth part of a hair" in relation to political principles, when we come to financial questions of this kind, where the Government can afford relief without any damage to the interests of the country, and with the greatest benefit to the local interests of a State, I am, for one, quite willing to grant it. And as we have hitherto given considerable aid to railroads in the West, I think we should give this aid here. It is simply granting to this railroad time in which to pay these duties.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means if this amendment provides that the principal and interest shall be paid in gold at the end of five years.

Mr. MORRILL. As a matter of course that will be so considered.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not quite clear about that.

Mr. MORRILL. It ought to be in that form.

Mr. ALLISON. If this duty on railroad iron should be changed as proposed to a debt in favor of the United States, that debt, in my judgment, would not be payable in coin unless it were so specified.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment provides for the payment of interest semi-annually. I modify the amendment by inserting the words "to be paid in coin."

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, I feel very much disposed to extend aid, so far as possible, to suffering men everywhere; but why the Government should give this credit to a corporation I cannot very well understand. I know no reason why this Florida corporation should receive this credit, except such reasons as would apply to every other railroad corporation in the United States. I can perceive in this proposition the entering wedge for all the other companies, opening the way to the destruction of our whole system of revenue on railroad iron. Next year—or if not next year, certainly the year after—this duty will be remitted; and we shall get nothing. This is practically a remission of the duty on railroad iron for the benefit of this Florida railroad company. The only thing that would recommend this proposition to me is the fact that a large part of the stock of this company is owned by northern men. Everybody knows that enterprising men of the North are assisting largely in building these southern roads; and of course they have my sympathy. I cannot understand, however, why this credit, or rather this gift, should be extended by the Government to those concerned in this railroad. I can understand why there should be a combination for the purpose of bringing railroad iron into the country free of duty. But I cannot see why we should consent to permit the remission of the duties to railroad companies which, if they are profitable at all, are able to pay the duties. I must therefore vote against the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of saying a few words upon this question, I move to amend the amendment by striking out "five" and inserting "three." I regret very much to hear the remarks just made by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] It seems to me that he has forgotten that the amendment which is offered by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is in the very spirit of the resolution which has already been recommended to this House by a joint committee of both Houses, of which committee the honorable gentleman himself is a member, and which resolution proposes to suspend for the period of ten years, upon like securities being given, the obligations for the payment of direct taxes assessed upon the eleven States lately in insurrection.

Mr. STEVENS. I will ask the gentleman whether this railroad is a State work or an individual enterprise.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman, I was just going to say, seemed to undertake to fortify his position and to forestall any remarks upon this subject by referring to the fact that the amendment now pending is in behalf of a corporation. Sir, the State itself is but a corporation; but those who compose each are citizens of the country. In this respect they are all alike; and they are a very disorganized body of corporators at that. For myself, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see the statesmanship of saying that no quarter whatever shall be given to those people; that nothing is to be done for them, or even attempted to be done, but to exact the uttermost farthing at once and without one day of grace. After you shall have done this, what will you have accomplished? If you give the southern people no kind of encouragement to attempt anything toward improvement and the organization of industry and the development of their resources, what assurance have you that they will ever attempt anything? The amendment now pending proposes simply to say to those people, "Go on and build your railroad connecting your two States of Florida and Alabama; procure the iron necessary for the purpose; if it be foreign iron and liable to duty, give security satisfactory to the Government for the ultimate payment of the duties, and for the payment semi-annually, in gold, of the interest thereon during the period of the five intermediate years of extension." That is all there is in the proposition.

Sir, I am willing, and deem it my duty, to assist by special legislation, if you please, in working out speedily such results in the South as will break that unbroken column of rebel States extending from the shores of the Potomac to the Rio Grande. I thank the Committee of Ways and Means for the pending proposition and the statesmanship which underlies it and is embodied in it. Its adoption can do no harm. I scout as unworthy of a moment's consideration any suggestion that the adoption of a proposition like this will be a precedent which may bring disaster upon the country. Anything that is calculated to wake up intelligent industry through that vast tract of country held these last five years in the embrace of rebellion, which was an embrace of death, I hail as an omen of that "good time coming" when those States will be restored and the supremacy of the Constitution acknowledged in every State hitherto in insurrection. Having said these few words in favor of the proposition of the committee, I now withdraw my amendment to it.

Mr. FINCK. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I have been gratified with some of the liberal remarks of my colleague. I have sat here patiently day after day listening to the discussion of this important measure, and I have been deeply impressed with the striking fact that the people of eleven of our sister States, who have so much interest in a great measure like this, have not had a voice or vote on this floor to represent them. Sir, this is an unnatural condition of things; not in accordance with our representative system of government. The measure which was passed a few days since for raising internal revenue, which so vitally affects the interests and business of the whole people, as well those of the States represented as those of the eleven States unrepresented, has been passed through both Houses without the voice or vote for or against it of a single representative from nearly one third of the States. Can this thing last and our Government continue a free Government? Sir, it is in direct conflict with the great principle on which our system of government was founded. In that bill you have discriminated against one of the great staples of this country, and violated one of the rules on which the revenue system is based. You have imposed a tax of three cents a pound on cotton. You do not propose to tax wheat, oats, and corn so much per bushel. It would be unwise and unjust to do so. But, sir, it is also unwise and unjust to impose this tax upon cotton, and doubly so because you impose it upon a people to whom you have denied all representation on this floor.

Is it the policy of this Congress to discourage the raising of cotton and increase its price on the great masses of the people who use it? Is it the policy of this Congress to convert the cotton fields of the South into grain and pasture fields and bring them in competition with the great agricultural interests of the West, and thus not only increase the price of cotton but deprive the great West of one of the markets for its produce? No man believes that this tax on cotton could have been imposed if all the States had been represented here; and allow me to inquire whether it is a part of this same scheme to take advantage of the absence of the Representatives of eleven States, who are deprived of their seats here by the majority, and impose this monstrous measure called a tariff upon the country? The internal revenue measure, we have been told, will lessen the burden, of our taxation from fifty to seventy-five million dollars, and surely the great manufacturing interests will receive their fair benefit of this reduction. Now, I submit whether it is right and proper to further protect the interests of the manufacturers, whose dividends for the last year have been so large, at the expense of the agricultural interests and of the great masses of the people; for, say what you will, all these burdens in the shape of duties must in the end be paid by the consumers.

Have gentlemen forgotten the importance of the cotton crop to this country; how much it has heretofore entered into the decision of the great question of the balance of trade, and the means it has furnished us of keeping our gold at home and sending the surplus cotton crop abroad? It has been a great element in regulating our exchanges; and it seems to me that it would be both wise and just for us to encourage instead of discouraging the production of this great staple.

Why, sir, its increase has been one of the most wonderful things in our history of productions. In 1800 only about five thousand bales of four hundred pounds each were exported. In 1849 the production had reached to nearly two and a half million bales, and in 1859 to the enormous and wonderful number of more than five million bales of four hundred pounds each. And why tax this production three cents a pound? Would gentlemen have dreamed of doing so but for the fact of the unfortunate and unnatural troubles which have afflicted the country? Is it in the spirit of punishment and revenge that it is now done? Gentlemen should remember that legislation based on such a spirit is always unsafe and unwise. Sir, the first great thing which this country requires is the assembling here of the representatives of the people of all the States in a true spirit of patriotism and conciliation, and then these duties and taxes can be discussed and considered, and the interests of the whole country wisely understood and adjusted. Gentlemen may venture too far. They should remember that he who would rend the oak must take care of its rebound. Let this bill be postponed to some more propitious time, when that happy day arrives, which I trust will soon come, when all the States shall again be represented here, and a cordial restoration of hearts and hands shall once more firmly cement our beloved Union. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I move the following amendment to the amendment: strike out "so-called military confederate authorities," and insert in lieu thereof "rebel forces;" and strike out "and the injunctions of the courts." The first clause of my amendment explains itself. I believe in calling things by their right names. In reference to the injunctions of the courts, I do not know what courts are referred to, but they must be the so-called confederate or State courts. In either case it strikes me as improper to refer to the action of such courts as having authority. A single word as to the amendment itself. It seems to me, with all deference to the Committee of Ways and Means, that the provisions of this proposed section are not such as ought to be incorporated in this bill. This is a general tariff bill, and the proposed amendment would interpolate in it a specific provision for the benefit of a particular railroad in the southern States. Whatever may be the merits of this particular case, it is not the proper subject of provision in this bill, and to countenance such a proceeding would open the door to great abuses. Whether affecting the construction of railroads or any other branch of industry in the southern States, it should be provided in a general bill hereafter to be introduced to cover certain classes of cases, or by separate special bills to provide for each separate case. I cannot certainly accede to the propriety of legislating for special relief in a general bill. I think this proposed new section should be withdrawn and come before the House in another form.

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to the gentleman from New York, while I do not object to his amendment, I will say to him the proposed section is certainly pertinent to the subject-matter of the present bill, and if it is to be passed at all at this session it must go in this bill, as any separate bill would not be acted upon. The Committee of Ways and Means regarded it as a question of so much interest as to be willing to ingraft it on this bill.

Mr. HALE. Has the committee information whether there are other roads in the same situation?

Mr. MORRILL. I am not aware of any other case. The present bill provides that the duty shall be paid semi-annually. It was formerly the practice to allow some extension of time to all parties who had duties to pay to the Government; and now, when the people of the North are extending pecuniary aid to the South in order that it may recuperate more rapidly, it seems to me that such help as this from the Government is eminently proper. I have no doubt it is for the interest of the Government to give this credit. It will be found in the increased amount of taxation to be derived because of the construction of this railroad. I hope the House will agree with the Committee of Ways and Means that this is a proper subject to be considered now. I know the parties, at least some of them, engaged on this road are as loyal men as any upon this floor, men who never lifted a hand to help the rebellion. They propose to give ample security for the payment of these duties.

Mr. PRICE. Are these stockholders northern or southern men?

Mr. MORRILL. Some are from the North, but the most of them are southern men.

Mr. PRICE. How many?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know.

Mr. PRICE. I am to understand, then, that the largest part of the stock is held by residents of southern States?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; as I have been informed, residents of Florida.

Mr. PAINE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether these loyal men he speaks of as being owners of the stock are not northern men.

Mr. MORRILL. Not all of them. Some have been there more than twenty years.

Mr. PAINE. I move to amend the amendment by substituting "two years" in the place of "five years."

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my amendment and the gentleman may renew it.

Mr. PAINE. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, there is no member of this House who is more willing than I am to do anything that can be done properly in a pecuniary way to aid our southern friends in restoring their industry to the position which it occupied before the war broke out. But I can see no reason why this railroad company running out of Pensacola should be singled out of all in the United States to receive this bounty from the hands of the United States. Why not include in the same provision the railroads of the West, North, and Northwest, those roads which are needed by the country and which need such aid as this? Why should railroad iron be admitted for the present free of duty in the interest of this particular railroad company when we extend the same privilege to no other road? I would like to know for what particular reason, on what particular ground, this claim is presented here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be as the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has said, that a large number of the stockholders are loyal men. I believe that the largest number of loyal men are northern men and men who can pay this duty if they are disposed to go into the speculation. I am not inclined to give aid to northern speculators, and as for southern men I know not why their claims should be stronger before this House or the country than those of northern men, or why southern railroads should have any stronger claim on the Treasury of the United States than northern railroads.

Mr. Chairman, I am willing to do all that can be justly done, but I am not willing to encourage the importation of foreign iron to be used on southern railroads to the detriment of the production of American railroad iron by giving time for the payment of the duty. The gentleman says he does not anticipate any application being made to Congress to entirely remit the duties for which securities are to be given. I do not concur with the gentleman in that idea. I feel sure that if we give time for the payment of these duties they will never be paid. I feel confident that it is an effort made to an entire exemption. And as to the security to be given, I would like to know what has become of the securities given to this Government for the immense amount of rolling stock upon the southern railroads turned over to southern companies. I would like to know whether anything is to be realized from those securities.

Mr. Chairman, this case stands in my view on precisely the same basis. I have no idea that one penny will be realized on these securities any more than on those taken on the rolling stock that has been turned over to the rebels. And while I will do all that can be reasonably done for the South, I see no reason for selecting out this individual company and taking security satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury for the payment of the duties. I believe a general rule should be adopted, and I insist if it is adopted here now in behalf of this company, you shall also apply the same to struggling companies in the North and Northwest, where there has been no disloyalty and where the roads are urgently wanted for the development of the country and for the use of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I oppose, pro forma, the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Mr. PAINE.] The gentleman inquires why select out this particular road; why not select roads in the Northwest and other parts of the country and give them donations? Does the gentleman forget that we have been doing that all this session, and that we have been giving them the best lands belonging to the United States. We have done it because it is a wise policy to develop the resources of that western country. For the same reason, if we were to donate all these duties to this railroad it would be the wisest policy to pursue on our part. I do not look so much to the agency of such laws as we are enabled to pass here for the restoration of these States to their former relations to the Union as I do to precisely such agencies as are incidentally connected with such measures as this. I look to the civilization which is to follow from such legislation as this to restore these States to harmony. I look to the reaper and the mower, to the school-house, the church, the whole system of northern education and civilization carried down there from the North, and supported it may be from the North, to restore these States to their former relation to this Union. It is not by the force of laws that we can pass here that they will ever become what they were before save the institution of slavery. They are to be brought back by a new social system, new to the very foundation. The old system has been upturned, upheaved, and destroyed, and upon its ruins a better, healthier, and more permanent civilization is to be established.

I hope every one of these railroads, these arteries, these sources of life, civilization, and strength, will be developed. I hope we will invite northern capital and northern emigration there. I would not undertake to starve and stint them. I would recognize the fact that they are prostrate, that the whole surface of the country is burned over, and is a heap of ashes, and I would build up upon it this new system which the providence of God has ordained as the result of the war. I would donate to these railroads all the duties upon iron necessary to put them in order. Their rolling stock, what is that to us in comparison with the worth of a flourishing, enterprising system like that which is spread all over the northern and western States? What is that compared with what it would be, dealing with them as we may have the power to do?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all debate on the pending section terminate in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAINE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew it for the sake of saying that I hope this section will be added to the bill. There is, perhaps, no man on the floor of this House who is more unwilling to give political power to the people of the South until they shall test their fitness to receive it by their acts than I am. But I believe the true policy of the Government is to win that people from their devotion to political abstractions by engaging them in the business of life.

Whenever during this Congress I have had a chance to raise my voice in favor of any measure that was calculated to promote and develop mutual interests and induce the people to engage on their own behalf in their promotion I have done it. I indorse every one of the words so ably spoken by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] We can regenerate that people, and it is our duty to do it. We can do it by just such acts as this, and that without periling a dollar of the Government funds. The section provides for the admission of a certain quantity of iron, but not until security shall have been given for the payment of the interest of the duties regularly in gold, and the duties to be paid at the end of five years.

Now, it is asked why this should be done here and not elsewhere. Sir, this House has passed a resolution instructing the proper officers of the Freedmen's Bureau to feed the starving people of Alabama and Georgia. This road is of great importance to those people. The people who are starving, who were without seed to put in a crop for this year, are not in a condition to raise money to go on with new enterprises.

Mr. STEVENS. May I ask my friend how many of these starving people he thinks are stockholders in this road?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know that any of them are. But I know that a railroad through a country, though its stock be owned in a foreign country, blesses those who live upon it and who live near its termini. Does the gentleman mean to say that railroads are blessings only to the stockholders?

Mr. STEVENS. I mean that the stockholders must make the road, and I do not believe in coaxing rebels with sugar-plums and love feasts.

Mr. KELLEY. Nor do I; yet I do believe that the only way to develop and restore a devastated region of country is by inducing capital and enterprise to come within their limits. That is my answer to the gentleman. And if we can induce northern capital and enterprise to go there we should do it.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. HALE, as renewed by Mr. KELLEY, to the amendment of Mr. MORRILL, which was to strike out the words "so-called confederate authorities," and to insert "rebel forces;" also strike out the words "and the injunctions of the courts."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the amendment as amended; and upon a division there were—ayes 66, noes 40.

Before the vote was announced,

Mr. FARQUHAR called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS and MORRILL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 34.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That so much of the act entitled "An act to authorize protection to be given to citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of guano," approved August 18, 1856, as prohibits the export thereof, is hereby suspended in relation to all persons who have complied with the provisions of section two of said act for five years from and after the 14th day of July, 1867.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman offer this on his own individual motion, or does he do it upon the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. From the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McRUER. I move to amend by inserting the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the proviso in section four of an act entitled "An act amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations," approved March 3, 1865, shall be construed to include any ship, vessel or steamer to or from any port in the Sandwich Islands or Society Islands.

The act of 1865 provides that all vessels entering American ports, whether owned wholly or in part by American citizens, shall pay a duty of thirty cents per ton every time they enter at a custom-house. But there is in that law a provision that all vessels engaged in the coasting trade, and all vessels coming from Mexico, the West India islands, or the British possessions, shall be exempt from this tax, to the extent that they shall pay it but once a year. It was the evident intention only to tax vessels once a year, only those engaged in making long voyages. Now vessels engaged in the trade between San Francisco and the Sandwich Islands make, on an average, six trips a year. But since this law passed these vessels have been compelled to pay this enormous tonnage duty every time they enter the port of San Francisco, six times a year. Now this class of vessels should be exempted from the tax, the same as vessels trading with the West Indies, or with Mexico, or coming from any of the British possessions. This amendment meets with the approbation of the Committee of Ways and Means. I think there can be no sound objection to it, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe there is no objection to this amendment.

Mr. DODGE. I hope the House will sustain the proposition of the gentleman from California, [Mr. McRUER.] Great Britain has almost monopolized the trade with the islands of the Pacific, and she is fast gaining the trade of the Sandwich Islands. It is for the interest of this country that we do everything in our power to relieve from tonnage duty the vessels trading from California to the Sandwich Islands. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McRUER. I ask consent to offer the following as a proviso to the sixth section, which has already been passed:

Provided, That no wines, brandies, or other spirituous liquors in transit to the United States on the 1st day of October, 1866, shall be subject to forfeiture under the act.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to reverting to the sixth section for the purpose of considering the amendment stated by the gentleman from California?

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

Mr. McRUER. Then I offer the following as a new section, to come in after the section last read:

And be it further enacted, That no wines, brandies, or other spirituous liquors in transit to the United States on the 1st day of October, 1866, shall be subject to forfeiture under this act.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that in the sixth section it is provided that—

Any wines, brandies, or other spirituous liquors imported on and after the 1st day of October, 1866, in any less quantities than herein provided for shall be forfeited to the United States.

Now, it certainly cannot be the intention of the Committee of Ways and Means or of this House that a cargo of wines or brandies which left France on the 1st of last May and which may arrive in the port of San Francisco on the 1st of next October shall be forfeited because they are in packages of less than thirty gallons. Yet under the provisions of the bill as they now stand this would be the necessary effect, without any means of avoiding it. The Secretary of the Treasury would be compelled in such a case to forfeit the whole cargo because imported in packages of less than thirty gallons; and a package of twenty gallons is a very common package for fine liquors.

Now, it seems to me it would be perfectly monstrous to make such an enactment. Why, sir, this bill ought to include a provision that would exempt from this requirement importations arriving after the date specified, whenever it can be shown that the person shipping the cargo has not had time to become informed of the requirement of our tariff law. Heretofore, when we have enacted tariffs taking effect immediately, they have worked great hardship to individuals without any benefit to the Government. A merchant on the Mediterranean may on the 1st of October be entirely ignorant of this requirement of our law. The bill should provide that nothing shall be forfeited, unless imported in contravention of laws known to be in existence. I think that the amendment which I have offered must commend itself to the good sense of this House.

Mr. MORRILL. This provision was inserted for the purpose of trying to avoid the smuggling that is going on all along our northern frontier. Unless we have something of this kind it will be utterly impossible for our revenue officers to detect the smuggling that takes place daily. I am willing that something like that suggested should be inserted if it be not too broad. I will suggest that by unanimous consent the matter shall be passed over for the present, so that a proper provision may be prepared on the subject.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the following new section:

And be it further enacted, That the same provisions in regard to credit on railroad iron extended to the Florida and Alabama railroad shall extend to all railroads west of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot see any reason why these infant railroads should not have the fostering care of the Government in this way if any are to have it. I understand, in regard to the Florida and Alabama railroad, that it had iron there, but put it in another place to make a branch road which is now running, and has been for months past. The design is to bring in this iron to relay the old road. If it be granted to this road I see no reason why the same privilege should not be extended to all other railroads. What we have granted to one we should grant to the others.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out "west" and to insert "outside;" so that it will read, "outside of Pennsylvania." [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I accept it. [Renewed laughter.] I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. THAYER were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 49.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws allowing fishing bounties to vessels hereafter licensed to engage in the fisheries be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That from and after the date of the passage of this act vessels licensed to engage in the fisheries may take on board imported salt in bond to be used in curing fish, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and upon proof that said salt has been used in curing fish, the duties on the same shall be remitted.

Mr. KASSON. I offer the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That so much of this act as increases the duty on iron bars for railroads or inclined planes, made to patterns, imported and laid down, shall not go into effect until one year from the 4th day of March next.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this new section for the purpose of once more calling the attention of the committee to the propriety of this measure of protection, the only real measure of protection offered to the interests of that great region of country known as the valley of the Mississippi. I offer it for another purpose which I hope the committee will take into account, that we may get a vote distinctly on this question of railroad iron in the House, if this bill be not recommended to the committee, or postponed until December next. There is not a single industry of the West, nor a single interest of any part of the country, that depends upon shipping food from the West which is not affected by the question I here attempt to make connected with the increase of duty on railroad iron. The great burden of the West is that it costs so much to get articles to market that it leaves almost nothing to the farmer as a profit upon his industry. At this time extraordinary efforts are being made west of the Mississippi for an extension of the railroad system. Many of the railroads are struggling even upon home contributions to carry them along ten or twenty miles at a time to reach further into the interior of that country for the benefit of the farming interest. They could not expect that after reducing the tax on iron under the internal revenue bill there would be an increase of duty on iron imported from abroad to deprive them of the benefit of that reduction. Companies have been organized and have been pushing ahead in the belief that Congress would not increase the burdens on the construction of these railroads.

Now, sir, this is a great and fundamental interest; an interest that we cannot afford to have disregarded in the West, when we have to pay for everything included in the tariff bill which we consume an enhanced price in consequence of the enhanced rates of duties.

I ask, then, gentlemen from the Northwest, from both sides of the Mississippi river, and gentlemen from New England, who feel an interest in cheap fuel for their manufactures; I ask gentlemen from all parts of the country who desire to do justice to the West that they will allow a vote to be taken here in committee upon this section to postpone the time for the taking effect of this clause and carry it in committee, so that we may have a vote by yeas and nays upon it in the House.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I would ask the gentleman whether, if the committee should adopt this provision, he and his friends who represent western interests will vote for the bill.

Mr. KASSON. It will be a very strong inducement for western members to vote for the bill. I am not authorized to pledge them, but I can say that without it we of the Northwest, with the exception of the Representatives of one State, shall vote almost unanimously against the bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Will the gentleman himself vote for the bill?

Mr. KASSON. No; there are some other clauses on which I want votes before I vote for the bill. I can only say that with the reduced duty on tea and coffee and a reduced rate on railroad iron, there will be a better opportunity for the passage of the bill. But I rest the amendment on the ground of naked right and justice, on the ground of the actual necessity that you impose no additional burdens on the railroad interests of the West that are struggling for existence and extension to-day more than they have done for several years past. These railroads must be extended or immigration and settlement will be retarded, and you will diminish the production of cereals and seriously embarrass various interests in the West. I ask gentlemen, whether they have made up their minds on the subject or not, that they will vote for the amendment here in committee so as to enable us to get a vote upon it in the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose the gentleman from Iowa has accomplished his purpose in making his speech, but he probably was not present when the amendment about railroad iron was pending. It was the understanding then that the gentleman's colleague [Mr. WILSON] was to move an amendment in the House, and I have no doubt, from what I hear from various quarters of the House, that a compromise will be made as to the increase of the duty on railroad iron.

Mr. KASSON. Will the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means state precisely what the arrangement was?

Mr. MORRILL. It was that the gentleman's colleague [Mr. WILSON] should have an opportunity to move in the House such an amendment as he desired.

Mr. KASSON. If that is the understanding I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I renew the amendment, and I do it for the purpose of saying that I am not at all surprised at the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, and it only confirms what I have heretofore said upon this subject, that he and other members of the Free-Trade League in this country have made up their minds deliberately, instead of pursuing a course here which shall be deemed consistent with the interests of American manufacturers and American industry, to obey the behests and dictation of British manufacturers and British capitalists. A great clamor is raised about the tariff, and not content with stating the facts of the case, members here are misrepresented and enunciations are attributed to them for which there is no authority. Now, I find myself reported in the New York papers as having said the other day that the railroad iron makers had made no profits for three or four years.

Mr. Chairman, I said no such thing. I said that for the last eighteen months the manufacturers of railroad iron in this country had made no profits, and that to-day they could not compete with the manufacturers of England. I am reported also as having moved to place an increased duty on railway frogs. Both these charges are made upon me in the same report and on the same day. I made no such motion. And the comment is made upon it that I was interested with other gentlemen here, and was controlled by considerations of personal interest in the legislation of the country.

Now, what I said was, and I repeat it, that the manufacturers of railroad iron in this country cannot to-day compete with foreign manufacturers. I said further that a committee had been appointed by the Iron and Steel Association of England to attend to the tariff of this country. I caused to be read at the Clerk's desk certain documents, and now, in confirmation, I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES CONSULATE, TOWER BUILDING SOUTH, WATER STREET,
LIVERPOOL, April 19, 1866.

DEAR SIR: I inclose you the Parliamentary Blue Book on Trade and Navigation.

They are making great efforts on this side to repeal our tariff and admit British goods free of duty. If effort and money can accomplish it, you may rest assured that it will be done. The work is to be done through the agents of foreign houses in Boston and New York. Their plan is to agitate in the western States and to form free-trade associations all over the country.

If the people were over here, and could see one half that I do, they would open their eyes. No stone will be left unturned to break down our manufactures. Sir Morton Peto has written a book to show that we are only fit to grow produce, and that England should do our manufacturing. This book will be circulated by the thousands in the western States.
Yours, &c., THOMAS H. DUDLEY.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I now withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act all goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at the ports of New York, Boston, and Portland, or any other port of the United States which may be specially designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and destined for places in the adjacent British Provinces, may be entered at the custom-house and conveyed in transit through the territory of the United States without the payment of duties, under such rules, regulations, and conditions for the protection of the revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. THAYER. I do not wish to debate that section, but I would like to know from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means what benefit we are to derive from this, and what consideration we are to get for this privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending before the committee.

Mr. THAYER. Then I move to strike out the section. I want to have some explanation why we should give this privilege of transmitting all goods from the Provinces over our territory duty free. I do not understand it.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the gentleman must understand it. If not, I think I can make him understand it in a few words. At the present time a large amount of the grain and merchandise that seeks transportation from the West to the East, or from the eastern to the western States, travels across more or less of the territory of the Canadian Provinces, taking the cars from Buffalo to Windsor, opposite Detroit, or taking the cars from Ogdensburg to Port Sarnia. It is, in other words, a competition which the West enjoys with our railroads and canals on this side, and cheapens freights. And it is regarded as a very great convenience to the West as well as to the East. It is not subject at the present time to any law, but merely to a regulation on the part of the Treasury Department. It has been deemed advisable that some law should be passed upon this subject. So far as the benefit to the Canadas is concerned, they only use a very small strip of our territory in crossing from Portland to the Canada line. It is really a reciprocal provision, and one that should be allowed.

Mr. THAYER. I understand the gentleman to say that we enjoy an equivalent privilege.

Mr. MORRILL. We do.

Mr. THAYER. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] if he has considered this section in reference to the provision of the Constitution which forbids the giving any preference by regulations of commerce to one State over another. It seems to me this section is in contravention of that provision.

Mr. MORRILL. It is a general provision, and does not in its terms apply to one State more than another. And although one State may derive more benefit from it than another, the provision itself is a general one.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That imported goods, wares, or merchandise in bond, or duty paid, and products or manufactures of the United States, may, with the consent of the proper authorities of the Provinces aforesaid, be transported from one port or place in the United States to another port or place therein, over the territory of said Provinces, by such routes, and under such rules, regulations, and conditions, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; Provided, That the goods, wares, and merchandise so transported shall, upon arrival in the United States from the Provinces aforesaid, be treated in regard to the liability to or exemption from duty, or tax, as if the transportation had taken place entirely within the limits of the United States.

No amendment was offered.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that more moneys have been paid to the collectors of customs, or others acting as such, than the law requires should have been paid, and where the parties have failed to comply with the requirements of the fourteenth and fifteenth sections of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to draw his warrant upon the Treasurer in favor of the person or persons entitled to the overpayment, directing the said Treasurer to refund the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; Provided, It shall be made manifest to the Secretary of the Treasury that said non-compliance with the requirements of the above laws was owing to circumstances beyond the control of the importer, assignee, or agent making said payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the duty now levied by law on gunny-bags or sacks shall be paid on such bags or sacks whether they are imported empty or containing merchandise.

I offer this in conformity with the spirit and meaning of the law as it now stands.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, for this reason: we have made a very heavy discrimination against gunny-bags in the importation of salt in sacks, giving ample protection. We have raised the duty on linseed, as I think, so that none will hereafter be imported, as oil will now come in lieu of it. I do not think it necessary to say anything further to show that this amendment should not be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect, except where otherwise provided, on the day of —, 1866, and all acts and parts of acts repugnant to the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed; Provided, That the existing laws shall extend to and be in force for the collection of the duties imposed by this act, for the prosecution and punishment of all offenses, and for the recovery, collection, distribution, and remission of all fines, penalties, and forfeitures, as fully and effectually as if every regulation, penalty, forfeiture, provision, clause, matter, and thing to that effect in the existing laws contained had been inserted in and reenacted by this act; And provided further, That the duties upon all goods, wares, and merchandise imported from foreign countries, not provided for in this act, shall be and remain as they were according to existing laws, prior to the 1st of June, 1866.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the section just read by inserting in the first blank the word "first" and in the second blank the word "August," so as to read "the 1st day of August."

Mr. McRUER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "the 1st day of October."

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL. I move, pro forma, to amend by striking out "sixty-six" and inserting "seventy." I make this motion simply for the purpose of saying that I am opposed to this entire bill. I presume that no opportunity will be afforded, either in the Committee of the Whole or in the House, for a full discussion of this question. Hence I take the opportunity now to ask the privilege of having printed as a part of the debates a statement of my objections to this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and permission is granted.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order.

I submit the point whether the Committee of the Whole has power to grant consent for the printing of a speech; whether such consent must not be granted by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that, according to the every-day practice, such consent can be granted by the Committee of the Whole.

[Mr. MARSHALL's remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by adding to the section last read the following:

And provided further. That all goods, wares, and merchandise in bonded warehouses, or on ship-board and bound to the United States, from any foreign port, when this act shall take effect, shall be subject to the conditions and rates of duty which were applicable to said goods, wares, and merchandise at the time of the passage of this act.

I presume, Mr. Chairman, it is not the purpose of this House to pass any act which shall take improper advantage of the merchants of the country. But, if I am correct in my reading of this bill, it will, unless we adopt such a provision as I now propose, take immediate effect, and will operate not only upon goods that may be hereafter ordered but upon those now on ship-board and in bonded warehouses. Now, sir, it seems to me of the highest importance that our legislation should be such as to maintain the confidence of the people in the fairness and integrity of the Government in its dealings with them. The merchants of the country—those who have goods at present in bonded warehouses or on ship-board—have imported or ordered those goods with the understanding and belief that the Government would allow them the advantage of existing laws. No man of integrity, dealing with another man in a mercantile transaction, would, simply because he had the power, change the terms of an existing contract to the profit of himself and the injury of the person with whom he might be dealing. This principle which regulates the transaction of individuals should not, it seems to me, be disregarded by the Government.

I believe, sir, that the provision embraced in the amendment which I have offered corresponds with the uniform practice of the Government except during a time of war. During a time of war we are not bound to pursue the ordinary course of legislation, because we are subject to that necessity which knows no law. But now, in a time of peace, when trade and commerce are seeking revival upon an equitable and fair basis, it seems to me of the utmost consequence that the Government shall adopt such measures as shall inspire all classes of the people with a confidence that they shall not be made to suffer the consequences of any change in the law until reasonable notice of such change has been given. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move the following as a substitute for the pending amendment:

That all goods, wares, and merchandise in the hands of importers at the time of the passage of this act shall pay the additional duties levied by this act.

I ask whether my friend from Massachusetts will not accept that as a modification of his own proposition.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. No, sir. I would like to know how the gentleman proposes to collect these duties.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will undertake to say the duties will be collected if we pass a law to that effect. I do not see what reason the gentleman from Massachusetts or any other gentleman can urge against this reasonable proposition. By the imposition of these duties we add so much to the value of these goods, and the question is whether the vast sums which will have to be paid by the consumers shall go into the pockets of the importers or into the Treasury of the Government? It is the principle of taxing stock on hand which has met with favor sometimes in this House, and at other times has not met with favor. I hope a proposition so just and fair as this will be adopted. If these duties are to be levied and collected let the increase on the goods already imported go into the Treasury, and not into the pockets of the importers. Let not these vast, untold fortunes go to the importers when we know they will have to be paid by the consumers. If they go anywhere they ought to go into the Treasury. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DODGE. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is in accordance with the uniform practice of the Government ever since we began to have tariffs, except during war. It is certainly just. Orders sent to the East Indies and China, requiring long voyages, under the late tariff would, when the goods arrived in port, be subjected to an increase of duty of from twenty-five to fifty per cent. beyond what it was when the contract was made.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 42.

Mr. THAYER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WASHBURNE of Illinois, and Mr. DODGE, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 43.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "and of." Mr. Chairman, this question is one of no little difficulty. It has been decided by Congress in various ways, sometimes one way and sometimes another. The proposition made by the gentleman from Massachusetts to exempt goods on ship-board would manifestly be improper, for if the goods come here they will of course enjoy the opportunity of obtaining a higher price in consequence of the increase of the tariff. To exempt them from existing rates of duty, therefore, would actually be a bonus given to the importer. But when you come to goods in bond it is a different thing. Take the port of New York. It is impossible to get goods through the custom-house in much less than a month, and rarely even as fast as they are demanded, on account of the insufficient force. Under the circumstances, therefore, where the importers are ready to pay the duties and cannot get their goods out of bond, it seems to me to be harsh treatment not only to keep their goods against their will for a longer period, but make them pay higher rates in consequence. The position of the gentleman from Illinois, I regret to say, with his experience, is one which he ought not to have occupied. His amendment is not in proper form. How does it read?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois has been adopted and is not now under discussion.

Mr. MORRILL. But the amendment to which it is an amendment has not been adopted. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois imposes the duty on these goods no matter whether in the custom-house or in the hands of the importer. It goes even beyond that, for if it be adopted, it is to take effect before the law itself. The law does not take effect according to the amendment we have just adopted until the 1st of August next, while this amendment provides that it shall take effect on all goods in the hands of importers from and after the passage of the act. I desire the House thoroughly to understand this question before it comes to a vote. I do think there is a difference between goods in the custom-house which the importer cannot reach if he wishes, and those on shipboard not yet arrived. But if the amendment is to be adopted I prefer it should be put in the proper form. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois by inserting the word "not" after the word "shall;" so that it will read "shall not pay the additional duties levied by this act." I am confident this committee could not have understood the effect of their vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURNE.] The hostility of that gentleman to this bill is well understood, and I certainly do not think I misapprehend him in supposing this was offered by him simply as a satire upon the whole scheme and object of the bill. The amendment which he has offered is one plainly and palpably unconstitutional, and entirely incapable of enforcement. It applies to goods in the hands of the importer, those goods which the importer has brought into this country, and paid the tariff upon, which he has in his own possession and control clear of all Government claims. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois proposes to put the hand of the Government upon those goods and say, "You shall pay us something more for these."

Now, it is just as idle to seek to take the money from these importers by such a provision as this as to enact that the gentleman from Illinois shall pay to the Government certain moneys from his own pocket. It is not a tax in any sense; it is simply an attempt by mere force, without any authority or process, not in the nature of a tax, to get something out of the hands of certain classes of individuals. It is impossible, I think, that the committee in voting for the proposition could have appreciated its force. It has not the first element of a constitutional provision in regard to taxation, and I trust the House will not so stultify itself as to adopt such an amendment to this bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will modify my amendment by changing the language so as to read "from the time this act shall take effect."

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to modify it after the action of the committee upon it. The gentleman can attain his object by a subsequent amendment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will say one word in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.] I take it this committee is fully advised in regard to the principle as well as in regard to the effect of my amendment, and so far as I may be for or against this bill it has very little to do with the principle which is involved in my substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE.] The only question is, whether we are to legislate to put millions of dollars into the hands of these importers after the people have paid their duties, or whether the money shall go into the Treasury of the United States. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] deny that these importers will raise the prices upon their goods precisely according to the amount that is levied? Now, shall that go into their pockets or into the Treasury? That is the question we have to decide, and I trust this committee will fully understand it and will hold to the principle contained in my amendment. I do not believe that we are prepared to legislate these untold millions into the pockets of the importers. I am told that there is one house in the city of New York that will realize, if we adopt this bill without such a provision as this, a profit of $1,000,000 by adding the amount of the duties to the prices of their goods.

Now, sir, I think this question can be very fully and fairly determined. I know when the question of taxing stock on hand has been fully discussed and understood by the representatives of the people they have always upheld and sustained the principle, and the gentleman from New York will bear witness to the fact, until the distillers of whisky came down here and exerted their influence. I trust we will now adopt this principle and incorporate it into our law, so that we may not go before the people as being charged with legislating for these great interests and against the interests of the consumers. That is the question the committee has got to decide, and I have no idea that they can be misled. I believe they appreciate and understand it, and that when they come to vote—if this amendment is carried into the House—they will place their votes upon the record in favor of the consumers and against legislating in favor of importers and monopolists.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] withdraw the amendment?

Mr. HALE. I will withdraw it on condition the gentleman renews it.

Mr. THAYER. The gentleman cannot take me off the floor by that process.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE.]

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to strike out the last line of the amendment under consideration. The proposition which is now made by the gentleman from Illinois is akin to the violent and unjust legislation which he has proposed on a similar subject in this House on repeated occasions before, and on which, I am prepared to say, this House has repeatedly set its seal of reprobation.

Sir, this is sometimes said to be a day of great discoveries, and it would appear also to be a day of discovery in matters of legislative science as well as of other kinds of science. Why, sir, there is not a Government on the face of the earth which would perpetrate the injustice upon its merchants and persons who are dealing with it on the faith of its honor which the gentleman from Illinois proposes to do. Up to 1861, and in the year 1861, the legislation of this country contained in express terms the very proposition which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] moved as an amendment to this bill, that is, to prevent the application of the act increasing duties to cargoes which were afloat upon the ocean at the time of the passage of the act, and to goods which were in bond at the time of its passage. That has been the uniform legislation of this country down to, I believe, the year 1862. So late as the act of March 2, 1861, and the act of August, 1861, revising the tariff laws of this country, a proposition, almost in terms that of the gentleman from Massachusetts, was put into the tariff law by the Congress of the United States. Now, what is the proposition? It is to deal with these people in a different spirit. It is, after you have given a receipt in full to the men who have obeyed your laws and have imported merchandise into the country upon the faith of your laws, to lay your hands upon them and rob them; for there is no other word in the English language which can characterize the legal outrage, or I should rather say such an illegal outrage, as is proposed to be inflicted by the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

The gentleman seeks to make his proposition popular with the House by suggesting that the merchants who have imported goods will realize large advances by the passage of this law. There may be instances in which that will result; there may be instances in which precisely the contrary may result. Persons who have engaged in large importations under your laws by reason of inability immediately to realize the proceeds of those importations, may be ruined by the sudden increase of the tariff upon goods imported upon the faith of other laws.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. THAYER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I renew it. I have heard the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] before. I was not convinced by it then, and I am not quite convinced now. We have heard the howl about being in the interest of distillers, and I suppose we are prepared now to hear a howl about being in the interest of importers. Now, as I have no particular friends among them nor any particular relations with them, I shall endeavor to consider this subject with reference precisely to its merits.

Sir, the fault is not with the importer or the manufacturer, if, when you change your laws, some men go up and others down. It is because you are continually changing your laws.

And I have therefore sometimes thought that a bad tariff or a bad tax law, if it were only persistently adhered to, would, in the long run, be better than a great many good ones if you change from one good one to another continually. It is the want of consistency and uniform continuity of legislation that enables some men to make fortunes and causes others to lose them whenever the law is changed; and the man who expects whenever a law is changed which affects taxation, either upon imports or upon articles of produce in the country, to patch it all up by looking after this, that, or the other interest, or on one side or the other of the line to be affected favorably or adversely by it, will find he has undertaken a Herculean task.

What then? The only safety is to adhere to some principle, and I hold that principle to be a very simple one, namely, a principle founded upon common honesty, which ought to be observed by the Government as well as by individuals. You say at one time to your importer, "Bring certain goods into the country and this shall be the amount of duties which shall be imposed upon those goods." He brings the goods here upon the faith of your law and pays the duties. Then you change your law, and the proposition is to say to him, "We have you in the country; we have collected one set of duties from you, and now we mean to collect another set of duties, if we can follow up your goods and find them." Sir, that is acting dishonestly toward your importer. When there was an attempt made to tax the stock of whisky on hand, I had no sympathy with the distiller. And any such insinuation is humbug, stuff, Buncombe, unworthy of legislators. But I hold that after we had said to men, "Manufacture a certain article and we will charge you fifty cents a gallon," we ought not afterward to say, "We will follow up what you have manufactured if we can and put another tax upon it."

And what is the provision proposed here? It is to compel the importer to pay the additional tax upon every article that he may have in his possession at the time this bill is passed. Why, sir, I suppose I shall have to invite the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] down to my house to make an examination there. A friend in China was kind enough to send me some chests or boxes of tea, upon which I paid the duties. One or two of them are still unbroken; they are still in the hands of the importer; and the proposition is to put an additional duty upon them. And not only that, but everywhere throughout the country, wherever goods may be in first hands, notwithstanding they have been brought into the country in good faith, the importers trusting that the Government would not break its contracts with them, they are to be followed up and more duties collected upon them. I have no doubt that men will make fortunes and men will lose fortunes because of this legislation. But I repeat, going back to where I started, that this is the fault of continually changing the laws. And you will only make it worse, if every time you change your laws you violate the national faith and honor. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I renew the amendment to the amendment for the purpose of saying a few words.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] yield to me for a moment to modify my amendment?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Certainly.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to modify my substitute so that it will read:

Provided further, That all goods, wares, and merchandise in hand, on which duties have not been paid, shall, after this act takes effect, pay the rates of duty imposed by this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] cannot, without unanimous consent, modify his amendment, it having already been acted upon by the Committee of the Whole. He can offer an amendment to it after the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] who is entitled to the floor, shall have concluded his remarks.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to say that so far as I have any knowledge, the proposition made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] is without any authority or precedent, and without any justification under the Constitution of the United States.

The exercise of the power of Congress to levy imports is limited to the time of the landing of the goods. When the import duty has been paid the power of Congress to levy an impost upon the articles imported is exhausted. Now, if the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois can be sustained under the Constitution by any authority or method whatever, it must be under the provision to levy an excise duty. But the provision of the Constitution in reference to excise duties, as well as to imposts, is that all imposts, excises, and taxes shall be uniform throughout the United States. Now, what is the proposition before the committee? It is that particular articles in the hands of importers shall be subject to certain duties, while the same articles in the hands of others are to be exempt from duty. Manifestly the whole proposition is unconstitutional and without any justification whatever. Now, if the gentleman undertakes to go further, and to levy duties upon all goods that have been imported, in whosoever hands they may be found, of course he proceeds or attempts to proceed to do that which is utterly impracticable. Sir, the part of wisdom is unquestionably to reject the whole of this proposition. When the importer has put his goods in his own store they are beyond the legislative power of Congress to levy imposts upon them. If we proceed under the authority to levy excise duties we must make them uniform on all articles subject to such duties. Herein this proposition is distinguished from a proposition presented at the last Congress to levy an excise duty upon the stock of spirituous liquors on hand.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will, by unanimous consent, modify my amendment already adopted, so as to read as follows:

And provided further, That all goods, wares, and merchandise in bond or in bonded warehouses, on which duties have not been paid, shall, after this law takes effect, pay all the rates of duty imposed by this act.

Mr. McRUER. I object to that modification being made.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then I move to amend my amendment already adopted by substituting what I have just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that that motion is in order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McRUER. I move to amend by adding the following as an additional proviso:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall return to the importers such amounts as they have paid as duty over and above that levied by this act on goods and merchandise on hand when this act takes effect.

Mr. Chairman, if the officers of the various custom-houses throughout the country are to go around and find out how many goods are on hand in the possession of the importers, and to levy thereon an additional duty, it is but just that those officers should take around with them their bags of gold to repay to the importers the amounts which the Government has received from them in excess of the duties to be levied by this bill. I hope, therefore, that my amendment will be adopted if that of the gentleman from Illinois is to be retained.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois in its present form is imperfect. If he desires that it shall fully accomplish the purpose, he should say "goods in public stores or bonded warehouses."

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether the effect of the passage of this bill would not be to impose duties on goods in bonded warehouses at the time of its passage, and whether hitherto it has not usually been deemed necessary, in order to accomplish the exemption of such goods, to insert a clause such as that which was suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE.]

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. I see no need, then, of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment of Mr. McRUER was not agreed to, there being—ayes 40, noes 67.

The amendment of Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, as amended on the motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by adding the following as an additional proviso:

And provided further, That all goods, wares, and merchandise actually on ship-board and bound to the United States when this act shall take effect, from ports beyond the Cape of Good Hope and from beyond Cape Horn, shall be subject to the same conditions and rates of duty which were applicable to said goods, wares, and merchandise at the time of the passage of this act.

Mr. Chairman, the action which the committee has just taken has, I presume, indicated definitely the purpose of the House with reference to imposing duties upon goods in bond. I take it to be indicative also of the temper of the committee in relation to imposing duties upon goods on ship-board from foreign ports near to the United States. But I wish, if possible, to impress upon the committee the propriety and justice of at least making a distinction in favor of long-voyage goods—those that come from ports beyond Cape Horn or beyond the Cape of Good Hope. It requires many months of time to enable the merchants to send out orders for these goods to the Indies and to remote parts, to gather the goods and ship them, and to give sufficient time for the ships to arrive. It is often the case that goods imported on these long voyages, and I may say perhaps such is the custom, are sold to arrive. Therefore, while such goods are on the voyage of importation if Congress changes the law fixing the higher duties upon them, the excess must necessarily fall on the importer without any possible remedy in his hands.

Sir, I am informed that when the last law was passed making new duties applicable immediately and without notice to this class of merchandise, one merchant living in the district which I have the honor to represent, had goods on the way, and his vessels were due at the port of Boston at a time antecedent to the law taking effect, but owing to adverse winds his vessels were delayed and did not arrive until after the new law went into operation; the consequence was that his goods being sold to arrive, in that single instance the loss which fell upon the importer amounted to more than sixty thousand dollars, for which he had no remedy. I appeal to the justice of the House not to pass a law making a provision here in relation to the revenue of the country which it is impossible for the merchants to comply with. They must have a certain length of time in which to send out their orders for this kind of merchandise. They ought to be permitted to rely upon the good faith of the Government, without disappointment, and to find its legislation so fixed and stable as to render it safe for the merchant acting under the laws of his country to send out orders, trusting those laws will not be changed before he can get his returns.

I agree in almost everything said by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] that what we want to make the industry and commerce of the country prosperous is stable legislation. Even if we cannot make the laws regulating trade as right as we would like them, still we ought not to be so perpetually changing them as that business men can have no confidence in their stability.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. I think that this will operate unjustly on the very class of men the gentleman wants to protect. We have reduced the duty on tea and coffee, and under the gentleman's provision these merchants will not have the benefit of that reduction.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I presume

the gentleman wants an answer. It is contained in the amendment I offer, that the rates existing and applicable to these goods shall take effect if it be necessary for the principle whether above or below those provided in this bill. If a merchant sent out orders expecting to pay twenty-five cents per pound on tea, let that be the duty collected when it arrives in preference to establishing the principle that the duties may be increased without notice.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is unjust to the merchant where the duty has been reduced. Where the duty has been increased the importer will, of course, charge it upon the consumer. They do that, at least, in every instance. Therefore I believe in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] and adopted by the committee. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, because if we reduce the rate of duty on particular articles it seems to me we ought not to impose the highest rate of duty on the importer.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes twenty-four, noes not counted.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to insert the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to suspend the collection of the direct tax imposed by act of Congress passed August 5, 1861, entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," until January 1, 1868.

Mr. Chairman, I have only to say it can as well be understood by others as myself that the operation of collecting what remains uncollected of the direct tax in the rebel States operates more harshly upon our friends than our enemies. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be adopted. It seems to me that we can have hardly any better measure of reconstruction than the one that he has proposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAINE. I now offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions made in this act for the benefit of the Alabama and Florida Railroad Company be extended to all railroad companies in the United States and Territories.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment differs in no respect from the amendment already voted on by the House. That amendment excluded from its operation the State of Pennsylvania, which was a very good reason why the House should not favor it, but now that odious discrimination against one of the largest States of the Union having been removed, and the provision being entirely fair, I trust it will be adopted unanimously by the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THOMAS GLASGOW.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, it was ordered that the petition of citizens of the State of Tennessee, praying for the allowance of an invalid pension to Thomas Glasgow, a soldier in the war of 1812, be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 367) entitled "An act to extend the time of letters-patent issued to Thaddeus Hyatt," in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order, with the exception of the last section, be closed in one minute after the committee shall resume the consideration of the same.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. We have already voted on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I trust it will be again voted down.

The question was taken upon Mr. PAINE's amendment; and there were—ayes 46, noes 75. So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. AMES. I offer the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act there shall be allowed on the following articles when exported a drawback equal to the amount of duties paid on the imported materials used in the manufacture thereof of less five per cent, on the amount of such drawback, which shall be retained for the use of the United States, and such drawback shall be ascertained in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, namely: on mowing-machines, reaping-machines, plows, axes, hatchets, scythes, cotton-gins, shovels, spades, hoes, hay and manure forks, chisels, augers, and carpenters' tools.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to—ayes 53, noes 42.

Mr. McRUER. In accordance with the understanding some time since, I propose to amend section six on page 28 by striking out in line twenty-seven the words "on and" and inserting in lieu thereof "shipped;" so that the clause will read, "and any wines, brandies, or other spirituous liquors imported; shipped after the 1st day of October, 1866, in any less quantities than herein provided for shall be forfeited to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That there shall be established in and attached to the Department of the Treasury a bureau to be styled the Bureau of Statistics, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint a Director to superintend and conduct the business of said bureau, who shall be paid an annual salary of $3,500. And it shall be the duty of the Director of the Bureau of Statistics to prepare the report on the statistics of commerce and navigation, exports and imports, now required by law to be submitted annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury; and said report, embracing the returns of the commerce and navigation, the exports and imports of the United States to the close of the fiscal year, shall be submitted to Congress in a printed form on or before the 1st day of December next succeeding; and the said Director, as soon as practicable after the organization of this office, shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, prepare and publish monthly reports of the exports and imports of the United States, including the quantities and values of goods warehoused or withdrawn from warehouse, and such other statistics relative to the trade and industry of the country as the Secretary of the Treasury may consider expedient. And the Director of the Bureau of Statistics shall also prepare an annual statement of all vessels registered, enrolled, and licensed under the laws of the United States, together with the name and tonnage of each vessel, the class to which she belongs, as to build and rigging, the name of her home port, and such other information as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem proper to embody therein; and to enable the said Director to furnish the information required, the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, to establish and provide a system of numbering all vessels so registered, enrolled, and licensed; and each vessel so numbered shall have her number deeply carved or otherwise permanently marked on her main beam; and if at any time she shall cease to be so marked, such vessel shall be no longer recognized as a vessel of the United States. The said Director shall also prepare an annual statement of all merchandise passing in transit through the United States to for- sign countries, each description of merchandise, so far as practicable, warehoused, withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, for exportation, for transportation to other districts, and remaining in the warehouse at the end of each fiscal year; and to aid him in the discharge of these duties, the several clerks now employed in the preparation of statistics in the Treasury Department, or any bureau thereof, shall be placed under his supervision and direction. It shall be the further duty of said Director to collect, digest, and arrange, for the use of Congress, the statistics of the manufactures of the United States, their localities, sources of raw material, markets, exchanges with the producing regions of the country, transportation of products, wages, and such other conditions as are found to affect their prosperity. The said Director shall also collect, digest, and arrange for the use of Congress the statistics of the mining industry of the United States, the number and location of the mines, the products, wages of labor employed therein, and such other matters as may exhibit the condition and affect the prosperity of that branch of industry. And the said Director shall also annually prepare a report, to be laid before Congress, concerning the general course and influence of trade with foreign countries, exhibiting the distribution of the domestic exports of the United States among them, and the exchange of commodities with them, and the cost of production in the respective countries wherever attainable; which report shall extend to such particulars and shall be arranged in such manner and form as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury. And for all these purposes the said Director shall have access to the statistics, papers, and records of the several Departments of the Government; and, in addition to the clerical service hereinbefore provided, the Secretary of the Treasury shall detail such other clerks as may be necessary to fully carry out the provisions of this act. And the expenses of the Bureau of Statistics for clerical service, publication of reports, stationery, books, and statistical periodicals and papers required by the bureau, shall be defrayed on the order and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And all letters and documents to and from the Director of the Bureau of Statistics, relating to the duties and business of his office, shall be transmitted by mail free of postage.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to strike out this section and ask permission to present briefly the reasons which induce me to do so. At the proper time a Bureau of Statistics is one of the very few additional departments I would be willing to add to the numerous branches of the Government service. I would do so because the statistics of the nation and the States furnish not only a part of our current history and progress but give us the means of intelligibly and equitably levying and adjusting national and local taxation. I would place at the head of such a department a gentleman of my own State, not because he is of my State, but because of his eminent abilities and his vast acquirements and capacity as a statistician. I refer to Hon. E. D. Mansfield. But to prepare the way for this, I would first abolish the various offices and clerkships now devoted to statistics in the Treasury, Interior, and other Departments, so that there should be but one authorized branch of this service. But I am not now in favor of the creation of this new office of Commissioner or "Director of the Bureau of Statistics" for several reasons.

There are various officers now in office who furnish statistics which thus far have enabled the legislative and executive departments of the Government to perform all their duties. The Census Bureau furnishes its fund of knowledge. The Treasury Department has its statistician, in addition to the annual reports on navigation and commerce, the banking statistics of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the revenue statistics of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Agricultural Department has its statistician. The several Departments of the Government furnish the statistics appropriate to the service of each. Until there can be but one consolidated and exclusive department of statistics, an additional bureau is unnecessary, or at least may be dispensed with until a future time.

I would not now increase the patronage and the power of the national Government by creating additional offices and appointments which for the time being can be dispensed with. The nation is justly alarmed at the increase of patronage and power which the absolute necessities of the Government demand, growing out of the war and the national debt entailed upon us by southern traitors and their northern allies.

A vast number of our national officers hold their places, not for a definite term, but at the pleasure of the President or of heads of Departments. By a practice which has no just sanction in the Constitution, even the officers who are by law appointed for a given term are removable during the recess of Congress by the President or heads of Departments. The State governments generally prescribe a term of years for each of their officers, and they can only be removed by a judicial trial and judgment. This whole theory and practice of the national Government should be changed. Congress has not yet matured the legislation necessary to regulate the appointing power, to prescribe a tenure and term of office for officers generally, and make them independent in the enjoyment and expression of opinion. The idea that many thousands of officers, extending to every State and city and village and neighborhood, shall be dependent for place and its duration upon the will of any one man, is at war with the first elements of republicanism, and dangerous to the purity, the existence of free government, and the freedom of the ballot.

This subjection of the office-holder to the will of a superior holds out an inducement—

"To crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
That thrift may follow fawning."

The freedom of thought and its expression is as essential in a republic as the liberty of speech or the freedom of the press. Until this subject shall be regulated by law so as to secure the dignity, rights, and independence of the people and of all Government officials in the civil service, I will not consent to the creation of new departments and new officers which may not be immediately indispensable to the necessities of the Government and people. This is the opinion I would entertain wholly irrespective of any temporary consideration as to what party is in power or who may control its patronage. Legislation for temporary party purposes is always perilous, and full of dangerous precedents, while that which commands the approval of wise and patriotic statesmanship will "stand the test of human scrutiny, of talents, and of time."

But last, though not least, I object to the creation of a new department and new officers, because of the unnecessary expense it will entail upon the already overburdened tax-payers of the nation.

Mr. Chairman, I have voted for the soldiers' bounty bill and for an increase of pensions as a part of that justice which remains to be rendered to the brave soldiers who sacrificed the comforts of home and periled life for the preservation of the Union. I am willing to go yet further to pay them the debt of gratitude and justice the nation owes them. I am ready to advocate and vote for pensions to the needy soldiers of the war of 1812, already too long neglected by Congress. For these objects I would spare no fair taxation to do justice to brave and patriotic men. But the creation of new offices is a very different subject.

This House but a few days since passed a resolution in these words:

Whereas the financial condition of the United States demands the exercise of a rigid economy in all departments of the Government in order to sustain the credit of the United States, and to relieve the people at the earliest possible day from the burden of existing taxation; and whereas there is reason to believe that in many departments of the Government civil abuses have for a long time existed and still exist, in the perpetuation of useless offices and sinecures, in extravagant salaries and allowances, and in other unnecessary and wasteful expenditures:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint select committee be appointed, to consist of two members of the Senate and three members of the House, to be styled the joint select committee on retrenchment; that said committee be instructed to inquire into the expenditures in all the branches of the civil service of the United States, and report whether any and what offices ought to be abolished, whether any and what salaries or allowances ought to be reduced, and generally how and to what extent the expenses of the civil service of the country may and ought to be curtailed; that said committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Sir, I am in favor of carrying forward the purpose of this resolution. There is a manifest necessity for it now that the termination of flagrant war has rendered it practicable to reduce the number and expenses of officers in most if not all of the Departments.

Mr. Chairman, this session of Congress has done much to relieve the burdens of the people. If the internal revenue bill already passed this House shall become a law, the reduction in internal taxation secured by it will be fruitful of benefits and blessings all over the land. I believe our legislation has been marked with more than usual economy. But in a few instances it would seem to me unnecessary expenses have been incurred and unnecessary offices created against my voice and vote. I will call attention to some of them:

The joint resolution, approved December 21, 1865, appropriating $500,000 for subsistence for Indians, many of them rebels, in the southern superintendency.

The joint resolution of January 22 relative to the Paris Exposition.

The naval appropriation act of April 17, 1866, increasing naval officers' allowances some two million dollars or more. This is done in an innocent-looking section, as follows:

"That so much of the second section of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the pay of the Navy of the United States,' approved March 3, 1835, as prohibits any allowance to any officer in the naval service for the rent of quarters or for furniture or for lights or fuel or transporting baggage, and all acts or parts of acts authorizing the appointment of Navy agents, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

It is proper to say a bill is pending to repeal this section. And then we have the following:

The act of May 16, giving vice admirals each a secretary with rank and pay of a lieutenant.

The act of May 26, authorizing the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

The act of June 12, amending the postal laws and increasing, but not materially, certain salaries.

The bill which passed the House creating a Department of Education with its Commissioner and other officers.

The pending internal revenue law, which creates a Commissioner of Revenue.

The joint resolution of June 30, to send ten commissioners to the Paris Exposition at an expense of $156,000 for the great show, besides a commissioner to urge upon all nations the adoption of a uniform standard of weights and measures.

These, with the bills to reimburse Missouri and Pennsylvania for expenses of their militia, and to increase the clerical force of the Post Office Department, and pending bills to reorganize the Treasury and Interior Departments, will add something to our national burdens. In other Departments it is just to say the expenses have been reduced many millions. I am unwilling to create the additional offices contemplated by the bill now under consideration. Let us rather reduce wherever practicable the number and expense of some, perhaps many, of those we already have. I hope the motion to strike out will prevail.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to respond to the points made by my colleague and to say a word or two in defense of this section of the bill. Every gentleman will recognize the difficulty of replying to a written speech which has not been read, but I will respond to the points made orally by my colleague, [Mr. LAWRENCE.] The first objection that my colleague raises is, that however good this proposition may be, this is not the time to make it. Now, that is the common argument used on all occasions when gentlemen want to vote any proposition down, that now is not the proper time to make it. If the proposition made in this section is important and a proper one, there never has been a time when it was so important as just now for the necessities of our legislation. In the next place, the gentleman says that we have already the Census Bureau, a bureau of statistics much more extensive than this would be. I answer the gentleman by saying, what he well understands, that the Census Bureau is as nearly valueless for all the practical purposes of legislation as any bureau of statistics could well be. We really have no Census Bureau in any efficient or potential sense. We have not yet received the results of what was taken as the census of 1860, and the whole condition of our affairs has so changed since then that the report on the census of 1860 will be almost valueless. But what is more, the Census Bureau never has furnished statistics at all. We do get something from them about manufactures and something on the subject of imports and exports, but we have nothing on earth that is called for in the consideration of propositions of this kind. Let the gentleman look at it for a moment. I hold that the excuse which the Committee of Ways and Means is compelled to make and is entitled to make to the House and the country for not having perfected much earlier in the session a complete tariff bill is because they have had to work in the original quarry and have had nothing furnished to their hands.

The revenue commission appointed under the act of the last session of Congress did nobly for us in the internal revenue department; but they had not time to go forward and perform the immense work of preparing anything reliable or complete on the subject of imports. See how perfectly the work is done in Great Britain, a country which has reduced the matter to almost an exact science. We look to that country now for the statistics even of our own affairs. Every month there is published and put in the hands of every legislator of Great Britain a paper containing, most accurately stated, all the items from which revenue is derived, all the items of importation and exportation and of the free list, and a complete classification of the navigation, commerce, and trade of Great Britain; and at the end of the year there is a complete summary made, so that every legislator in that country can hold in his hand the facts and no man can stand up and lecture ex cathedra on any subject of legislation connected with finance or taxation unless he is able to lay his finger on the facts.

Now, when a question comes up here and I am asked to say whether the tariff on a given article shall be ten per cent. or a hundred per cent., I want to know all the circumstances and all the facts about the article; where it is produced, whether we can produce it or not, what price it bears in the market, what capital is invested in producing it, and all other circumstances connected with it. But now I am compelled to come here with empty hands, and I cannot from all the volumes of our Library find out what I desire to know. It was but the other day that I called upon the Librarian and kept him busily at work for half an hour to find for me the market price of nickel, and he could not find it in any of our books.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] if he does not believe that if all the facilities had been furnished to the Committee of Ways and Means which such a bureau as is here contemplated could furnish, this tariff bill would have been perfected and we would have been able to close our session by the 1st of June last.

Mr. GARFIELD. We might have been home by the 1st day of June, with a complete tariff, and one that would have reflected credit upon Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not rise to debate this proposition, but merely to make a suggestion. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, I understand, will consent to give us a separate vote in the House upon the proposition to strike out this section.

Mr. MORRILL. I will consent to that.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. With that understanding I will withdraw my motion to strike out this section, and renew it in the House.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend this section by inserting the words "and by what means the export trade of the United States may be increased" after the words "and the said Director shall also annually prepare a report, to be laid before Congress, concerning the general course and influence of trade with foreign countries, exhibiting the distribution of the domestic exports of the United States among them, and the exchange of commodities with them, and the cost of production in the respective countries wherever attainable."

As my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD], in supporting this section seems to have been in an error, it leads me to think that others of the committee may be in error touching the existence of other statistical officers and bureaus. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE], who just spoke against this section, alleged the existence of the Census Bureau as a reason why this provision should not be adopted. And my other friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] seemed to concur in that supposition. Now, sir, the fact is that the Census Bureau does not now exist. We have made no appropriations for it for two years past, and its duties are now being wound up by the officers and clerks of the General Land Office in the Department of the Interior. And thus it is that the statistical bureau connected with the census, or established for that purpose, has ceased to exist.

And in regard to other officers still existing, charged with the aggregation and presentation of such statistics, I have to say that the statistics for the year 1865, which we ought to have had one year ago, are not even yet laid before Congress. Our statistics in regard to commerce and navigation are so far behind also as to be nearly useless. Other nations of the world, having more appreciation of its advantages or more enterprise and tact, have long ago been in possession of such information. Now, sir, no legislation touching the commerce of the country is of any account unless it rests upon statistics of our own production and commerce and the production and commerce of other countries. And those statistics should be recent, as gentlemen about me remark, in order that we may keep up in the great commercial race with the other nations of the world.

I had occasion some three years ago to ascertain the extraordinary difference between the habit of other countries in this respect and our own. They have all the tact and shrewdness and diligence that belong to a private merchant or to a private manufacturer in the development of his own interests and the extension of his own circle of trade. Their commercial treaties are strict bargains, like those which merchants make with each other. We are behindhand entirely in this respect, and our Government loses a very marked advantage in the development of the commercial interests of this country.

If I understand the object of the Committee of Ways and Means, it is to provide a Bureau of Statistics to remedy our deficiencies; and by the terms of this section they do provide it. And if it is adopted we shall keep up these statistics as rapidly as the bureau can obtain them and submit them to the commercial interests to enlighten and enlarge its operations.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say a word or two before this shall pass from our consideration. While we are legislating for all parts of the country and for various objects, we may very well legislate a little in our own behalf. In other nations, England and France, for example, the executive departments aid in making out the bills and presenting them to the various committees for their consideration. But here no such practice prevails, and perhaps ought not to prevail. But we ought to have some access to the information which is absolutely necessary for the proper preparation and consideration of bills to be presented to Congress for its action. By law the printing of our reports on commerce and navigation is to be completed by the 1st of December succeeding the close of each fiscal year, and yet it is notorious that for the last three or four years those reports have been not only one year but sometimes more than two years behindhand. Yet the Journal of Commerce newspaper of New York city publishes in the main the returns of the custom-house of that city, which comprise three fourths of all the importations of the country, in a very few weeks after the close of each fiscal year or quarter. But the Government here at Washington is unable or unwilling to force its officers at New York to make the same returns here that are given to that newspaper.

Sir, for one I regard the provisions contained in this section as eminently proper. We ought to be able to have returns here, not only upon this subject, but upon all the various subjects suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD], in season to enable the Committee of Ways and Means and other committees to know accurately the facts upon which they are called to legislate. And while I am upon the floor I desire to say this in relation to the future action of the committee and of the House upon this bill. I do not propose that we shall come to a vote upon it in the House to-night. There are some three or four gentlemen who desire to occupy ten or fifteen minutes each in the general discussion of the bill. That discussion I propose to allow to-morrow. But it is necessary that we should take a little time between this and to-morrow to look over the bill, in order to determine what were regarded as contested questions, so that the House may know upon what amendments it will be necessary to take the vote by yeas and nays. There are also several amendments which it is proposed may be offered and voted upon in the House. And then there are some blanks yet to be filled. I trust the friends of the bill will allow it to go to the House, and also allow this discussion upon it. And I trust, also, that the vote will be allowed to be taken upon the various amendments before any test question on the bill shall be taken.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will not object to the arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL], provided he will agree not to call the previous question, so as to cut off any motion to postpone the consideration of this bill to some time in December next.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] knows it is not necessary to make any such stipulation as that, because the House can refuse to second the call for the previous question, if the call should be made, should they desire to postpone the bill as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. DAWES. I desire also to have an understanding with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that I may be permitted to make a motion to recommit this bill with instructions to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the motions I have already consented to allow to be made are sufficient for the purpose of testing the feeling of the House in regard to this bill.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. KASSON to section twenty-three of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out the last word of the twenty-third section, simply for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] if he will permit me to move in the House to recommit this bill and pending amendments to the Committee of Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back at any time. If not, I shall be obliged to move that the committee rise and recommend that to the House. I will make that motion unless I can accomplish the purpose without it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will permit that, as I desire the bill shall be put in the shape in which the House wants it before a test vote is taken. Of course this is with the understanding that there shall be no motion to lay on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I submit the following proposition:

Resolved, That the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means with instructions to report a bill embracing the first section of the pending bill; the sixth and twelfth sections, as originally reported, and including the amendments relative to the duty on tea and coffee;

the duties on linseed, flaxseed, hempseed, rapeseed, and upon oils manufactured therefrom, as provided in the bill; a reduction of the duty on railroad iron to seventy cents per hundred pounds; a reduction of all other rates embodied in the bill to a standard not higher than the actual necessities of the interests affected thereby require, not exceeding in any case twenty-five per cent. above the rates now fixed by law; and section fourteen, and all subsequent sections, with such changes as previous modifications may require, if any.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman to accept the following as a modification of his proposition:

Resolved, That the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the same be recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back at the next session, with such modifications and changes as they may see fit.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I cannot accept it.

Mr. ROSS. I have an amendment which must be acted on before any motion to rise can be entertained. I move to strike out "thirty-five hundred" and insert "twenty-five hundred;" so that the section will read as follows:

Sec. 23. And be it further enacted, That there shall be established in and attached to the Department of the Treasury a bureau to be styled the Bureau of Statistics, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint a Director to superintend and conduct the business of said bureau, who shall be paid an annual salary of $2,500.

Mr. Chairman, I have no remark to make further than this is another effort to reduce the expenses of the Government.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman from Vermont will give me an opportunity to offer the resolution in the House, I will now withdraw it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

And then, on motion of Mr. MORRILL, (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Samuel Wilson, Isaac Mann, and 46 others, residents of Frankford, Philadelphia, employed in manufacturing establishments, for the passage of an amended tariff bill to protect American labor.

Also, the petition of William B. Coates, of Philadelphia, setting forth that on his application, the Navy Department granted him permission to test his submarine battery, and after putting him to expense failed to give him the cooperation required, and asking Congress for a grant of money to test his invention or purchase it.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 10, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. HENDRICKS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of the New York and Virginia Steamship Company, praying for payment for the steamers Yorktown and Jamestown, which were seized by the rebels in 1861 and converted into gunboats and used by the rebel government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, praying for the passage of a bill securing uniformity in the postal system of the different nations of the civilized world, by declaring that the half ounce avoirdupois shall, for postal purposes, be deemed and taken as the equivalent of fifteen grammes of the metric weight; which was referred to the select committee on coinage, weights, and measures.

He also presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in favor of the passage of the joint resolution now pending before the Senate repealing so much of the act relative to steamship service between California and China as requires the mail steamship line between the United States and China to touch at the Sandwich Islands; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NYE presented the memorial of James Roach, praying for compensation for services rendered in Ireland during the late rebellion in behalf of this country; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FENIAN MOVEMENT.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following concurrent resolution, and ask for its consideration at this time:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President be, and is hereby, requested to interpose the good offices of the United States to procure the release and discharge of persons now held in the Canadas and elsewhere under the authority of the Government of Great Britain, charged with participation in the so-called Fenian movement.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senate is rather thin now.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; I will consent to let the resolution lie on the table for the present.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom were referred sundry petitions and memorials of officers of the Army of the United States, praying for an increase of compensation, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. POLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 416) extending time to the Alabama and Florida Railroad Company for the payment of duties on railroad iron; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 417) to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Ferry Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CALIFORNIA LAND TITLES.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In pursuance of a notice which I gave yesterday, I ask leave to introduce a bill with a view to its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 415) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the Soscol ranch, in the State of California;" and it was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that that question has been somewhat considered by the Committee on Public Lands, and properly, I suppose, belongs to that committee, though I have no choice about the committee to which it shall go.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending motion is that of the Senator from Delaware, that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will consent to let it go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am aware that the matter has been before the Committee on Public Lands, and this is a bill to amend an act reported by that committee. I know nothing about the case myself; I only present the bill at the request of parties who feel a deep interest in it, and who desire, as there are questions of law involved in it, and they suppose that the Attorney General has given an opinion, that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Personally it makes no difference to me to what committee it is referred; but as there are questions of law involved, it is proper, I apprehend, that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it involves any questions of law more than any ordinary legislation in relation to public lands. The matter has been before the Committee on Public Lands in various forms of legislation. There is no question of law involved in the proposed bill that I know of more than in ordinary legislation connected with the public lands.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The honorable Senator may not be aware now, because, he may not have thoroughly examined the subject, that there are questions of law involved in it, and yet, although he is not aware of the fact that such questions are involved, it is possible that there may be. It is true the Committee on Public Lands have had this subject before them; and this is a bill contemplating an amendment to an act which was reported by that committee originally, and which has been passed by both Houses. There are questions of law involved, so much so that it has been thought to be necessary to take the opinion of the Attorney General.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator from Delaware if this bill contemplates a review of the opinion expressed by the Attorney General in regard to existing laws. Does it involve a reexamination of the questions that were once presented to the Attorney General?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I know nothing about the bill further than this: it was placed in my hands to be offered to the Senate by gentlemen who feel a deep interest in the matter, and who wish to have the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary upon the questions of law which they say necessarily arise in the case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then we had better let it go there.

Mr. CONNESS. I have moved that this bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I want to have a vote upon that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a motion already pending that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That motion is yet undisposed of.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that reference will not be ordered. This is a bill to amend a former act relating to public lands, and I hope it will go to the Committee on Public Lands, and not to the Judiciary Committee, as now moved.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Without knowing what this bill provides, it is impossible to say which committee it ought to go to. The Committee on Public Lands reported a bill two or three years ago, and it became a law, regulating the rights of the settlers upon what is called the Soscol ranch, in California—a very valuable piece of land. The contestants brought their cases before the General Land Office, and a decision was there made. The question went to the Secretary of the Interior, and he took the opinion of the Attorney General upon the construction of the law that was passed two or three years ago, as I understand it. If this bill intends to change the law in view of the decision of the Attorney General, I think it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, if that is the effect of the proposition; but if it is simply a bill regulating the public lands in California it seems to me it ought to go to the Land Committee.

Mr. CONNESS. I will say to the Senator, before he closes, that it does not propose that at all, but proposes to amend the former act.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the amendment rests upon the opinion of the Attorney General, I suppose it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONNESS. I call for the reading of the bill. ["Oh, no."] It is very short, containing only one section.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That an act entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the Soscol ranch, in the State of California," approved March 3, 1863, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following proviso to section two of said act, namely: Provided, That not more than one hundred and sixty acres shall be entered or purchased of the Government by any one person under or by virtue of the provisions of said act.

Mr. CLARK. I happen to know something in regard to the act to which this bill refers, which was passed, I think, in 1863, and I happen to know something of the manner in which it went through the Senate. I have also been informed of and seen the opinion of the Attorney General, which, somewhat to my surprise, I think alters perhaps the rights of the preemptionists in all the country; and the question arises, as a matter of law, what shall be done with that act, what amendment should be made to it, or what legislation there should be on the subject. I think it is highly proper, as a matter of law, that this question should go to the Judiciary Committee and be settled by them. It is not a matter very much affecting the public lands, but it is a matter very gravely affecting the right of the preemptionists under the laws of the land, and so becomes particularly important for the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary. I think it should go in that direction. I know some of the efforts that have been made in regard to this matter in the history of legislation, and I think the thing should be very carefully considered before it makes further progress.

Mr. CONNESS. I, too, know something about this question, for it affects the people that I represent very deeply and materially. The efforts that have been made in this connection have kept a section of the country that I represent here in turmoil for three years last past. The question has been settled by the tribunal of highest resort; and now it is proposed again to reopen for three or more years longer all the turmoil and difficulty that have passed. It is clearly a question for the Committee on Public Lands, if any, to consider, and not for the Committee on the Judiciary. I have confidence in the Judiciary Committee of this body, but there is no propriety in sending the question involved in this bill to that committee. The question is as to whether certain parties shall have exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of land. It is not proposed to review the opinion of the Attorney General alluded to. If the opinion of the Attorney General is not good law, if it restricts the general preemption laws, then let the Committee on Public Lands, who properly have charge of that subject, introduce such a change in the preemption laws as shall meet the case; if there be difficulty in the case, it is their province to do that. Why this bill, which proposes that certain parties in the State of California shall enter not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres of land, should be sent to the Judiciary Committee of this body, as against the Committee on Public Lands, I cannot understand, and I hope it will not be sent to that committee.

Mr. CLARK. I do not suppose that the turmoil and trouble which this case has occasioned are to be settled at once by the reference of this bill to the Committee on Public Lands or to the Committee on the Judiciary. I know there is a great deal of trouble about it; I know there has been a great deal of trouble about it; and I know there will be a great deal of trouble about it; and the Senator from California, though he may know a great deal in regard to the lands in California, as he undoubtedly does, will not be able, with all his power, to settle the difficulty. The question now is a question of law. How far this opinion of the Attorney General, which the Senator calls the highest tribunal—

Mr. CONNESS. I did not call it the highest tribunal.

Mr. CLARK. Or words to that effect.

Mr. CONNESS. I did not mean the Attorney General, with the Senator's leave.

Mr. CLARK. Then I am under a misapprehension in regard to what the Senator did mean, and I am at a loss to know what he did mean.

Mr. CONNESS. I will tell the Senator, if he will permit me.

Mr. CLARK. Certainly I will.

Mr. CONNESS. I meant the Interior Department. These questions of the administration of the land laws belong, first, to the General Land Office, and, upon appeal, to the Secretary of the Interior. I alluded to the decision of the head of that Department.

Mr. CLARK. I supposed that he meant the opinion of the Attorney General, because the Senator from California, I take it, well knows that the Interior Department referred it to the Attorney General and took his opinion, which was beyond that—

Mr. CONNESS. Upon one question.

Mr. CLARK. Exactly; I understand it; and now the question comes to be settled as a matter of law, how far that opinion goes, and what effect it has upon the land titles of the country. It seems to me eminently proper that this matter should go to the Judiciary Committee, that they may see what is the effect of that. I have no desire to take it from the Committee on Public Lands for any purpose except to settle what may be the law in regard to it; and in that view I think it should go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CONNESS. I regret to occupy the time of the Senate this morning on this subject, for I am very anxious to get to business of more importance. But, sir, what does this bill propose to do? Does it propose in any manner to review the opinion of the Attorney General? Is the opinion of the Attorney General referred to in it? Not at all. It provides "that an act entitled 'An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers on the Soscol ranch, in the State of California,' approved March 3, 1863, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following proviso to section two of said act."

And then follows the proviso. There is not the most distant reference to any opinion. It is clearly a question of the practical disposition of land, and I am only astonished that there should be any objection to its going to the regular committee.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no feeling about this matter, and if Senators desire to send this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, of course I shall not object to it. We have had this, among other questions from California, before our Committee on Public Lands for four years. We thought we settled it right in the bill to quiet land titles in the State of California. If any other committee after devoting four years to it can come to any better conclusion, I shall be glad to have them do it.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me the Senator from Kansas ought not to have any feeling on this subject.

Mr. POMEROY. Certainly not.

Mr. CLARK. But it is an exceedingly narrow view which the Senator from California now attempts to press upon the Senate, that the bill of itself has no reference to the Attorney General's opinion. The Senator must know as well as I know that in settling the questions propounded in that bill and settling the disposition of the bill, the whole thing must be reviewed. It is true the bill does not allude to it in terms, but does allude to the matter in such a way that the whole thing must come before the committee.

Mr. POMEROY. I submit that if a committee are to review the whole question they should begin at the beginning of the session. The whole question of land titles in California is the most complicated question that has arisen in any of the States. If that whole question is to be gone into, a committee wants to begin at the beginning of the session, because we have certainly spent three Congresses upon it.

Mr. CLARK. That would be an objection to referring it to any committee if an objection at all; but I do not apprehend that it is going to take so much time. However much time it may take, it ought to be done thoroughly and done well. I have no doubt the Land Committee would do it well, but the Judiciary Committee is peculiarly a committee for the purpose of investigating questions of law, and it seems to me that this bill ought to go to that committee.

Mr. STEWART. The Committee on Public Lands have already considered the subject, and they think they have considered it fairly and have done well. They reported a bill to this body which was thoroughly discussed, and it has they think well settled the question. I believe that the community are satisfied with the settlement, and I believe that equity and justice are fully accorded to all parties in that settlement. I do not believe a better settlement can be had; and at this late day it seems to me very proper that any new bill on the subject should go to the committee that has already considered it. It is simply a question whether the purchasers and occupants under a certain grant shall enter and buy more than one hundred and sixty acres. After a careful consideration of all the equities and hearing all parties, the Committee on Public Lands decided that they might buy what they had in possession, so that the community should remain undisturbed. This bill proposes to reopen the whole thing, to cut them down, and go into the same questions that have been before the Committee on Public Lands all this time. It presents no new question that has not been already considered. It seems to me that if this matter properly connected with the public lands is to be taken from that committee and given to the Judiciary Committee, it must be simply because gentlemen believe the Judiciary Committee will exercise a better discretion. I am on both committees, and it is entirely immaterial to me personally which committee the bill goes to; but it seems to me it will be a reflection on the Committee on Public Lands to take from them a matter that has been so thoroughly and I think fairly canvassed and determined by that committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In making this motion I intended no reflection upon any committee of the body. In fact, I know nothing about the case; I simply acted toward the person who handed me the bill to present to the Senate as I would act to any one else. He told me that he had a bill which he wanted me to present to the Senate, and he requested me to offer it and ask its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. I did in this case what I would do in any other. I had no knowledge of the merits of the case, and I have no feeling in reference to the matter; but I thought it was due to a citizen of a State even that I did not represent, having a measure which he wished to be brought to the consideration of the Senate, to present it to the Senate, and ask that it be heard fairly. I am perfectly content, as far as I am individually concerned, with any course which the Senate may adopt. I have simply acted in this case as I would act in any other, to oblige an individual who, though a stranger to me, had business to present to the consideration of the body of which I am a member.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will avail myself of the occasion, as the question is up, to make a personal explanation in connection with it. It will be recollected by Senators that two weeks since a bill was passed to quiet land titles in the State of California—a very important bill indeed, affecting the titles to very large sections of land in the State of California. That bill was before referred, some two or three months ago, perhaps, to the Committee on Public Lands. As an important measure, I gave it attention. The Senator from New York, who is a member of that committee, [Mr. HARRIS,] also gave that bill careful attention. He and I were both very anxious that in settling the titles in California the rights of the settlers upon the lands should be well secured; and we were neither of us, as I now recollect, satisfied fully with the bill that was introduced and referred to the committee, and it was finally suggested that that bill should be taken by myself to the General Land Office, and upon consultation with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the chief clerk of that office, and the surveyor general of the United States for California a bill should be drawn. I took the bill to the General Land Office, and the substitute was drawn mainly by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the surveyor general for California. I thought it was pretty safe in its provisions, and reported that substitute thus drawn to the Senate from the Committee on Public Lands. That bill did not finally pass, but an amendment to it passed which I thought in some respects better, and I gave it my support.

While that bill was pending in the House of Representatives a colleague of mine, who is connected with the Committee on Public Lands in that body, opposed some of its provisions, which particular provisions I did not trouble myself to see; but in the course of his remarks he sent to the Chair to be read a letter from California, withholding the name of the writer, which letter was abusive of myself because I had reported the amendment which had been drawn by the surveyor general, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and myself.

Now, sir, perhaps it is not proper that I should have noticed that proceeding. I suppose the man in California who wrote the letter is interested in this question, and perhaps he was not well informed on the subject that he was writing about, of the connection that I had with the legislation upon that subject, and the care that I had taken, so far as I was connected with the Committee on Public Lands, to secure the rights of the settlers. Of course I have nothing to say in regard to that person, or any language that he may have used toward myself. I simply wish in very plain and square terms to condemn the conduct of any colleague who will present to be read a letter traducing any gentleman connected with Congress about a matter that the writer could not have been well informed upon. But, sir, if that is the style and the taste of any gentleman, to attack a colleague in Congress by a letter, the name of the writer of which he will not communicate to the country, I leave it to him to decide for himself.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator allow me a word in that connection?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. I happened to be in the House at the time; and desiring to know the name of the writer I got the letter, but it was expunged by ink and covered so that it could not be interpreted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The name was?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir; the name.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As soon as enough of that letter had been read by the Clerk so that the Speaker could know its character, he stopped its reading instantly, as a presiding officer having a high appreciation of his duty and of the rights of other gentlemen would do, and making a marked contrast between himself and the high sentiments that govern him and the Representative that would send such a document to be read, obliterating the name of the writer before he would allow it to go to the country.

I was very careful in the preparation of that bill, as the Senator from California very well knows, and would not trust my own judgment; but I thought it was safe to trust the judgment of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and of the surveyor general for California, who had come on here, as I understood, to give his experience and his knowledge in aid of Congress in legislating on this troublesome question. California titles ought to be settled. There is nothing of greater importance in that State; and I am glad that we are likely to arrive at some result. So far as the particular reference of this bill is concerned I have no choice.

Mr. CONNESS. I cannot let this opportunity pass, having been present when the letter alluded to was read in the other House, and having examined and read the whole letter myself, without saying that in my opinion it was first written by a man ignorant of the subject upon which he wrote, next a man evidently governed by his interests in the connection; and a more marked case of impropriety than its introduction I never was witness to. Neither, sir, was I ever witness to a grosser and more unmerited and unjust attack than it made upon the Senator from Indiana; for I take pleasure in bearing testimony to the fact that in connection with all these questions of lands, upon the one proposition in which he was condemned in that letter, namely, a disregard of the settlers' interests, he has been peculiarly careful and precise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 12, noes 17.

Mr. CONNESS. Now I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMISSIONS TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the reading of the forty-eighth rule of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"48. No person shall be admitted to the floor of the Senate, while in session, except as follows, namely: the officers of the Senate, members of the House of Representatives and their Clerk, the President of the United States and his Private Secretary, the heads of Departments, foreign ministers, ex-Presidents, and ex-Vice Presidents of the United States, ex-Senators, Senators-elect, judges of the Supreme Court, and Governors of States and Territories."

Mr. GRIMES. I think every Senator has observed that there has been a very great relaxation of this rule of the Senate in practice, and I have waited a long time until an opportunity could occur when I might call the attention of Senators and of the Chair to the subject of this rule, no one being present occupying a place in the Senate who ought not to be here, so that any remark I might make about it might not be regarded as invidious. I desire now to say that so long as this rule exists I shall insist upon its strict observance.

GOVERNMENT INSANE ASYLUM.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 726, which has been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 726) to extend to certain persons the privilege of admission in certain cases to the United States Government Asylum for the Insane was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that civilians employed in the service of the United States, in the quartermaster's department and the subsistence department of the Army, who may be, or may hereafter become, insane while in such employment, shall be admitted on the order of the Secretary of War, the same as persons belonging to the Army and Navy, to the benefits of the Asylum for the Insane in the District of Columbia, as now provided by law in reference to soldiers and sailors in the Army and Navy. It also provides that the following classes of persons, under the circumstances named, shall be entitled to admission to the asylum on the order of the Secretary of War if in the Army, or the Secretary of the Navy if in the Navy, to wit: first, men who, while in the service of the United States, in the Army or Navy, have been admitted to the asylum, and have been afterward discharged therefrom on the supposition that they had recovered their reason, and have, within three years after such discharge, become again insane from causes existing at the time of the discharge, and have no adequate means of support; second, indigent insane persons, who have been in the same service and been discharged therefrom on account of disability arising from such insanity; third, indigent insane persons, who have become insane within three years after discharge from such service from causes which arose during and were produced by said service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPREME COURT JUDGES.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 334.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 334) to fix the number of judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to change certain judicial circuits.

The first section of the bill provides that hereafter the Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of one chief justice and eight associate justices.

The second section provides that the first, second, and third circuits shall remain as now constituted; that the districts of Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina shall constitute the fourth circuit; that the districts of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas shall constitute the fifth circuit; that the districts of West Virginia, Ohio, and Michigan shall constitute the sixth circuit; the districts of Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, and Tennessee shall constitute the seventh circuit; the districts of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Arkansas shall constitute the eighth circuit; and the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada shall constitute the ninth circuit.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment, which was to strike out all of section two after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the first and second circuits shall remain as now constituted; that the districts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware shall constitute the third circuit; that the districts of Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina shall constitute the fourth circuit; that the districts of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas shall constitute the fifth circuit; that the districts of Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee shall constitute the sixth circuit; that the districts of Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin shall constitute the seventh circuit; that the districts of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Arkansas shall constitute the eighth circuit; and the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada shall constitute the ninth circuit.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that the only amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the amendment we reported from the committee. I propose offering another amendment, upon which the committee has agreed since the bill was reported.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the honorable member to send to the Chair that amendment that it may be read in connection with the other. I do not know that I understand this alone.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps I had better explain. The bill as it came from the House provided that the judges of the Supreme Court should be eight associate justices and one chief justice, and arranged the nine circuits for the nine judges. Our committee have agreed to some alteration in those circuits as the House had arranged them. That is the amendment now pending. But the Committee on the Judiciary have instructed me further to report an amendment not to fill the vacancies until the whole number is reduced to seven; but still the circuits will be nine, because there are nine judges at present, and whenever the number on the bench shall be reduced hereafter it will involve the necessity of changing the circuits at a future time.

Mr. JOHNSON. The circuits must be modified.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The circuits will have to be modified as from time to time the number of judges decreases. We arrange them now according to the number of judges there are, so that the Senator will see we can act on this amendment now, and then I shall offer the other.

Mr. SHERMAN. The arrangement of the circuit in which I live would be very inconvenient as proposed by the amendment. I much prefer the original bill in that respect. I do not wish to interfere with the general arrangement of the circuits, but I know that the circuit in which Ohio is now proposed to be put will contain about five million people, and will contain at least six separate districts, extending over a vast region of country. I submit to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee whether we had better not leave the circuit as it stood in the original bill. West Virginia, Ohio, and Michigan would make a circuit of about three and a half million people, more than the average, with a large amount of business. Michigan has two districts with a very large water coast and a great deal of business. Ohio has two districts, the court sitting at Cleveland and Cincinnati, with a large amount of business. West Virginia added to them will be a circuit large enough; while the proposed circuit is Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee, spreading over a vast region of country, with five million people, and with more business I think than ought to be embraced in one circuit. I therefore prefer the arrangement, so far as the circuit in which I live is concerned, in the original House bill. I hope the Senator will allow it to remain so, if he can in harmony with the rest of the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The circuits are necessarily large. The Senator from Ohio is aware that a bill has passed the Senate and is pending in the other House to relieve the supreme judges entirely from circuit duty and establish an intermediate court of appeal.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And that court will be held at but one place in each judicial circuit.

Mr. SHERMAN. The circuit court?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It will be a court of appeals. It will be held at but one place in each circuit. The circuit in which Judge Swayne presides is large, and perhaps there will be more business in it than in some of the other circuits; but necessarily, the Senator must see, the circuits have to be very large, and the Senators from West Virginia—I think the Senators; if not the Senators some other persons—thought it would be entirely better that West Virginia should be in the same circuit with Virginia and Maryland. Their laws and their mode of practice are more in conformity with those of those States as a matter of course, having been a part of Virginia formerly, while there is no similarity between them and the proceedings in Ohio. Under the system that is to be adopted there is to be but one place of holding the appellate court in each circuit. In the bill that passed the Senate, I do not know where it was fixed in that circuit; but the House is proposing to change the place that was fixed upon, and I do not remember where they proposed to change it; but that bill has not yet passed the House. The Senator from Ohio will see that there will be no traveling over the circuit; and after considering the matter as well as we could—it is difficult to arrange these circuits so as to suit every local interest—taking everything into consideration, the committee agreed upon this arrangement as the best we could make, and I hope the Senate will not change it. The change of one will involve the change of others.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it involves very material interests. I will state to the Senator that the bill, as it passed the Senate, fixed the court for this circuit at Cleveland. It is convenient for the judges, convenient for Michigan, convenient for West Virginia, and convenient for the two districts of Ohio, while, if it is put at Columbus, we have no court-house there; we shall be compelled to build a court-house there; neither of the judges live there except Judge Swayne; neither of the district judges live there. It would be expensive and inconvenient to compel all the suitors to go to the interior of the State of Ohio instead of Cleveland, the proper place. I shall vote against the amendment. My colleague is familiar with it, and the Senators from Michigan know that the business relations of the three States of West Virginia, Ohio, and Michigan harmonize very well; and by having them together it would enable the court to be held where it is convenient. I do not wish to embarrass the bill; I simply want to have our court held at the place where it is convenient for our people.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill does not provide the place where it is to be held.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but this arrangement necessarily compels the court to be held probably at Cincinnati, and makes the circuit reach from Tennessee to Michigan.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is there any objection to holding the court at Cincinnati?

Mr. SHERMAN. None, except that it is so remote from a great portion of the circuit. It will comprise over five million people with a large coast along Lake Erie and Lake Michigan, and stretching from the extreme northern boundary of this country on Lake Superior to the south boundary of Tennessee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator will look at the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, he will see that that circuit is not near as large as Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, which constitute the fourth circuit by the bill; it is not near as large as Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, which constitute the fifth circuit by the House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is much larger in population.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary where the court of appeals for that circuit is to be held according to the bill which is now pending in the House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I cannot tell you.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is to be held at Cleveland, as the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the House committee propose to alter it to Columbus.

Mr. HOWARD. The most convenient place for my State would be Cleveland.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That question is not before us now.

Mr. HOWARD. But if you alter the circuit as suggested by this amendment you will have to change the place of holding the court of appeals.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is not the question now.

Mr. HOWARD. I think it comes in very fairly here. The circuit would be entirely too large. I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the amendment?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is changing the circuits as the House have them. The United States are divided into nine circuits.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It does not change the first.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; nor the second. It changes the third circuit by putting another State in it. It equalizes them, as we think, better than is done in the House bill. I hope this arrangement will not be interfered with, for if you commence in the Senate, on motion, to change one circuit you have got to change the others, and then eventually you will have to refer the bill back to some committee to arrange them all. I think they are as fairly arranged as they can be. The Senator from Ohio says this is a large circuit. It is not any larger than some others.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What circuit is that?

Mr. TRUMBULL. The circuit in which Ohio is situated, the sixth circuit by the amendment of the committee. The amendment provides, "that the districts of Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee, shall constitute the sixth circuit."

Mr. JOHNSON. The first and second circuits are not interfered with.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir. I trust the amendment of the committee will be adopted.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope it will not be adopted, for the reason that this sixth circuit is entirely too large in comparison with the other circuits, in my opinion. It embraces a vast surface of the territory of the United States, commencing upon the divisional boundary line at the north, and terminating at the south with the southern boundary of Tennessee. The population of that circuit at the present time, I suppose, must be at least six millions, probably even more than that. I imagine that this is the largest circuit that has been carved out, and covering a vast tract of country, and it will be next to impossible for the people of Michigan to attempt to litigate business before the court of appeals at the place where that court will probably be held. If this bill pass it will necessitate the removal of the court of appeals from Cleveland, which is sufficiently inconvenient in all conscience to us now, to Cincinnati, for the accommodation of Kentucky and Tennessee. It will be a most inconvenient and costly proceeding for us to be compelled to go to Cincinnati to try our appeals, and I think unreasonably so, consuming a vast deal of our time. We might as well come to Washington before the Supreme Court of the United States, with just as much convenience and with as little expense.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes nineteen, noes not counted.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There was no other amendment reported by the committee; but since the bill has been reported to the Senate I have been instructed by the committee to offer an amendment, which is to strike out all of the first section after the word "that" and to insert the following:

No vacancy in the office of associate justice of the Supreme Court shall be filled by appointment until the number of associate justices shall be reduced to six, and thereafter the said Supreme Court shall consist of a chief justice of the United States and six associate justices, and four of whom shall be a quorum; and the said court shall hold one term annually at the seat of Government, and such adjourned or special terms as it may find necessary for the dispatch of business.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Chief Justice, with the approval of the court, may appoint a marshal, who shall attend its sessions, execute its process, take charge of the property of the United States used by said court, and perform such other duties as may be by law fairly required of him. The compensation of said marshal shall be $3,000 a year, and he shall collect all fees allowed by law on process executed and for services performed by him, and shall pay the same into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to inquire of the honorable mover of that amendment what is the necessity for it. The marshal has been appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, from the beginning of the Government to the present time. This amendment only provides for a marshal for the Supreme Court. No inconvenience has resulted from the present mode of appointment that I am aware of.

Mr. HARRIS. The marshal of the court now is the marshal of the District of Columbia. In fact, that officer is engaged with his other duties in the District attending the other courts in the District, and he is obliged to send an agent or a deputy to attend the Supreme Court of the United States. The judges of that court desire, and I think it is peculiarly proper, that they should have their own marshal to attend their court to execute the duties of such an officer; and it seems to me proper enough that the court itself should appoint that officer. There is a fitness in it, in my judgment. As I understand it, it will be very little, if any, expense to the Government. The fees that that officer will receive will amount to as much as the salary provided. The amendment will furnish the court with an officer of their own selection, to be present at the sessions of the court, to attend to the duties and orders of the court, instead of being obliged now to depend upon some deputy or inferior officer who may be sent there by the marshal of this District. It seems to me peculiarly proper that this dignified court should have an officer of their own appointment during their session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator from New York will not insist on that amendment on this bill. It is an amendment which has not been considered by any committee, has not been recommended, and is brought in here in the Senate to create a new officer for the court. There has been no official communication from the court to the committee on the subject. I have heard nothing of it until it is now proposed for the first time in the Senate. I do not know of any necessity there is for the Supreme Court to appoint their own marshal any more than for the judges of the district courts or the judges of the circuit courts to appoint their own marshals. An officer is furnished under the law to attend upon all these courts. If there is any complaint about it, of course I should feel disposed to correct it. I do not see any difficulty that can arise under the present law. But this is a question that has not been considered, and I trust the Senator from New York will not press it, upon this bill at any rate. This bill is for a specific object only. I hope he will let it go over until some other bill shall come in or until we shall have some further information in regard to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I dislike to press this amendment against the wishes of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is true it has not been submitted to that committee. The amendment has been suggested to me by the judges of the court. It was not an original idea with me by any means; but the moment the suggestion was made, it struck me as so peculiarly fit that I supposed any lawyer, any person who was at all familiar with the business of the court, would see that it was proper that they should have an officer of this sort of their own. We all know, those of us who are at all familiar with the condition of things in the court, that they are without such an officer there, except as the marshal of this District, who is unable to attend there much, chooses to send them some inferior officer. I am disappointed to find that the amendment meets with the opposition it does from the quarter from which it comes.

Mr. JOHNSON. This would be a singular provision, as I think, and one not to be found in any of the States, that I am aware of. You might as well propose that a State court should appoint the sheriff. The marshal here has all the powers of a sheriff in executing process, and it has always been supposed that the appointment should be in the executive authority, whatever that might be, and not the judicial authority. There is no instance that I have ever heard of where a court itself was authorized to appoint its own executive officers. I think it is liable to objection on that account.

Now, in relation to the practice and effect of the present system, I never heard from any of the judges any ground of complaint. The marshal has generally been there in person, but if he was not there, he had some deputy who was apparently faithfully discharging the duties of his place. I submit, therefore, to my friend from New York that at least he had better not press it upon this bill, because it might defeat the bill, or delay its passage, which would be equivalent to a defeat.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a bill in which my colleague [Mr. MORRILL] takes a good deal of interest. He is now getting well; but I suppose he is unable to come out to-day on account of the inclemency of the weather; and I hope the bill will be postponed until he comes into the Senate. He will probably be here to-morrow if the weather is good.

Mr. HOWE. I ask if that request is made at his direction.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; but I know the fact. He is a member of the Committee on Commerce which reported this bill, and he would like to be present when it is considered; indeed I know he would.

Mr. HOWE. I think I understand precisely how much interest the Senator from Maine takes in it, and just what his interest is. I have more interest in having him here, I think, than he has in being here, and I have delayed the bill a good while to have him here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He was here yesterday. Mr. HOWE. He was here for a short time yesterday.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And probably will be here to-morrow, if the weather will allow him, as he is now recovering.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the honorable member will permit me, the Senator from Maine not now in his seat told me yesterday that he was exceedingly desirous to be here when this bill should be taken up. It was suggested to take it up yesterday while he was out for a moment, and when he came back he told me that. He did not request me to state it; but I state it as what I am sure is his wish; and I think he added that he had no doubt the Senator from Wisconsin would very willingly indulge him for a day or two longer.

Mr. HOWE. Then will the Senate indulge me in taking up the bill and setting it down as the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock?

Mr. FESSENDEN. With the understanding that it is to be proceeded with if my colleague is here at that time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think that all will agree, inasmuch as the bill is now being put over for the Senator from Maine, that it shall come up to-morrow without setting it down as a special order. I presume that will be the understanding; and I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 386.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion before the Senate is not disposed of.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose the Senator from Wisconsin will not insist on his motion.

Mr. HOWE. I will not press it against the wishes of the friends of the measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion withdrawn?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; I withdraw it.

ENLARGEMENT OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 386.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 386) to enlarge the public grounds surrounding the Capitol. It proposes that the public grounds surrounding the Capitol be enlarged (according to the plan approved by the Committees on Public Buildings of the Senate and House of Representatives respectively, which plan is directed to be deposited in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior) by extension between First street east and First street west, in the following manner: northwardly to the south side of north B street, and southwardly to the north side of south B street, including, in addition to so much of the reservations, avenues, and streets as are necessary for such extension, the two squares designated on the plan of the city of Washington as Nos. 687 and 688 respectively.

It is to be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to purchase from the owner or owners at such price, not exceeding its actual cash value, as may be mutually agreed on between the Secretary and such owner or owners, and not exceeding the appraisal made by the commission of nine in their report to Robert Ould, United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, on the 21st of January, 1861, such private property as may be necessary for carrying the act into effect, the value of the property so purchased to be paid to the owner or owners on the requisition of the Secretary; but before payment shall be made the owner or owners of the property purchased are, by good and sufficient deed or deeds in due form of law and approved by the Attorney General of the United States, to fully release and convey to the United States their several and respective rights in the titles to such lands and property so purchased.

If the Secretary of the Interior shall not be able to agree with the owner or owners upon the price to be paid, or if, for any other cause, he shall be unable to obtain the title to any such property by mutual agreement with the owner or owners, it is to be his duty to make application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia; which court is required, upon such application, in such mode and under such rules and regulations as it may adopt, to make a just and equitable appraisal of the cash value of the several interests of each and every owner of the real estate and improvements thereon necessary to be taken for the public use and to which the Secretary has been unable to obtain the title by mutual agreement with the owner or owners. The fee-simple of all premises so appropriated for public use, of which an appraisal shall have been made under the order and direction of the court, is upon payment to the owner or owners respectively of the appraised value, or in case the owner or owners refuse or neglect for fifteen days after the appraisal of the cash value of the lands and improvements by the court to demand it from the Secretary of the Interior, upon depositing the appraised value in the court to the credit of such owner or owners respectively to be vested in the United States. And the Secretary of the Interior is to pay to the several owner or owners the appraised value of the several premises as specified in the appraisal of the court, or pay into court by deposit, the appraised value.

The court may direct the time and manner in which possession of the property condemned shall be taken or delivered, and may, if necessary, enforce any order or issue any process for giving possession. The costs occasioned by the inquiry and assessment are to be paid by the United States; and as to other costs which may arise, they are to be charged or taxed as the court may direct. No delay in making an assessment of compensation, or in taking possession, is to be occasioned by any doubt which may arise as to the ownership of the property, or any part of it, or as to the interests of the respective owners, but in such cases the court is to require a deposit of the money allowed as compensation for the whole property, or the part in dispute. In all cases, as soon as the United States shall have paid the compensation assessed, or secured its payment, by a deposit of money, under the order of the court, possession of the property may be taken.

The Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company are required to remove their track from Delaware avenue, between A and B streets north, and from the Capitol grounds, and to run the same along B street north to First street east, thence along First street east to the main line on Pennsylvania avenue, as now established; and the Metropolitan Railroad Company are required to remove the track of their road from A street north and from New Jersey avenue, between A and B streets north.

The sum of $50,000 is appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in grading, filling up, removing buildings, and improving the public grounds and streets around the Capitol as herein enlarged; but no grading of the public square east of the Capitol is to be commenced until the title to the private property to be purchased under the provisions of the act shall be acquired by the United States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is a misprint in the printing of the bill at the close of the second section. It now reads:

Fully release and convey to the United States all their and each of their respective rights in said titles to such lands and property so purchased.

It should read, "all their rights and titles to such lands," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If I can have the attention of Senators, as this is a matter in which all are interested, I will try to explain what this proposed enlargement is. I have a map here which shows it precisely. The streets immediately north and south of the Capitol are known as A street north and A street south. A street is the nearest street to the Capitol. The embankment reaches over into A street at the present time; and so also south of the Capitol. The Government now own all the land west of the Capitol building between A and B streets, so that we have to purchase no grounds in order to extend the present grounds to B street north and B street south. There are in the grounds as now inclosed about the Capitol twenty-six acres. If the extension recommended by the committee—this bill comes from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and is approved by that committee, both of the Senate and House—takes place, there will be in the Capitol grounds forty-one acres, besides the two blocks, the dimensions of which I do not know exactly, known as squares 687 and 688, which are the blocks lying north and south of the square east of the Capitol. The block upon which the houses are where Mrs. Carter lives is one block, and the other is the block corresponding to that on the south side of the square. There will be forty-one acres of ground beside what is in those two blocks; and I suppose in those blocks there are four or five acres probably, so that there will be say forty-five acres in the inclosure. The committee recommend the purchasing of those two blocks and closing up A streets north and south, leaving the inclosure just as it now is on First street west, and extending the square to B street both north and south, and then running on B street up to First street east, which is the street directly east of the public square lying east of the Capitol, and which runs between the square and what is known as Carroll Row and the Old Capitol. We propose to remove the railroad of the Washington and Georgetown company from A street, and let them run on B street, and then on First street east over to Pennsylvania avenue and to the navy-yard, as at present; and the other railroad of course will stop on B street, instead of coming up to A street.

In connection with this plan it is proposed by the committee to grade down the grounds lying east of the Capitol. The ground east of the Capitol, from the steps east, now rises; and the elevation of First street east, which is over here by the Carroll block, is a little over eight feet higher than the foot of the Capitol steps. This gives a very low appearance to the building from that direction. It is thought it would improve the building very much to grade that square down so as to bring First street east one foot lower than the lowest step of the eastern front of the Capitol. Then the ground will be drained north and south. As all will recollect who have any knowledge of the ground, it declines very rapidly north and south. It will require no grading on B street north or B street south; there is a sufficient descent to take off the water.

We have had this ground all surveyed by engineers detailed by the engineer department, and also by the architect in charge here, Mr. Clark, who have measured the quantity of earth which is necessary in order to extend the terrace. The terrace on the west front of the Capitol, according to the proposed plan, is to be extended around on the north and south ends of the Capitol; and it will require a large amount of earth upon the south of the Capitol to fill it up to B street and to grade B street. The quantity of earth which may be obtained by grading down the square east of the Capitol, as proposed, will not be sufficient to fill up what will be requisite to extend these terraces and make this improvement; so that it will cost nothing to grade the block east of the Capitol. We can get earth there cheaper than anywhere else, and we shall need twice the amount that will be furnished by this grading.

The two blocks of ground to which I have referred, the one on which Mrs. Carter's is and the one corresponding to it on the other side, are known as squares 687 and 688. In 1860 the title of the different owners to the property in those squares was examined, and I have in my hand the report of the district attorney for the District of Columbia, who was charged with that duty, showing who owns each lot, and tracing the title of each person to the property which he claims, and also the assessed value of these two blocks, and their estimated value by nine gentlemen selected for that purpose. I will read the report of those nine gentlemen as to the value of these lots, as the Senate probably would like to know something about what the expense of purchasing these squares will be:

"WASHINGTON, January 21, 1861.

"In compliance with the request of Robert Ould, United States attorney for the District of Columbia, that the undersigned should appraise the fair cash value of the several pieces of real estate embraced in a certain proposed enlargement of the public grounds around the Capitol, we respectfully submit that, after a personal inspection of the premises and a careful consideration of the value thereof, in our judgment the same are worth the several amounts named in the aforesaid schedules. We further certify that we have no interest in the said property.

"Given under our hands."

I will read the names. They are all citizens of Washington and known to many members of the Senate, and I presume the valuation at that time was a fair one:

"Thomas J. Fisher, Charles W. Boteler, Jr., George W. Riggs, Samuel Bacon, Richard Wallach, B. B. French, J. Van Riewick, J. M. Brodhead, John D. Brandt."

The estimate of these two blocks which we propose now to purchase at that time was for the value of the lots in square 687, $87,933, and for the value of the improvements upon that square, $47,150. The value of the lots in square 688 was $97,754, and the value of the improvements, $57,550, making the whole value of the two squares, as estimated by this commission of nine gentlemen—and each particular lot is calculated for as well as the improvements—about three hundred and sixty thousand dollars, I think. The bill under consideration provides that the Secretary of the Interior may purchase this property by private contract with the owners at a price not exceeding that named in this appraisal made in 1861; but in case he cannot agree with the owners as to the price, then the bill contains a provision for the condemnation of the property under the direction of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

I believe I have presented to the Senate all that is necessary to an understanding of the matter, and I shall be happy, so far as I can, to explain to any member of the Senate who may desire it anything further or communicate any information that I may have in explanation of the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I will inquire from the Senator from Illinois whether he has made any estimate of the probable expense of the purchase which is contemplated by the bill at the present time. The report which he has read was dated in 1861, five years ago. Between that time and this, I take it for granted, the property has increased in value considerably, and must now be worth, according to asking prices, perhaps half a million at least.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know. The information in regard to that is somewhat conflicting. One member of the committee—I do not know whether he is now present—informed me that some of the owners had stated to him that they were willing to take the appraisal. I have seen other owners, and they say they will not take it; but if they do not, then the bill provides for a condemnation. We thought it better to put a limit on the Secretary of the Interior, that he should not give above this appraisal. The Senator will remember this appraisal was made before the war.

Mr. HOWARD. I noticed that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And perhaps at one time the property has been much lower; it could have been bought for less. How it may be now I cannot say. There is a difference of opinion about that. My own judgment is that most of the proprietors will be glad to take the amount that the property was appraised at; but if they do not, we know no other way than to proceed to condemn it and pay for it what may be assessed by a jury under the direction of the proper court.

Mr. HOWARD. I have not been able to discover any very pressing necessity, especially at the present time, for enlarging the Capitol grounds and incurring further expense for that purpose. I do not know wherein the necessity exists. The Capitol has been here for half a century or more, and we have got on very comfortably with it, got on very well with the small patch of ground on which we have been located. I am not able to discover any great inconvenience from want of ground merely. There is great inconvenience in this Chamber, I am quite aware, owing to the peculiar atmosphere with which we are blessed, but I do not know of any necessity for an expansion of the surface that we are occupying.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to ask my friend from Michigan whether he is willing the Capitol should stand as it now is, with no ground beside the wings.

Mr. HOWARD. That would involve such a variety of considerations that it might occupy more time than I should be willing to allow.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am not willing it should stand that way without ground. We must do it at some time or other.

Mr. HOWARD. I merely rose to make an inquiry. I have got a partial answer from my friend from Illinois; but as to a part of my question he does not seem to have given it attention, and that is the necessity which exists for extending the surface of the public grounds.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose that is obvious to every one's eye-sight. Certainly this building, upon which so many millions have been expended, is not to be left here permanently in this unfinished condition of the grounds about it.

Mr. HOWARD. If the capital could be moved into the valley of the Mississippi river, the people there could furnish any amount of ground that might be necessary without any expense.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will they meet the expense of the removal?

Mr. HOWARD. There are some reasons which I think might induce them to take the entire expense of removing the capital, if they had a chance.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have great respect for the opinion of the honorable member from Michigan; but I am inclined to think that in this instance he will be thought by the Senate to be in error. I am so well satisfied of that, that I will not undertake to state why I think that he is in error. I rise for a different purpose, and I ask the attention, therefore, of my friend from Illinois.

The second section of the bill limits the Secretary of the Interior, who is to purchase the property, to the sum that was ascertained to be its value in 1861, before the war commenced, and amounting, perhaps, as he correctly added it up, to some three hundred and sixty-odd thousand dollars. That estimate was made upon the hypothesis that a dollar was a dollar. Now, I want to know from the honorable member whether this valuation is to be paid in the existing currency. I suppose it is. If it is to be paid in that way the owners of the property will not get the value of their property as it was ascertained in 1861, but just so much less as a dollar now is worth less than it was in 1861.

Then, my friend from Illinois will be kind enough to tell me what is the meaning, in the particular which I have mentioned, of the succeeding section. The third section assumes that the Secretary may not be able to obtain the property by purchase from the present owners, and it gives, therefore, to the Secretary the authority to have the property condemned under "the provisions of this act." I want to know of my friend from Illinois whether under that condemnation the jury or the board, whoever may pass upon the value of the property, can give to the owners more than the amount ascertained to be the value of the property in 1861.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Shall I reply now?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Surely this has nothing to do with the appraisement in 1861. While I am up, if the Senator will allow me, I will answer both his questions. The first part of the bill provides for the purchase of this property at private sale by contract. The committee were not willing to leave the thing without limit, to leave the Secretary to pay any price he thought proper, and therefore we have provided in this bill that he shall purchase it at private sale, if he can, at a price not exceeding that appraisement, of course at a price to be paid in the currency of the country. The Senator from Maryland thinks that will not purchase the property now. He may be correct in that. We had information before the committee that some of the proprietors, and we were informed that one who owned largely of this property, would accept the appraisement for the property, of course payable in the currency of the country; others may not; and perhaps this information may not be correct, though one of the members of the committee stated that he had the information. Then we have provided, if it cannot be purchased at that price, that it shall be condemned under the direction of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and that condemnation has no reference whatever to the appraisement in 1861. The Senator will observe that the third section is not limited. I do not suppose it would be competent to limit it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it would.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I apprehend we should have no right to do so, or perhaps would have no right; it would at least be questionable. I submit, as the Senator has raised that question, whether he thinks we could properly limit it in that way. If so, I should have no objection to putting in a proper limitation.

Mr. JOHNSON. My friend misunderstands me. I supposed the section was susceptible of a different interpretation from the one which the honorable member says is the only one which can be put upon it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I may be mistaken.

Mr. JOHNSON. If it was susceptible of a different interpretation, I intended to say it was what we could not accomplish. We must give to the owners of property taken for public use what the worth of the property is at the time of the taking. If, therefore, the property should be worth more than $360,000 supposing none of the proprietors are willing to sell, we cannot get it from them without paying them what it is found to be actually worth.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that I was mistaken in stating the amount to be $360,000. It is not quite $360,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. The principle is the same, whatever the amount. The Senator stated it to be $360,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ran it over in my mind as I was speaking, but I see, on coming to add up the figures, that the amount is only two hundred and ninety-odd thousand dollars—less than three hundred thousand.

Mr. JOHNSON. That does not affect the present question. I supposed the Senator had added it up correctly. The only reason that made me doubt whether the jury or the court could give the actual value of the property is that in the second section the appraised value in 1861 is made the maximum beyond which the Secretary of the Interior cannot go, and then it says in the third section that the supreme court of the District of Columbia is authorized, in such mode and under such rules and regulations as it may adopt, "to make a just and equitable appraisement of the cash value of the several interests of each and every owner of the real estate and improvements thereon necessary to be taken for the public use, in accordance with the provisions of this act." I believe the honorable member's interpretation of the section is right; but it would put it beyond all doubt if the words "at the time when the appraisement is made" were inserted.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no objection to that amendment. I think the section means that now.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think that is the legal effect of it, but I want to make it plain. I move to insert after the word "act," in the fourteenth line of the third section, the words "at the time of said appraisement."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed an enrolled bill (H. R. No. 730) relating to pilots and pilot regulations; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

APPROVAL OF A BILL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 5th instant, an act (S. No. 99) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Albany, Oregon, to the eastern boundary of said State.

RETROCESSION OF ALEXANDRIA.

On motion of Mr. WADE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 280) to repeal an act entitled "An act to retrocede the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, to the State of Virginia, and for other purposes."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. As a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I had occasion to examine this bill, and I came to the conclusion that in all probability it ought not to be passed. My impression is that it will only complicate the difficulties that now surround the question. In 1846 that portion of this District which was originally ceded by Virginia was retroceded to that State with the consent of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, it being supposed at that time that it required the consent of Congress and the consent of the Legislature of that State. It was doubted then whether that act was constitutional. I have not given the constitutional question as thorough an examination as might have been given to it; but I am very clearly of the opinion that the act of retrocession to the State of Virginia was constitutional. I cannot doubt that. I cannot doubt to-day that constitutionally Congress may remove the capital to any part of the country that it chooses. It will be recollected that this was not a cession to the State of Virginia of anything except what we had procured from the State of Virginia originally by her cession. Some question might arise, in all probability, whether Congress could cede to the State of Maryland that portion of the District which it received from Virginia, or could cede to Virginia that portion of the District north of the Potomac river, which it received originally from the State of Maryland; but this was a retrocession clearly of the territory acquired from the State of Virginia back to that State. It was supposed to be necessary to obtain the consent of the Legislature of the State of Virginia to the act. It was obtained; and not only that, but the people themselves living on the territory. I believe, voted in favor of the proposition, and the territory thereby went back to the State of Virginia. It has been under the jurisdiction of Virginia from that time until this. The municipal organization of the county of Alexandria has had uninterrupted jurisdiction over that portion of the District which was retroceded. The people have been required to pay taxes to the State of Virginia; and the courts of the State of Virginia have been held there; and to all intents and purposes the territory has been clearly under the jurisdiction of that State. The question, I believe, of the transfer of jurisdiction has not been disputed in any of the courts. That question could readily be adjudicated at any time. For instance, a case could be brought up from the courts of Virginia to the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the transfer, or any citizen of Alexandria could refuse to pay taxes to the State of Virginia, and upon that refusal a case could be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, and an adjudication be had.

Now, Mr. President, what is the object of this bill? It is to repeal what is denominated an unconstitutional act. The assertion is made that the act of Congress retroceding to Virginia that portion of the District of Columbia originally ceded by Virginia to the United States is unconstitutional. As I have already stated, I have no doubt on that subject, or scarcely any. I think that it was a constitutional act. But if it be not constitutional, it is a very easy matter to test it any day. Any one of the citizens of Alexandria can test it any day that he chooses. He may, for instance, refuse obedience to the laws of the State of Virginia; if he were indicted in one of the courts of Virginia, in the county of Alexandria, he could ask to be relieved from the penalty by a writ of habeas corpus upon the ground that there was no jurisdiction in the State of Virginia over that territory, and thus have the question raised. Inasmuch as it is so very easy to test that question, I do not deem that it is proper legislation on our part to repeal the act simply because of the allegation that it was unconstitutional legislation.

Suppose we repeal the act without the consent of the State of Virginia, what sort of a fix shall we then be in? How will the people of Alexandria then be situated? There will be a jurisdiction exercised over them by the Congress of the United States; and the State of Virginia not giving her consent to this repeal, having once given her consent to the retrocession of the territory to her, of course will undertake to exercise jurisdiction also, and we shall have two conflicting powers exercising jurisdiction over the county of Alexandria. How will the question be determined? How is it to be determined? You can only determine it by the courts. The State of Virginia will not relinquish her jurisdiction over the territory, but will still claim it. She will tax the citizens of Alexandria; and the levy commissioners of the District of Columbia, under the authority of Congress, will also undertake to levy a tax upon them. Now, I ask Senators, how will the question be determined? It can only be determined, of course, by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, because that is the court of last resort where a question of this sort must be determined; and in order to relieve these citizens of the difficulties which they now say they are laboring under, the question must yet be tested there. Why not, then, leave the jurisdiction exactly as it is? If there be any inhabitants of the old District of Columbia south of the Potomac river, in the county of Alexandria, who believe that the act of retrocession was unconstitutional and who are unwilling to render obedience to the laws of the State of Virginia, it is surely an easy matter for them to test the question. It is a much easier matter to test it now than it will be after the passage of this bill. All I can see in the repeal by Congress of the act of retrocession is that we shall thereby indicate to the Supreme Court the opinion of Congress that that act was an unconstitutional act. I presume that that ought to have very little weight with the Supreme Court in deciding that question. The Supreme Court ought to decide such questions irrespective of the views and opinions of members of Congress, however correct or entitled to respect those opinions may be.

Hence, inasmuch as we shall only accumulate the difficulties that now surround the question by the passage of this bill, I thought in the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I think now, that the bill ought not to be passed. I sympathize very much with that portion of the people of Alexandria who desire to fall again under the jurisdiction of Congress, for the reason that I suppose those who desire to return are very generally Union men, and they do not wish to rest longer under the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia. If I thought that by any act of mine, if it was a mere act of expediency or of policy in my mind, that I could relieve them from their difficulties, there is no Senator who would go further than myself to do it; but I cannot consent to complicate the difficulties now surrounding the question and which may be settled by a simple adjudication of the Supreme Court, by passing this bill, because we can do nothing that will relieve us of the difficulty without the consent of the Legislature of Virginia. That is to say, if this was a constitutional transfer of this territory to the State of Virginia, we cannot get it back without the consent of that State, of course; and the passage of an act of Congress for that purpose without obtaining the legislative consent of that State will accomplish nothing, but will leave us just where we were before. But suppose that the act of retrocession was an unconstitutional act; then it is the easiest matter in the world for one of the citizens of Alexandria to test it and get a decision to that effect. If a case is brought up here, and the Supreme Court decides against the view of Congress, what shall we have done by this legislation? We shall have the levy commissioners of the District of Columbia levying a tax upon these people, one half of the people resisting the levy commissioners, and the State of Virginia also levying a tax upon them, and the other half perhaps resisting the State of Virginia. We shall have merely complicated the difficulty. It is an easy matter to settle it otherwise, by the proper tribunal.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, it is exactly twenty years and one day since the cession of that portion of the District to Virginia took effect, and during the whole of that time it has been just as easy for any individual or combination of individuals to bring this legal question to a proper test as it is to-day or will be after this bill shall have become a law. What have the people of the District been doing during the past twenty years that they have not instituted a suit in some form and obtained a decision of the Supreme Court upon this very important question? I do not see that the reasons urged by the honorable Senator from Missouri for abstaining from the passage of this bill with a view to get a decision of the Supreme Court have more weight at this time than similar reasons have had during the last twenty years. We have as yet no decision on the subject; and I think, sir, if there be any real ground for such a judicial inquiry we should be more likely to bring it before the proper court by the passage of this bill than by abstaining from its passage.

For my own part, as I remarked a few days ago, I entertain no doubt about the unconstitutionality of the act of 1846, commonly known as the retrocession act. I do not believe it was competent for Congress to make that retrocession, because by the Constitution itself, when the United States acquired this District, they acquired it for a particular purpose; and that purpose was, that it should be used by the Government as the seat of Government, and as the permanent seat of Government. It has always been so regarded and so treated in our legislation and by our supreme tribunals. The United States, therefore, as a nation, as a Government, having received the District in trust to use it as the seat of Government, are not only bound in law, in my judgment, but bound upon every principle of honor and equity so to continue to use it as the seat of Government until the people of the United States in constitutional form, shall have relieved us from that obligation.

One word right here respecting the removal of the capital—an event which, perhaps, may be anticipated in the distant future as population shall become more dense and interests more weighty in the western or central parts of the continent. I have this to say, that, construing the Constitution as I do, I do not see where the power is at present in the Constitution to remove the seat of Government; and, that if it shall be removed, in my judgment the removal must be necessarily effected by an alteration of the Constitution giving to Congress that power. The Constitution declares that Congress shall have power, among other things—

"To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district, not exceeding ten miles square, as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States."

The language plainly implies a trust and confidence on the part of the ceding States as well as on the part of Congress that the tract ceded shall be held and used by the United States as the permanent seat of Government. The reasons for it were very strong at that time, and we have seen during the last few years that they have been equally strong at this period.

Sir, I look upon the act of retrocession as unauthorized by the Constitution and therefore totally void; and I look upon it in another light, as having been one of the initiatory steps in bringing about the civil war from which we have recently emerged. It was undoubtedly the purpose of the original schemers that introduced the bill to retrocede a part of the District to use it for military purposes whenever the proper occasion should present itself and as a means of attacking and destroying the Government; and we know quite well the inconveniences under which the authorities at Washington labored on the breaking out of the war in consequence of the possession of the right shore of the Potomac here by the State of Virginia. I think the time has come for us to resume the proper jurisdiction of Congress over this retroceded tract. It possibly may produce some confusion in the private affairs of individuals in that part of the District; but I do not see now how a court acting upon private interests could fail to recognize the authority of the government existing there de facto whether it was that of Virginia or some other government. I hardly think a court would undertake to assume in a matter between private persons, that proper jurisdiction of that portion of the District was not in Virginia. They would be very likely to recognize the authority of the government de facto in all matters pertaining to individual rights. At all events we have no space enough without that small tract upon the right bank of the Potomac for our seat of Government. It was wisely and properly arranged by the fathers; it received the sanction of General Washington, than whom, I suppose, no better judge of the necessity of such a seat of Government and of the particular extent needed for it has ever lived; and I shall with the utmost cheerfulness vote for the passage of this bill to resume the jurisdiction of the Government over that tract.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not aware, Mr. President, until a few days since the Senator from Ohio brought up this bill for consideration, that the subject-matter was pending before Congress. The statement then made attracted my attention and interested me, and since then I have given the question a little attention. I am satisfied, myself, that the act of 1846 was void, and I am inclined to vote for this bill. It is quite probable that it will result in litigation; but I believe that the best way to get along with this question, attended with some embarrassment and difficulty obviously, will be to pass this bill, assert our jurisdiction over the whole territory, and let the question arise as it may and be settled by the courts. I believe, myself, that Congress has no power to cede any part of this District to the States to whom it originally belonged. The provision of the Constitution is that Congress may accept from the States the cession of a district of ten miles square; and then it is provided that Congress, having accepted that cession, shall have exclusive legislation over the District, the exclusive right to legislate for the District. I find nothing in that provision which satisfies me that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to authorize Congress to cede away the territory which they were thus authorized to accept. I believe that Congress has no power to part with the territory composing the District of Columbia. I think it was the object of the framers of the Constitution to establish a permanent seat of Government, and I do not believe it can be changed. I disagree, therefore, with the Senator from Missouri. I do not believe Congress has the power to change the seat of Government; I believe it can only be done by an amendment of the Constitution. I think that was the object of the framers.

But whether that is so or not, conceding that Congress has the power to cede away the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia, or any part of its territory, Congress has not done it. It is true Congress passed a bill called an act to retrocede to the State of Virginia a portion of the District of Columbia, but it is not a law. The legislative power of the United States is vested in Congress. Congress must exercise it. Congress cannot delegate the right to legislate to the people of the District, or to any other body of men. It has no constitutional right to delegate the legislative power. It attempted to do it in this case. Look at this act of 1846. No man can tell by reading it whether it is a law or not. It is supposed we can ascertain what the law of the land is by looking at the statute. Here is this act; no man can tell whether it is a law or not. Congress itself did not know after it had adjourned whether it was a law or not. Why? Because it was to be a law if the people of the county of Alexandria voted that it should be a law, and if they voted against it then it was to be no law; and no man by reading the statute now can tell whether it is a law or not. I cannot tell, by anything I find in the statute-book, whether it is a law or not. That is no legislation. Such a proceeding as that is void, utterly void. The act says, on its face, that it shall not be a law if the people do not sanction it, and it shall be valid if a majority of the people do sanction it. That is no legislation at all. It is no exercise of the constitutional power of Congress to make laws for the country. I am therefore in favor of repealing that act, wiping it out, getting it out of the way, asserting jurisdiction over the whole District of Columbia, and letting the legal question arise as it may and be settled finally by the courts.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was a member of the Senate when the act of 1846 was passed; and the question was then stated as it is now stated by the honorable member from New York, whether Congress had the authority to part with any portion of the territory that had been acquired for the seat of Government. I thought then (and I have never seen any reason to change that opinion) that the power is a very clear one. The provision of the Constitution is not that the seat of Government is to consist of ten miles square of territory. It may be one square mile or less. It cannot exceed ten miles square. The provision is that Congress is "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may by cession of particular States" be conveyed to the United States for that purpose. It is clear, then, that when the ten miles square were obtained originally we might have obtained less. We could then have acquired just what we have now in fact—only so much of the ten miles square as lies this side of the Potomac. And it would seem to be singular that while Congress were at liberty to acquire only what the United States now have, they should put it out of their power to have only what they want, because in the exercise of the power they had got the ten miles square; that is to say, to me it would seem singular that under an authority to buy ten miles square, if it was once purchased, although the authority would have authorized the purchase of less than ten miles square, we should be compelled during all time to keep the ten miles square. What for? Only because it is the seat of Government; but parting with any portion of the ten miles square does not part with the seat of Government.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question here?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask him whether, according to his course of reasoning, it would not be perfectly in the power of this Congress to cede the rest of the District to the State of Maryland, and leave ourselves without a capital at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt about it, because I have no doubt that Congress can change the capital.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Simply cede it, leaving us without a capital.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is another matter.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not?

Mr. JOHNSON. You must have a seat of Government; and if the honorable member will admit that we can change the seat of Government—I do not understand by his question that he doubts that—why is it not within our power?

Mr. FESSENDEN. So far as the constitutional question is concerned, can we cede it to-day and trust to luck to get another capital afterward?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not the question before the Senate. I suppose we had a Government before the cession was obtained—I forget now how long it was after the Constitution was adopted before the territory was acquired—and during the whole of that time I imagine we had a Government. There is no authority in the Constitution to procure a seat of Government at all except with the assent of the States; and if the honorable member supposes that the absence of a seat of Government is to put an end to the Government, then we had no Government during the interval that elapsed from the adoption of the Constitution up to the period of this acquisition; and to that result I am sure he will not come.

This power, as I was going on to say when interrupted by my friend from Maine, is given solely for the purpose of vesting in Congress the exclusive authority to legislate, and nothing else. It is a continuing power that may be exercised at any time that Congress may think proper to exercise it, if it can; and if, therefore, Congress at any time hereafter shall think proper to change the seat of Government, they may, with the consent of the States in the locality which they may select, procure a place for the seat of Government. Now, suppose that is done; are they compelled then to continue the owners of these ten miles square? The very object of their becoming the owners will then have terminated. The purpose of making them the exclusive owners of the property was to give them the exclusive authority to legislate, and nothing else. It was to protect the legislative and executive departments of the Government of the United States from the possible failure to perform their duty by the States in which they might be sitting, to make this Government capable of defending itself by any means that it thought proper; and the sole purpose, therefore, was to clothe Congress with the authority of exclusive legislation. It had nothing in the world to do with any particular territory, except the particular territory that Congress might hold from time to time as the seat of Government and have acquired under the authority of the Constitution.

Again, my friend from New York tells us that, once acquired, we must continue to hold it; we cannot get rid of it. He denies, therefore, the authority to change the seat of Government at any time without a change of the Constitution, and he supposes that to be the case because the power conferred is a power to exercise exclusive legislation over the ten miles square or any portion less than the ten miles square that Congress may occupy. Does not the honorable member see that if his argument is sound it really applies to all the other territory which Congress may acquire under the same provision of the Constitution? It says they are "to exercise exclusive legislation." That was the thing the Convention had in view, to protect the rights of the Government, to maintain its safety, "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings."

We have from time to time purchased with the assent of the States portions of territory for the purposes mentioned in the provision which I have just read. Does the honorable member mean to say that if we cease to want those places for forts, arsenals, or dock-yards we cannot abandon them and surrender them to the States? I should think not; and yet in one sense the title acquired in such portions of territory is a title acquired under the Constitution.

But the error of my friend's argument, if he be in error, as I think he is, is in confounding the object of the provision with what he supposes to have been its purpose. The object of the provision was solely to enable the Government to acquire territory for the purposes therein mentioned, not to compel them to hold it after they had acquired it. If they acquired it for a fort or an arsenal, and afterward it was discovered that it was not suited for either, or that the exigency which had rendered it necessary in the first instance was terminated, it should certainly be in the power of the Government to cede it back; and as the language with reference to forts and arsenals is identical with that which is used with reference to the ten miles square, why is it that it is not in the power of Congress to cede the whole or a part of it back when Congress becomes satisfied that it is necessary no longer to keep the whole or a part of it? I never heard it questioned. The only doubt that has ever arisen—and, as I understand them, that is the ground stated by my friend from Michigan and my friend from New York—is because this particular territory is to be used for the seat of Government. That is true. You cannot abandon it and keep it for the seat of Government without failing to accomplish what the Constitution intended to accomplish, which was that the seat of Government should be under the exclusive legislation of Congress. But if you can part with territory acquired under the same clause for either of the other purposes mentioned in the clause, I ask my honorable friend from Michigan upon what logical ground he can deny to Congress the right to get clear of this as well as any other territory acquired under that clause.

The suggestion of my friend from Michigan that the act of 1846 was the beginning of the rebellion is only the result of a teeming fancy. He has hated the rebellion so keenly, and has viewed it—so properly—with such abhorrence, that it raises itself up in his imagination upon almost every occasion. Now, let me say to the honorable member that in 1846, when that law was passed, there was no man, woman, or child in the United States who dreamed that such a rebellion was contemplated by any one. Certainly, as far as I know, and I had some reason to know, the suggestion fell from the lips of no one that it was intended to accelerate in any way the bringing about of such a rebellion, or that it could have a tendency to accelerate such a rebellion.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the honorable member allow me to ask him if he is able to give the date of the somewhat celebrated letter of Mr. Calhoun in which he called upon his friends to fire the southern heart? I do not recollect the precise date of it, but I think it was about that time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Nor do I remember its date; but that friend who was so anxious to "fire the southern heart" was enabled to do it in a great measure because of northern legislation.

Mr. HOWARD. I was only asking for the date of the letter.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know what the date of the letter was. He found he could not fire the southern heart at that time; but certainly there was no man here in the councils of the nation, as far as I am advised, who dreamed that the southern heart could be capable of being fired to such an act of folly, to say nothing of it as an act of criminality.

Mr. HOWARD. I think it was about the time we acquired Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON. But at that time, for there was nobody interested in this but Virginia, let me say to my friend what may have escaped him, perhaps, that there was no State in the Union more violently opposed to the course of South Carolina than the State of Virginia. I do not believe there was a single man in the State who ever dreamed that she could be brought into the condition of following, even if it was indicated at that time, the course which South Carolina subsequently pursued.

How is that to defend us, either? Is it possible that our protection against rebellion is to depend upon whether we hold six miles square or ten miles square; whether we have the command of both sides of the Potomac for a limited distance? The United States, as has been demonstrated, possess a power that is not to be limited by lines of that description, and that can in no measure be increased or diminished by territorial limits to the seat of Government of the United States.

There is another reason that renders it, I think, unnecessary to pass this bill, and that was stated by my friend from Missouri. If the act of 1846 was unconstitutional, it is void clearly, and will be so decided. If it is constitutional, we cannot in any way affect it or impair it. That is a judicial question, and the decision of that question the one way or the other depends in no manner whatever upon the vote of the Senate on this bill. If the transfer was properly made, it is an act executed which it is now beyond the power of the Government to open except with the assent of the other party.

A word now in answer to a suggestion of my friend from New York, and I shall have done. He seems to suppose that the act of 1846 was not an act of legislation. Why not? Because its effect was to depend upon the vote of the people of Alexandria. That is done in every State in the Union. Laws, general as well as local, are made to depend upon the vote of the locality or of the State where the laws may be passed. Mr. Adams, hating slavery as much as any man could upon principle, born with principles inconsistent with such a condition of man, always maintained (incorrectly as I think, but not because there was anything wrong in the course which he recommended) that Congress should not, and he even went so far as to say that it could not, but he was still more positive in affirming that it should not, abolish slavery in the District without the consent of the people of the District. Can anybody doubt that a law of that description would have been valid if passed in that form? And yet what difference is there between a law of that kind and the law in question, ceding back to Virginia, with her consent and the consent of the people to be affected by it, that portion of the ten miles square which was originally ceded by Virginia to the United States?

I submit, therefore, that it is unnecessary, looking to the object to be accomplished, to pass the bill; that the act of retrocession was constitutionally passed, and that there is nothing in the objection that the validity of that act was made to depend upon the votes of the people who were to be affected by it.

Mr. STEWART. I am compelled to differ from the Senator from Maryland upon the question of law which he last discussed, and to concur fully with the Senator from New York. I think if there is anything well settled—I have had several occasions to examine it—it is that a legislative body clothed with the authority to make laws has not the power to delegate that authority. The Constitution has vested the legislative power in Congress, and has given Congress no authority to delegate that power. The question has arisen in many of the States and has been thoroughly considered, and the decisions are uniform. It arose in California some ten years ago, where an act was passed making the location of several county seats dependent upon a vote of the people. It was held that the act of the Legislature was void, that it had no authority to delegate its power of legislation. I have a case before me where the same question was decided in New York, and I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to this case, in which the law is stated very clearly. It is the case of Barto vs. Himrod, 4 Selden's Reports, page 483. I will read the syllabus:

"The act establishing free schools throughout the State was unconstitutional and void, for the reason that the fact of its being a law was made to depend upon the result of a popular vote.

"Laws must be enacted by the legislative bodies to whom the legislative power is committed by the constitution. They cannot divest themselves of the responsibility of their enactment by a reference of the question of their passage to their constituents."

The syllabus states the case very well, and in the opinion of the court several decisions to the same effect are cited. In examining the question on a former occasion I found that laws had been passed in many of the States submitting different propositions to the people, and they had been, I think, uniformly held by the courts to be unconstitutional and void. A very obvious reason is that if such a practice is allowed it becomes impossible for the people to know after a lapse of time what the law is, it existing in parol and not in the statute-book. Then it is delegating to an irresponsible body the power of legislation.

I have no doubt upon that consideration, if there were no other, that this act of retrocession is absolutely void, that the retrocession of that portion of the District was not in fact made even if Congress had the power to make it. Although Congress may not have had the power to cede away a portion of the District, still the existence of this act leaves us in confusion; the courts are embarrassed; the question is a disturbing one. Courts always hesitate before they undertake to declare a law unconstitutional, particularly where it refers to territorial jurisdiction. They are much inclined to follow the legislative department; and I think it important that the legislative department should declare itself clearly upon this question and resume jurisdiction, and there is no doubt that the courts will follow it, and that will end the whole controversy in a short time. If it is left to a long course of loose litigation, in which no party is specially interested, if it is left to individuals to contest it when it is the duty of Congress to legislate directly, great evils may ensue. I believe this bill is a good one and should pass.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from New York and the Senator from Nevada seem to rely entirely upon the ground that the act of retrocession was made conditional upon a vote of the people in that part of the District retroceded to Virginia. I apprehend that, notwithstanding some of the State courts have declared that legislation submitted to the people by the State Legislatures and made conditional upon a vote of the people is unconstitutional, they have always done so under the peculiar provisions of the constitution of their State. I apprehend that those learned Senators will not undertake to say that Congress cannot pass any act which is made conditional upon some subsequent act of the people. I fear that if that is the case my State, which I had fondly supposed was in the Union since 1821, is not in at all, and that it is within the proper power of any court now to declare that Missouri is not in the Union. It will be recollected that in 1820 the constitution of the State of Missouri was adopted and Congress objected to one of its provisions. The constitution was submitted here, and it was made necessary before the State could be admitted that the people of the State or their authorities should repeal a certain provision of their constitution, and when that was done the State was to be admitted upon the proclamation of the President. The act which was passed for the admission of the State of Missouri, March 2, 1821, provided:

"That Missouri shall be admitted into this Union on an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever, upon the fundamental condition that the fourth clause of the twenty-sixth section of the third article of the constitution submitted on the part of said State to Congress shall never be construed to authorize the passage of any law, and that no law shall be passed in conformity thereto, by which any citizen of either of the States in this Union shall be excluded from the enjoyment of any of the privileges and immunities to which such citizen is entitled under the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That the Legislature of the said State, by a solemn public act, shall declare the assent of the said State to the said fundamental condition, and shall transmit to the President of the United States, on or before the fourth Monday in November next, an authentic copy of the said act; upon receipt whereof the President, by proclamation, shall announce the fact; whereupon, and without any further proceeding on the part of Congress, the admission of the said State into this Union shall be considered as complete."

There was a condition-precedent, a public act of the State of Missouri, and the thing to make it final and complete was the proclamation of the President. It will be remembered that two years ago Colorado was, by an act of Congress, to be admitted upon the condition-precedent that a majority of her people voted for it, and the President's proclamation announcing that fact was ipso facto to operate as an admission of Colorado as a State. Senators have had it up here and have discussed it during this session of Congress. The whole question has been discussed and rediscussed here. It will be seen, therefore, that the doctrine laid down by the learned Senators, as deduced from the decision of the court of appeals of the State of New York, will not hold good so far as the legislation of Congress is concerned. Why, Mr. President, States again and again have been admitted upon the condition that their people, a majority of the people of the Territory, should vote in favor of the proposition and the President so proclaimed the fact.

How was it in regard to the vote of Alexandria? The act of 1846 provided that the question should be submitted to the people of Alexandria. I read from the fourth section of the act:

"That this act shall not be in force until after the assent of the people of the county and town of Alexandria shall be given to it in the mode hereinafter provided."

Provision is made for an election to be held, and it is declared:

"If a majority of the votes so given shall be cast against accepting the provisions of this act, then it shall be void and of no effect; but if a majority of the said votes should be in favor of accepting the provisions of this act, then this act shall be in full force, and it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to inform the Governor of Virginia that this act is in full force and effect, and to make proclamation of the fact."

Congress provided its own commissioners to take the vote, and one copy of it was to be filed with the President of the United States, one with the Governor of Virginia, and the other to be filed in the clerk's office of the county court of Alexandria. When that was done, and the fact was proclaimed by the President, then, of course, Alexandria passed under the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia.

Now, there is no difference between that legislation and the legislation in regard to the admission of any State into the Union—not one particle of difference between that and the legislation in regard to Colorado. The President was to proclaim that a majority of the people of Colorado had voted for the admission, and upon the proclamation of the President the State was to enter the Union. It was legislation of Congress, dependent in the one case upon the action of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, and in the other dependent upon the vote of the people of Colorado. Now, there can be no question that legislation of this sort has been sanctioned again and again. I might instance other Territories and other legislation, but it is useless so to do.

Now, in reference to this matter, it strikes me as being the most astonishing proposition in the world that Congress has no power to change the seat of Government. I think the fallacy of that proposition has been demonstrated beyond any doubt by the Senator from Maryland. If, as he very justly says, Congress cannot relinquish its jurisdiction over any part of the District of Columbia, when that jurisdiction has once attached, it is also an utter impossibility for Congress to relinquish its jurisdiction over any of the forts, arsenals, or dock-yards of the United States, because the authority is identical and given in the same provision of the Constitution. Hence the argument of the able and distinguished Senator from New York falls to the ground. There certainly cannot be force in it, because the authority is identical in the two cases, and Congress has again and again yielded its jurisdiction to the States from which it acquired tracts of land for military purposes.

Mr. President, the very object of acquiring the seat of Government was that we should have room for the capital and public buildings. It is clearly within the jurisdiction of Congress any time to change the capital of the United States. It may be changed to Cincinnati; it may be changed to Detroit; it may be changed to Boston; it may be removed to any other city in the Union. I cannot doubt it. It may be asked, if the capital should be removed, what becomes of the people of the District? Does not the very same law apply that would apply in the case of a dedication by an individual to public uses? The State of Maryland and the State of Virginia ceded the District to the Government of the United States for certain purposes. If gentlemen are curious to look at the legislation of those States in 1789 and 1790, they would find that the cessions of Virginia and Maryland were made for a specific purpose, and that was for a seat of Government.

Now, suppose that Congress within its discretion shall remove the seat of Government, what results as a matter of course? Suppose this transfer had never been made, of course, naturally, without any legislation, the jurisdiction of the respective portions given by Maryland and Virginia would fall back to those respective States. Suppose that a party laying out a town dedicates to certain public uses a portion of the ground specified upon the plat, and the city afterward ceases to use that particular portion in the manner indicated upon the plat, have not the courts all over the country decided again and again that the soil reverts back to the original grantor? And so it is with this District. I apprehend that if Congress removed the seat of Government it would revert back, the respective portions, to the States that gave it. I cannot look at it in any other light. Hence it is that owing to the fact that I honestly think we shall complicate the difficulties now presented by the passage of this act, I have opposed it. If the act of 1846 be unconstitutional on account of the vote of the people that can be tested, and I cannot see that the passage of this bill will enable a man to test it any better than he could without. Hence I must vote against the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I cannot see the point of the illustration made by the Senator from Missouri. He says that Congress may delegate its authority to legislate for the reason that it admits a State upon condition that that State will perform some particular act. Let me remind him that the admission of a State into this Union is not a matter wholly within the power of Congress; it requires the concurrent action of the State and of Congress, and their respective acts are dependent upon each other. It is not within the power of the legislation of Congress to make States and bring them into the Union without the action of the States. But it is within the power of Congress to pass laws without asking a little squad of people to sanction those laws. There is no parallel whatever between the cases. Because we admit States and negotiate with States to bring them into the Union, requiring them to do certain things before they shall have a voice here, it does not follow that we may make our laws dependent upon the action of the people of a particular locality. A State has a right to be heard upon the question whether it will come into the Union. You cannot bring a State into the Union merely by your legislation. But where a matter is within the scope of legislation it is the duty of Congress to legislate, and not ask a little squad of voters to legislate for it. There is not a case in all the books in which such legislation has not been held to be invalid; no, I will not say that, because in the first instance, some of the inferior courts were disposed to respect such acts, but I believe it has become universal now in the highest courts of all the States, where the question has come up, to hold that the legislative authority cannot be delegated; and I say that the case of the admission of a State upon complying with its part of the conditions proposed, concurrent action being required, is not analogous.

The act in question here does not deal with a sovereign State; it deals with the people living along the other side of the Potomac for a few miles, and asks them to vote upon the question of whether it shall be a law or not; refers it to them. Where is the record of your law? How are the rights of persons and property to be determined hereafter, hundreds of years hence, if the Government shall continue that long, when you have no record evidence of your law? Laws so framed have not been held to be constitutional in the States. No precedent that is worthy of consideration can be found in favor of such a law. It shows very conclusively that there is no precedent in point when the Senator from Missouri is forced to illustrate his view of the case by a reference to our dealings with sovereign States.

Mr. POMEROY. Allow me to say that there are some precedents against it.

Mr. STEWART. Plenty of them.

Mr. POMEROY. I remember once to have been a member of a Legislature which passed what was called a Maine liquor law, but it was submitted to the people to say whether it should become a law or not, and the people voted by a majority that it should become a law. The courts held that act to be unconstitutional because it allowed the people to legislate; it delegated the power of legislation to the people, who were no part of the Legislature, who could not as a people be a part of the Legislature.

Mr. STEWART. I apprehend there is no point of law better settled than that question.

Mr. POMEROY. The case to which I allude was decided in the State of New York.

Mr. STEWART. It has been decided in very many of the States. I had occasion to look up the authorities, and I found that many of the western States had submitted questions of the location of county seats and the like to the people; but in all the books I never saw a citation of the fact that Congress had admitted States upon conditions as proof that the people had a right to legislate.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not come to a conclusion on this subject without a due consideration of its importance. When the framers of our Constitution and the old statesmen of that day deliberated on any matter and came to a deliberate conclusion, we have generally found when we have undertaken to depart from what they laid down that their reasoning was better than ours.

Sir, if at the period when this capital was located there was anything that engrossed the attention of the statesmen of that day more than this subject I should like to know what it was. Previously the seat of Government was locomotive; it had sometimes been in one city, sometimes another; and it depended very much upon the temper and disposition of the States in which it happened to be located whether it could find a comfortable residence there or not. As I stated when I was up the other day, this was a great question, agitating the whole Union, North, South, East, and West. As everybody knows, when you undertake to locate even a county seat, or a State capital, and, much more, the capital of the United States, it is always a very agitating question, and one about which local interests compete with more avidity than upon almost any other question that we can imagine. The same great difficulty arose here. The statesmen of that day were fully impressed with the idea that there must be a permanent location of the seat of Government. It was claimed in various States and in various situations. It was exceedingly desirable by any State that the seat of this great Government should be located within its limits; and hence the competition on the question, which was the most solemn and the most agitating of anything that had arisen in the Government up to that time, and as much so as almost any question that has succeeded it until this day.

I do not know how they would have located it had it not been for another subject that was up at that time and was almost as much debated as that, and which elicited almost as much interest as that, and that was the great question whether the debts of the revolutionary war should be funded or should not be funded. The southern States contended that they should not be funded, and that the Government should rather be dissolved than that they should be funded; and the northern States contended as strenuously that the seat of Government should not be brought as far south as the banks of the Potomac. The Congressmen of that day separated upon that subject, and a dissolution seemed inevitable. The great statesmen of the time, the head patriots of Congress at the period got together, and conceiving that a compromise might be made upon these great questions, undertook to make a compromise, and they did effect it after great difficulty. The South agreed that the debt might be funded and made a general burden upon the Federal Government, and, in consideration of that, the North conceded that the capital might come here. Thus it was located upon one of the most solemn compromises that had ever been made. Whenever there has been an endeavor in Congress to remove the capital, as the history of the legislation of Congress will show, it has been claimed at all times by those who were in favor of continuing the location here, that if the proposed removal was not unconstitutional, it was a violent breach of faith to attempt it; and so it would have been, because it was upon this compromise that it was located here.

It is not less important in our estimation. What have we done this very day, in the bill which preceded the one now before the Senate? Why, sir, the laying out of millions upon this Capitol, after expending immense sums of money here, shows that it is the intent of the statesmen of this day to make this the permanent seat of Government. If it is not so, what means the vote that you have just taken about enlarging the grounds of the Capitol at an untold expense? Expense forms no consideration in the minds of men as they go forth to embellish this Capitol, which is an honor to the nation, the architecture of which, as I am told, rivals that of the best edifices in the whole world, and is not exceeded by any of them; and to-day you have voted to extend the grounds around it. And yet, sir, you are going to leave it so that a partisan Legislature, in times of great civil commotion, may, by a vote taken in a moment, mutilate and destroy the symmetry of the whole. Will you permit that to be done?

I brand this act of 1846 as being only a preliminary step to that rebellion that took place afterward. Who got it up? It was the head men of the secession that afterward levied war against the Government. They could do nothing more to promote the cause of the rebellion than to cede back to Virginia that territory that she gave up for this capital. It rendered you less capable of defense. Why did the fathers in locating the seat of Government here make it ten miles square? Have you ever thought of that? This very city is large enough for all the purposes of legislation. We should find no inconvenience in a legislative capacity even in this city, circumscribed in one mile square. The fathers knew as well as you did that your capital might be built as magnificent as you pleased upon a mile square, and that all your public buildings to carry on the business of this great Government might be located upon such a tract. But, sir, they had encountered difficulties in the States where the capital had been located; they had found that the States interfered with the freedom of their deliberations; they had threatened to drive them out frequently and to interfere with their legislation; and when they came to deliberate upon the question of a permanent seat of Government, with General Washington at their head, who had conducted your armies successfully through the terrible war of the Revolution, they knew full well that it was necessary that you should have room and verge enough to defend the deliberations of Congress against the interference of any local legislatures whatever; and therefore it was that they said, "Let it be ten miles square, that we may be entirely independent; that the Federal Government shall meet with no interference in behalf of States or anything else; anything less than that will open it to the interference of other tribunals and legislatures; we must be independent."

Sir, how profound, almost prophetic, was that wisdom! What disadvantages did we not suffer when this war broke out on account of this retrocession, under which the enemies of the Government could have planted their cannon upon their soil to batter down your Capitol! That retrocession brought this District and this great Capitol that you have erected at so much expense right under the guns of the enemy. What did we dread more than anything else? That old Virginia would fortify the heights on the opposite side of the Potomac and plant her cannon there upon her own soil to batter down the Capitol and to lay your capital city in ashes. Contemplating such a contingency, General Washington said, "The permanent seat of Government shall be ten miles square, and the capital erected in the center of that, will have the means of defending itself against all local legislatures and all interference from every quarter." Was it not a righteous foresight? Would you suffer that wisdom to be trampled under foot by the politicians in modern times and in times of great turmoil, and when men were preparing for civil war to overthrow your capital and your Government itself? It was under such contemplations that this act of 1846 was passed, and passed by the very men that sought the first opportunity to go out of the Union, as they said, and make war upon your Constitution itself. Mr. Hunter was the great mover in this business. He and the secession politicians of old Virginia, contemplating in their hearts the destruction of your Government, first of all sought to undo the work of General Washington, the man who did honor to that State. They must mutilate his counsels, destroy what he had done, destroy the foresight of that great patriot and trample it under foot, in order to be able to bring their guns to bear on your capital; and they did it by an act entirely unconstitutional. Does anybody doubt that? I was exceedingly pleased to hear the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. DAVIS,] who was here and took part against this mutilation, say, with all the temptations that party can heap upon his head, that he viewed the act of retrocession as unconstitutional then, and he views it in the same light now. He voted against the act in 1846, and if he votes the other way now it is not that he has the least doubt that the act of mutilation was utterly void.

Now, Mr. President, to show how this subject was viewed by the great patriots of the day when this capital was fixed permanently in this District, I wish to read a short extract from the speech of the President of the United States on the opening of Congress in 1800. I have here also the proclamation of General Washington fixing the capital at this place, showing the great pains and the minuteness with which he went forward in anticipation of all the evils that might fall upon the country hereafter to point out and fix its boundaries with that care and that prudence that characterized him everywhere, and in all he did. I will read the congratulations of the President at that day when this capital was fixed here to show you the great achievement they supposed they had worked out when they had fixed it permanently here. On the 22d of November, 1800, the President of the United States, Mr. John Adams, in his speech at the opening of Congress, said:
